Literary Societies.—There are two regular Literary Societies connected with the institution. These are of great utility to young men requiring a liberal education—improving them in the art of public speaking, making them in some degree familiar with the proceedings of deliberative bodies, and in cultivating systematic business habits. Each Society has a convenient hall and a well-selected Library—about one thousand six hundred volumes each, which, added to the College Library of two thousand volumes, makes over five thousand volumes in the college.

Buildings.—The Trustees are determined to continue the repairs on the buildings till completed. The grand Center Building is a noble specimen of architectural beauty and adaptation to the purposes of its erection. The wings, built of solid brick, present each a front of two hundred feet, with upper and lower galleries the entire length, supported by Tuscan columns, and with the center making in the perspective a continuous front of seven hundred feet.

Preparatory Department.—In the Preparatory Department students are fitted for regular college classes, or may obtain a thorough English or commercial education.

The Faculty.—Its Faculty are men of experience and success in teaching.

THE LARGEST BRIDGE IN THE WORLD.—The bridge to be constructed over the Firth of Forth will be by far the largest in the world. According to the London Builder its height will be 150 feet, and the number of spans nearly 100. The smaller spans will be 150 feet wide, which is beyond the average width of the largest spans in ordinary bridges; but the crowning marvel of the whole structure is the great span in the center, which is to be 1,500 feet, or nearly one-third of a mile in width—an extent unparalleled in any existing structure of the kind. The entire cost of the bridge will be at least $10,000,000.

AT LAST it seems likely that we are to have a powerful telescope mounted where such an instrument ought to be placed. James Lick, Esq., the San Francisco millionaire and patron of science, offers to furnish the funds needed to establish a first-class observatory of astronomical physics upon some suitable point on the Sierra Nevada, at an elevation of at least ten thousand feet above the sea. Negotiations have been commenced with reference to the instruments, but as yet have not taken a shape sufficiently definite to warrant publication. It is intended, however, by those who have the matter in charge "to push things." Of course the building of a suitable telescope must be the work of many months—even years, perhaps; but it is to be expected from California enterprise that with the fair start now secured our Western friends will maintain their lead of the rest of the world. The British astronomers are moving for a similar observatory on some of the Indian mountains, but we trust they will not be able to get ahead of our people. A rich harvest of astronomical discoveries surely awaits those who first enter the field.

WHAT BECOMES OF THEM?—The Turf, Field and Farm asks the question: "What becomes of the east antlers of a deer?" In reply, the "field editor" of that paper continues: Among the many questions interesting alike to the sportsman and the naturalist is that which heads this article. The field-editor of the Turf, Field and Farm is in possession of some facts which may tend to throw some light upon this obscure subject. Hunting one day on the edge of a canebrake on Choctaw bayou, in Vidalia parish, Louisiana, he seated himself on the trunk of a fallen cypress to watch the coming of a bear which the dogs had roused from his lair, and which in the course of the chase was expected to pass that way. While thus engaged he observed, at a distance of forty or fifty paces, an unusual vibratory motion in a palmetto leaf. Upon approaching cautiously, to ascertain the cause, he found a large seven-tine antler of a deer (cervus virginianus) in contact with the stem of the leaf, and which was kept in a constant rocking motion by a swarm of small field mice, twenty or more in number, which were gnawing away at the horn as ravenously as so many hungry pigs. Without disturbing the little fellows at their repast, he returned to the spot the next day, when the antler, probably as large and certainly much heavier than the united bulk of two hundred such mice, had entirely disappeared. In that part of Louisiana deer are exceedingly numerous, and yet their horns, sized as they are annually in great numbers, are rarely to be found. Like the wicked bishop in the Rhenish legend, they are devoured by mice. Hanging up in the office of the Turf, Field and Farm is a noble pair of antlers from a Missouri elk, which is scarred in many places by the gnawing of rodents. The writer, conversing with the late general Sam Houston, of Texas, about the battle of San Jacinto, where seven hundred dead Mexicans were left unburied, observed that the coyotes must have held high carnival. "No," replied the general, "the Mexicans eat so much Chili colorado (Cayenne pepper) that neither vulture nor wolf will touch their remains." "Then," we remarked, "the plain must be white with their bleaching bones." "No," said the general; "within three years the cattle had eaten them all." It has been conjectured that the propensity in cattle and other ruminants to eat bones is due to a deficiency of phosphates in the soil upon which they graze, and the fact is patent that grazing lands in the great cheese-producing shires of England are greatly improved by a dressing of ground bones, and bone-dust is fed with good results to cattle.

Total	6,538

On Saturday the demand was fair, but operations were restricted by the moderate extent of the offerings, notwithstanding which about 700 bales changed hands during the morning, and 800 subsequently, making an aggregate of 1,500 bales. The sales included low middling at 14⅝@14¾c., and strict at 14⅝@14¾c. On Monday the movement was again checked by scant supplies, and, although the demand was fair, the sales were confined to 1,250 bales, while prices were without any quotable variation, except for the higher grades. Low middling sold at 14¾c., low middling to strict low middling at 14⅞c., strict low middling at 14⅞c., strict low middling to middling, with strong staple, at 14⅞c., middling at 14¾c., and good middling at 15c. On Tuesday the market opened under the favorable influence of an advance of ⅛c. in spots at New York, with an active demand and more ample supply, the sales during the morning embracing 2,000 bales at full prices, after which the movement continued lively, and the entire business summed up a little over 3,350 bales, at hardening rates, requiring a partial advance in the quotations for the medium and higher grades.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 6,61 bales, against 4,400 for the corresponding time last week and 550 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 23,995 bales, against 25,624 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 11,521 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 2,107 to France, of 64 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 6,811 to Great Britain. We quote:

Ordinary	11⅝ @ 11⅞
Strict ordinary	12⅜ @ 13
Good ordinary	13⅛ @ 13⅜
Strict good ordinary	13⅜ @ 11
Low middling	14⅜ @ 14½

THERE will be a camp meeting at the New Hope and Pleasant Ridge camp ground, on the DeKalb circuit, Meridian district, Mississippi Conference, commencing on Friday before the second Sunday in October. Ministers of the gospel are earnestly solicited to attend. They will find conveyance at Lauderdale Springs on Thursday, and will be well cared for. The people generally are expected. W. D. TISDALE.

CAMP MEETING NOTICE.—A camp meeting will be held in McComb City, commencing on Wednesday, October 14, 1874, and will continue one week. The meeting will be self-supporting, and every person will be expected to provide for their own food and lodging. We have some four or five houses within one-fourth of a mile of the ground, of five large rooms each, which can be had for a small rent for the meeting. Each suite of rooms has ample accommodations for a whole society.

Tent-poles can be had on the ground. The DeSoto House, a temperance hotel, the largest and finest hotel in the State, will furnish board and lodging for the week at $1.50 per day; board, without lodging, at $1.25 per day. Fifty cents per meal, and same for lodging, for transient customers.

No pains will be spared to make this a profitable meeting to the people of southern Mississippi.

Half-fare tickets will be furnished by the New Orleans, St. Louis and Chicago railroad, and the railroad company will send extra trains on Sabbath morning to McComb City, from the north and south, if the people on the road generally wish it. The trains leave McComb City every night going north at half-past ten, and south at eleven P. M.

We have secured the promise of several eminent clergymen to attend the meeting and give us their help. Our help is in the name of the Lord.

Further arrangements will be published when made.

If we have a good rally and success we may make a permanent arrangement for a yearly feast of tabernacles for southern Mississippi.

Ministers will be provided for by the meeting.

Any communication desiring information can be addressed to Rev. H. M. Church, McComb City, Mississippi.

DR. C. M'LANE'S

CELEBRATED

FOR THE CURE OF

LIVER COMPLAINT,

DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increase on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder-blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for a rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. M'LANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them A FAIR TRIAL.

P. S. Dealers and Physicians ordering from others than Fleming Bros. will do well to write their orders distinctly, and take none but Dr. C. M'Lane's Liver Pills, prepared by Fleming Bros., Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of base imitations. To those wishing to give them a trial, we will forward per mail, post paid, to any part of the United States; one box of Pills for twelve three-cent postage stamps, or one vial of Vermifuge for fourteen three-cent stamps. All orders from Canada must be accompanied by twenty cents extra.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 2.—The following dispatch was received at the Navy Department yesterday evening from Captain Semmes, executive officer of the Pensacola navy-yard, who is again on duty:

Commodore Woolsey is seriously sick. Lieutenant Commanders Kellogg and Barclay are seriously ill. Acting Assistant Surgeon Miller and Assistant Engineer McEllwell are doing well.

Assistant Engineer Landon and all the sailors and marines are convalescent.

To-day another dispatch was received from the same officer announcing the death of Commodore M. B. Woolsey, commandant of the Pensacola yard, who died of the fever this morning. The deceased had been in command of the yard about two years.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 2.—The steamship Vasco de Gama brings advices from Yokohama to September 11. The assassin of the acting German consul at Hakododi has been sentenced to death. The Mikado has expressed to the German minister his personal regrets at the occurrence. The minister notified the government that while he does not press any money compensation, he demands an imperial notification forbidding the wearing of swords within certain distances of foreign settlements.

The typhoon which visited the southern part of Japan, August 20, was one of the most severe ever known by foreigners. A Japanese steamer and the German bark Hamburg were driven ashore on the rocks at Nagasaki, the iron-clad ram Stonewall was sunk, and hundreds of Japanese junks were wrecked. Fully two hundred lives were lost at Nagasaki alone. Stores and houses were overthrown, and the Governor's new houses are a heap of ruins. Keobe also suffered. Not less than one thousand junks were wrecked. Sagokan suffered much from the typhoon. Six thousand houses were destroyed, one hundred lives lost, and a thousand cattle on the plantations were killed.

Ten thousand Chinese troops had reached Singapore en route to Formosa. When the Vasco de Gama left Yokohama there were still prevalent conflicting reports about Formosa, and it was the general opinion that war must ensue.

NEW YORK, Oct. 3.—There was great excitement in Brooklyn when it became known that Mr. Beecher had appeared before the grand jury and made complaint against Tilton and Moulton, and that indictments were found against them for malicious libel and slander. It is understood that when Beecher gave his testimony before the grand jury he was in the highest degree emphatic, and declared that "the allegations of Tilton and Moulton with reference to himself, Mrs. Tilton and another lady were atrocious falsehoods." Moulton and Tilton have both been indicted for atrocious libel. They have been formally arrested, and will give bail on Monday.

MONTGOMERY, Oct. 3.—The State executive committee of the Democratic and Conservative party of Alabama issue an address to the people of the United States denying the truth of charges made by Senator Spencer and Congressmen White, Hays and Pelham, and J. J. Martin, as to outrages in this State, and submit proofs conclusively showing the untruth of these charges, and that these charges were made for the purpose of influencing electors in the North and West, and to procure Federal troops to be sent to control the election in Alabama; that the rations donated by Congress to the sufferers in the overflowed districts of the Tombigbee, Warrior and Alabama rivers are being used as a corruption fund all over the State of Alabama for the purpose of controlling the election by the Republican party; and submitting proofs showing the corrupt character and lawlessness of the party in Alabama.

MEMPHIS, Oct. 5.—A dispatch from Corinth, Mississippi, says the municipal election there to-day was carried by the Conservatives, after a hot contest, for the first time in eight years. There was great rejoicing and bonfires to-night.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Oct. 2.—The report of the gunpowder explosion on Regent's canal this morning was heard twenty miles from the place where it occurred. The firemen have been dragging the canal all the morning, and five bodies of victims of the explosion have been recovered. Lights in the railway stations and in other buildings two miles away were extinguished by the concussion. Many persons made a narrow escape from death. A number of animals in the Zoological Gardens were killed.

2.30 P. M.—The quantity of powder that exploded on Regent's canal was four tons. The details of the occurrence show that its disastrous effects were widespread. Many trees were uprooted, and houses located twenty miles distant were shattered. Seven persons are yet missing.

There was a perfect panic here for hours, and it was not until the cause of the terrific report was learned that the fears of the people were allayed. Several persons died of fright.

RIO JANEIRO, Oct. 4.—The insurrection in the Argentine States is becoming formidable. The fleet has declared for General Mitre, the leader of the movement. Insurgent forces have assembled at Chivilivy and San Martin.

The government at Buenos Ayres is taking vigorous measures to meet the storm. The Chambers are in permanent session. The National Guard has been mobilized, and a state of siege has been proclaimed in the provinces of Buenos Ayres, Santa Fe, Entre Rios, Arrecites and Corrientes. The newspapers at Buenos Ayres have suspended publication.

LONDON, Oct. 5.—A panic exists in the Stock Exchange in South American stocks, in consequence of the insurrection in the Argentine States.

Advices from Rio Janeiro represent the situation in Buenos Ayres as very desperate. Rigorous measures are being adopted by the government to suppress the insurrection.

Bryan Warren Proctor, known as Barry Cornwall, the English author, is dead.

CAIRO, Oct. 5.—The water in the Nile is rising above the usual point reached in periodical overflows, and there are grave fears of a disastrous inundation. The government is lending its assistance to prevent damage to the country.

RIO JANEIRO, Oct. 6.—It is probable the Emperor Dom Pedro will visit the United States of North America next year.

Later advices from Buenos Ayres state that there is the greatest excitement among all classes in consequence of the insurrection. Many persons are flying from the city. Every departing steamer carries away numerous families. Merchant steamers leaving town are escorted to sea by the war ships of their respective governments, as they fear molestation by the insurgents' fleet.

LEASE OF THE AVERY ISLAND SALT MINES.—We clip the following from the Sugar-Bowl of the first instant:

We are rejoiced to be enabled to inform the public that the negotiations for the lease of the Avery Island salt mines have been happily completed, and mining operations will shortly begin. The lease, we learn, is for twenty years, at $10,000 in gold per year, with the privilege on the part of the company leasing to purchase the mines for $200,000 in gold at or before the expiration of the lease. Renewed energy will be infused into every branch of business by this enterprise, particularly as the lessees propose building a railroad from the mines to New Iberia.

From the Work.

PAULDING CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: I closed my third protracted meeting on the seventeenth instant. This meeting was held at Pleasant Hill, six miles south of Paulding. I held the meeting five days, and was assisted by Rev. H. T. Jones, of the Congregational Methodist Church. The meeting resulted in the conversion of six souls, nine received into the church, three children baptized, some backsliders reclaimed, and the church greatly revived.

J. H. HOLLAND, P. C.

PAULDING, Sept. 23, 1874.

ALEXANDRIA CIRCUIT, NORTH ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: We have just closed our seventh protracted meeting. Since Conference there have been some seventy or more conversions resulting from the labors of our church, and her membership very much revived. Our roll has been increased by seventy-seven accessions. Many of these are good and true, we think and hope. A great many penitents at our altars still plead for salvation and mercy. We hope to swell our accessions and conversions to over one hundred before the fourth of November.

R. G. RAGAN, P. C.

SEPTEMBER 25, 1874.

GEORGIANA CIRCUIT, CAMDEN DISTRICT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE. Mr. Editor: On the first Sabbath in September we protracted a meeting at Providence four days, which resulted in several conversions and eleven accessions to the church.

We have just closed a meeting of more than ordinary interest at Georgiana. In this meeting there were a good many conversions, several backsliders were reclaimed, the church generally revived, and thirty-five persons added to the church—thirty-one from the world and four by certificate. We expect to hold three or four protracted meetings yet on the circuit, and, trusting in God, we shall look for great things.

NEIL GILLIS, P. C.

OCTOBER 1, 1874.

SPRING HILL, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: We have made special efforts at several different points in the bounds of this circuit (Spring Hill, Mississippi Conference,) beginning with Bethel on the third Sabbath of August. This meeting was continued through the following week, and resulted in the addition of twelve, and about as many conversions. At three other points we had some success, but not to the extent desired and expected.

On the second Sunday in September we began a meeting at Lauderdale, and continued it ten days. Bros. W. B. Hines and J. A. Ellis were with us and did us good. The brethren of Lauderdale feel greatly obliged to these brethren for their valuable services. This meeting resulted in the addition of thirty to the church, and perhaps as many conversions. About fifty in all have been added to the church in the bounds of this circuit. To God be all the praise.

D. G. W. ELLIS, P. C.

ELMORE CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: We have just closed the tenth protracted meeting on this work the present year. Truly the Lord has been with us in sending upon the church refreshing showers of grace and salvation. At the commencement of these series of meetings our most excellent presiding elder, W. A. McCarty, and our venerable brother, M. C. Turrentine, of Tallassee, were with us, and preached in the Spirit's power. Bros. J. S. C. Glenn and son, local, and H. J. Hunter, superannuate, were with us at several appointments, and preached effectually to the pulling down of the strongholds of satan. Up to the present time we have received one hundred and nine into the church, and baptized twenty-eight children.

In finance we are behind, this being a year of great privation; but we are satisfied that these warm-hearted people will contribute to the good cause as God may prosper them.

Yours in Christ,

R. F. PERDUE, P. C.

SEPTEMBER 29, 1874.

BOGUE CHITTO CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The protracted meeting of the Topasaw church commenced on the twelfth of September, and continued six days. The Spirit was with us in the beginning, and there was glory in the church to the end. The members vowed and paid their vows. They proved the Lord, and he blessed them as they had never been blessed before. The place has been noted for its precious camp meeting revivals, but these were in ante-bellum times. This protracted meeting was on the same style in its results. Such singing, praying, exhorting and praising are seldom heard outside of a camp meeting. There were fourteen accessions, perhaps more than that number of conversions, and over forty persons, men and women, old and young, covenanted together to bear the cross more faithfully. The result is incalculable.

The fourth quarterly meeting of the Brookhaven district commenced at Johnston's on the nineteenth, and continued seven days. This was an interesting and profitable meeting. Nine accessions and some conversions, and the church considerably strengthened. Will this do for an informal dedication of the new church? J. W. SANDELL, P. C.

SUMMIT, MISS., October 1, 1874.

CHOCTAW CAMP GROUND AND BUTLER CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: Our meeting at the Choctaw camp ground closed on the morning of the twenty-third with happy results. Twenty-eight accessions, about thirty conversions, and the church greatly revived. Many penitents were still at the altar, but we had to close. There were only two itinerant preachers beside myself. Two local preachers were with us, and rendered efficient service. Our good presiding elder, Rev. S. H. Cox, conducted the meeting, and did it as one who knew his business. He preached with great earnestness and power. Rev. W. I. Powers did his share of the work well. The Lord was with us from the commencement in convicting and saving power. He will always bless his people when they make such sacrifices as our people made to sustain a meeting in such pressing times. They have built a large, substantial shelter on the camp ground. In another year we expect to be well supplied with tents. We hope it will be continued, and be the means of saving many precious souls.

The work on the Butler circuit is progressing. Up to the present we have had about fifty accessions to the church. Several protracted meetings are to be held before Conference.

D. J. WRIGHT.

MOUNT STERLING, ALA., Sept. 28, 1874.

ALEXANDRIA DISTRICT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The Alexandria District Conference convened on Wednesday, September 18, and closed the following Monday.

The presiding elder, preachers in charge and members held their sessions and discussions in the Evergreen church, famous in every item of its history up to its present state of completion—that is, a complete cypress shell, thirty-eight feet by sixty feet, twenty feet in the story. Time will not allow the history of this church in detail, of every plank and nail, but to give a digest of its long and curious history we may state, in a general way, that it was built by one man in spite of "the world, the flesh and the devil," in the church and out of it. It was like Bro. Parvin's taking Caloosieu, with the blessing of God, on six bits, and stands as a demonstration of the fact that it takes just one man, consecrated, to build a church. Before we leave this church I must tell you that a collection was taken up not only to pay the expenses already incurred, but also to finish it. The preacher in charge read out in clear voice, and with accurate statement, the names of all connected with the building, even to the cleaning of bricks for the foundation to the doting of the boards for the roof. The amount needed was named and given before dinner, and the people all felt honored in having the privilege of giving to such a church.

But to the facts that came out under the inquisition of committee men, spiritual, temporal and financial, some alarming, some pleasing, and others astonishing; but, sir, there is nothing like statistics in this age. One-half of our preachers were present, and about one-eighth of the lay members, and had not those in attendance been well posted in reference to the district we could have laid hands on few of the facts. Will the Bishop of the Louisiana Annual Conference ask the preachers if they have attended all their meetings? Some of the preachers would like to know in time to frame their excuses. Up to the time of the session of the District Conference nearly four hundred members had been received into the church, and revivals were reported on every work. All the preachers, in speaking of their own experience, look upon this year as the fullest and brightest of all spent in the Master's employ. We came very near finding out that of the two thousand and more members of the church on this district not more than one-half attend regularly upon the various services of the church. This part of the report so surprised us that it was not received, and, for want of better statistics, left out.

Facts astonishing came to light under the discoveries of the inquisitor of finance. Divide the whole amount received by preachers by the number of preachers on the district, and the amount to each man is $30. This is money, and does not include those payments in kind, and that kind to which it is impossible to fix a value in round average figures, such as corn, chickens, board-around and the like, orders on the store, and odors. So, then, are some of these payments in kind. No statement can be made of these, only in a general way, since they all have three values—their worth to the donor, their worth to the preacher, and then their real worth.

Very pleasing it was to see the preachers from the overflowed as well as from the dried-up regions all happy and hopeful, well dressed and cheerful. Surely they must "have meat to eat" that the world "know not of." The committee on temperance and periodicals—both popular.

Find a great many people on this district taking your paper, and unwilling to give it up, even though they do not pay. We had President C. G. Andrews with us the entire session. He represented Centenary, and in his person and preaching gave the best argument and proof of the claims of this college upon our people.

Our next District Conference will be held in Columbia, Louisiana.

From the Mission Field.

From time to time, Mr. Editor, there comes to my table a package of foreign missionary journals—from England and Scotland several, from India one, and from China one. They are filled with facts and sentiments that should interest and profit our people. As very few copies of these journals come to this country, I propose, if you and your readers think well of it, to furnish you with occasional articles composed of excerpts and notes which may be to "the use of edifying."

MEDICAL MISSIONS.

The May-June number of the Chinese Recorder and Missionary Journal, for which thanks are due to our brother, the Rev. Young J. Allen, among a number of instructive articles contains an excellent paper on "Medical Missions." The writer, the Rev. William Scarborough, gives us an account of medical missions in China, beginning as far back as 1805, "when Dr. Alexander Pearson introduced the practice of vaccination among the natives of Canton and Macao." This is followed by a valuable sketch of the medical missions connected with different English and American boards. One suggestive paragraph I copy:

"We come now to another important year in the history of medical missions. In the year 1861 Dr. Lockhart, under the auspices of the London Missionary Society, proceeded to Peking, where he established a hospital and commenced a mission station. In this hospital he remained till 1864, when Dr. Dudgeon arrived to take charge. Perhaps of all the reports issued by medical missionaries, those of Dr. Dudgeon are the most interesting, containing, as they do, so much that the lay reader can relish and enjoy. This hospital derives especial significance from the fact of its being in the immediate vicinity of the throne, and from the number of highest officials, 'high mandarins, eunuchs of the palace and princes of the blood,' Mongolian princes and princesses that have taken advantage of the doctor's services. I should not be at all surprised if some day or other he is called in to medicate for the 'Son of Heaven' himself."

Doubtless the Emperor himself will some day learn the superiority of an intelligent physician over the charm-peddlers who have helped to kill his ancestors. Would that we had the full history of these medical missions. The glimpses given by this article show some of the noblest lives that were ever offered up for humanity and religion.

Mr. Scarborough points out and describes the "good that these medical missions have undoubtedly done." I condense as follows:

1. They develop a princely liberality on the part of foreigners resident in China. The instances cited show that large sums have been contributed by this class to sustain the hospital work.

2. They do immense good to the bodies of men. "The hated foreignor, at the sacrifice of his own comfort and wealth, and at the risk of his own life, stoops over the wounded, fallen native; and while the native priests and Levites and Pharisees go carelessly by, he dresses the fetid, ugly wound—too filthy for a native doctor to touch—pours in the soothing oil and cleansing wine, takes him to his own hospital, and cares for him himself; nor sends him away till there is nothing more that he can do for him. This is a sight for the lovers of humanity to glory over."

3. They do great good to the native medical faculty; and there can be no two opinions of the need of their services in this direction. "A native doctor lives in blissful ignorance of any such thing as anatomy. His doctrine of the pulse is absurd. His science is closely allied to sorcery and magic. In difficult cases he is of no use whatever."

4. They are useful in revealing to foreigners many things in connection with the Chinese that would otherwise remain in mystery, and that missionaries need to know.

5. They are very useful in opening a new mission.

Mr. Scarborough next considers the good medical missions are supposed to do, but concerning which there is more or less of uncertainty, and concludes by pointing out the qualifications needful in successfully prosecuting the work of a medical missionary.

May not our own board consider the value of such an agency as the "medical mission" in connection with its work in China? Could we not find the men? And are there not among us friends of humanity, as well as Christianity, who would contribute to the maintenance of such a mission?

PROOF OF FAITH IN CHRISTIANITY.

Now take a statement, with a comment from the Lucknow Witness (India) for July 15, received this day:

"The receipts of money for the past year reported at the recent religious anniversaries in London give testimony, in a way that none can mistake, to the earnestness and zeal of the Christian churches in England. For foreign missions the sum of £875,840 was contributed; for home missions, £311,589; for religious educational and other similar agencies, £221,205—a grand total of £1,629,607 (something over $8,000,000—a clear gain of a full $1,000,000 over the previous year.) This does not look as though infidelity and rationalism, with its myriad names and blatant boasting, was gaining the ascendency so very fast, after all. We presume the entire sum contributed by atheism, deism, and 'theism,' so called, for the propagation of their views, could be reckoned up into a very few figures."

Where, Mr. Editor, do we Southern Methodists propose to range ourselves—with the Christians who pay to advance Christianity because they believe it, or with atheists, deists and such like, who pay nothing because they believe nothing? What are we to say of those professing Christians of our own land who pay nothing to propagate their views? What sort of "views" has he who will pay nothing to propagate them? In what sense does he believe in Christianity who does not seek to propagate it—pay as well as pray to propagate it? What of the tens of thousands among us who pay nothing for this cause? Are they Christians? Yes; but in a most unenlightened condition. Whose fault is it? Chiefly their pastors'. What is the remedy? First, let their teachers learn; then let them teach.

NEW MISSIONARY CENTERS.

The Witness for July 24 contains an interesting communication from "A Native Christian" upon the evangelistic labors of Messrs. Taylor and Thoburn, so unlike in their methods, and yet so very successful. These gentlemen are meeting such opposition and persecution as the early itinerants in England and America received from starchy churchmen and unwashed ruffians. We have seen much recently of the revival movements in Calcutta, Bombay and Madras. The significance of these great awakenings, chiefly, but by no means altogether, among the European and Eurasian classes (the Eurasians are mixed blood, Hindoo-English) will be seen when we consider a recent statement of the Friend of India—from official sources, we are informed—of the population of these cities.

According to the Friend "the population of the three great cities of British India two years and a half ago was as follows: Calcutta, 922,429; Bombay, 644,405; Madras, 397,552." I have a feeling, that is almost a persuasion, that God is now doing such a work in these cities as he did in the Syrian Antioch when he prepared it to become the first great missionary center of the church in apostolic times. The whole church should pray the divine blessing and guidance upon these evangelists in the great cities of Hindoostan. When a living, witnessing church is firmly established in Calcutta, Bombay and Madras, what centers of light and power they must become to all India!

CIVILIZED INFIDELITY.

Ridicule, insult, the stupidity of superstition, the debasing influences of idolatry, and the unbelief of the church at home, do not measure the sum of the antagonisms that must be met and vanquished by missionaries among the heathen. Think, for instance, on the foes described in the following statement from the Chronicle—organ of the London Missionary Society—by the Rev. George Hall, of Madras: "The objections brought fifteen or twenty years ago are never heard now from educated young men. They have moved on into far more difficult and dangerous lines of thought. The present unbelief, originated by those who are called philosophers in Europe, seems coming in like a flood on India. Our young men now carefully study the works of Darwin, Huxley, Herbert Spencer, Newman, Stuart Mill and Colenso, and from these sources draw their objections to Christianity. * * * To my certain knowledge numbers of Hindoos are regular subscribers for Bradlaugh's National Reformer, and there are weekly meetings where this publication is regularly read and discussed."

No doubt these smart young Hindoos will now send for Mr. Tyndall's recent confession of his atheism, and subscribe for the Popular Science Monthly as soon as they learn its spirit and tendency.

In view of these things, what an engine of power the "mission press" will be in heathen lands! What a work of absolutely incalculable blessing our own Allen is now doing and will yet more efficiently do with his translations and his Chinese Christian Magazine! Let the church not only bid him god-speed, but sustain him. But chiefly let the church pray for revival power at home and abroad. Our modern atheists and infidels must be answered as Hume and Bolingbroke and Voltaire and the rest were answered in their time—by the power of God revealed in the hearts of men. What an evidence for Christianity was the revival of Whitefield and the Wesleys!

WHAT AN OLD MISSIONARY SAYS.

Here we may read with profit what a veteran missionary, the Rev. Dr. Joseph Mullens, says. He was for a long time a missionary to the Hindoos, but is now, as we learn, connected with the London Missionary Society's work in Madagascar. I quote from an address he delivered at a recent mission conference in that island, so strangely redeemed from utter heathenism by the gospel of Christ. Dr. Mullens says:

"Thirty years have passed since I first landed at Calcutta, and came into personal contact with the Hindoos. I am the oldest missionary among you. I have seen missionary work all over China and India. I have talked of it and discussed it with more than a thousand missionaries. I believe in it profoundly. I know nothing so powerful in the world for the world's renovation as the gospel of Christ faithfully preached. And there is no work so worth doing with one's whole heart as the preaching of that gospel, out of love to the Savior and the souls for which he died."

LOOK TO YOUR MARCHING ORDERS.

I conclude with a clinching paragraph from the Foreign Missionary Herald, organ of the Church of Scotland. It occurs in an address delivered by the Rev. W. Macfarlane at a missionary meeting held at Darjeeling. Are there any among us who have doubts and unbelief and quibbles and opposition, instead of prayers and contributions, for our foreign missionary work? Let them read and consider.

"The question of the expediency or the inexpediency of missions is not one the discussion of which is permitted to Christians. It is only possible in the case of those who are really unbelievers in Christ. Why? Because the very idea of a Christian is that of one who, believing in Christ as the Son of God and the Savior of the world, gives himself up to him, and resolves in everything unconditionally and unreservedly, and against all odds—if need be, against the whole world—to follow Christ wholly, and in everything to keep his commandments. 'He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me.' 'If a man love me he will keep my words.' 'He that loveth me not keepeth not my sayings.' These are the first principles of Christian allegiance. Christian service knows nothing of the modern commercial principle of 'limited liability!' As many as are Christ's, when they gave themselves to him, humbly resolved in everything henceforth to live not unto themselves, but unto him who loved them, and gave himself for them, and to bring every thought unto subjection to the will of Christ. The command of Christ to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature is one whose observance is as much incumbent upon us as the commemoration of the Lord's Supper, or as the fulfillment of any other of the Lord's commands."

A resting, ritualistic, dilettante "clergyman" once undertook to secure from the Duke of Wellington approval of his unmissionary doubts and quibbles, the "obstacles" in the way of the conversion of the heathen being so great! The old duke's answer may be considered by certain cavilers and unbelievers of our own time and fold. "Look to your marching orders, sir: 'Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature!'"

It is not, then, a question of opinion, but law; of inclination, but obligation. It is not a question between us and our General Conference, our Board of Missions, our Bishops and pastors, but between us and Christ Jesus the Lord. Will we obey our King? Would that I had space to give you the names of the godly men and women—and there are scores of them—who are mentioned in the notices of "Departures" during the month of August. O that we counted ourselves worthy to enroll some names among those successors of the apostles!

MY SHIPS COMING HOME.

BY J. W. BARKER.

O my ships are coming homeward
From the islands of the sea,
Thro' the dim and peaceful distance
They are coming home to me;
Coming, not as they departed
In the clear and cloudless morn,
Dancing on the tossing billow
To the music of the storm;
O my ships are coming homeward
From the islands of the sea,
Thro' the dim and peaceful distance
They are coming home to me.

It was in the morn of summer,
In the misty "long ago,"
When they left the quiet harbor,
Dancing wildly to and fro;
Then they sped beyond the billow,
O'er a wide, unmeasured main,
And my heart had sad misgivings—
Will they e'er return again?
But my ships are coming homeward
From the islands of the sea,
Thro' the dim and peaceful distance
They are coming home to me.

Youth and childhood have departed,
Like a shadow passing by,
Since they flung their united banners
Out against the starry sky;
And the light of hope has flickered,
Till it almost ceased to burn,
As I've waited in the darkness
For my gallant ships' return;
O my ships are coming homeward
From the islands of the sea,
Freighted with the "oil of gladness,"
They are coming home to me.

We are dwellers near an ocean,
And the waves are wild and free,
But we spend our sunny morning
Sending out our ships to sea;
Many sink amid the waters,
Very near the native shore,
Others plow the weary distance,
And return to us no more;
But the mellow skies of sunset
Often speak of joy to come,
As they stir with moving pictures
Of our ships returning home;
O my ships are coming homeward
From the islands of the sea,
Thro' the dim and peaceful distance
They are coming home to me.

What Is Temperance

IN RESPECT TO THE USE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS?

NO. V.—BY J. W.

The issue of this investigation from the scriptural standpoint turns unquestionably upon the intoxicating or unintoxicating quality of the liquor called "wine," which Jesus made and drank, which Paul recommended to Timothy for a beverage instead of water, and which deacons and others were counseled to use only in moderation. Let it be established that the wine which Jesus made and drank was of alcoholic and therefore intoxicating quality, and the question of temperance is at once settled on the side of "moderation" as against "total abstinence," however clear and strong much of the Scriptures may appear on the side of total abstinence, and however positive may be the teachings of science on the same side. This because the example of Jesus is the supreme expression of what God would have men to do and to be. Let us inquire, then, as of the first importance in this investigation: Did Jesus make an intoxicating or an unintoxicating liquor when he turned the water into wine at the wedding in Cana? We learn from several ancient historians that the wine most generally made use of at wedding feasts and the like was sweet, unfermented wine—wine that was incapable of intoxicating. Is it not, then, at least reasonable to presume that it was this unintoxicating wine which had been served to the guests at the wedding in Cana? Surely we cannot presume that Jesus would furnish a fresh supply of wine to men who had already drank copiously—had "well drunk"—of intoxicating wine? If they had already "well drunk" of intoxicating wine, there can be no doubt they were more or less "inflamed" thereby: to give them more in such a condition would be to do what even some bar-room keepers will not do. And if the wine of which the guests had already "well drunk" was sweet, unintoxicating wine, is it to be supposed that the "good wine" which Jesus supplied unto them was of an intoxicating quality? Look at the two sorts of wine: one is made by God, the other by man. Year after year God turns water into wine by changing the watery sap of the vine into that luscious liquor which we find in the ripened grape—a liquor that is unintoxicating, yet strengthening and exhilarating, making glad the heart of man. But man, who in his fallen estate has "sought out many inventions" whereby to change that which God created good for man into something evil for man, has learned the art of manufacturing God-made wine into an alcoholic, intoxicating liquor—into wine that is "a mocker" of true wine—"inflaming," "maddening" wine. Is it to be doubted for an instant that the wine which Jesus made so instantaneously at the wedding feast was identically the "good wine" which he, as one with God, without whom is not anything made that is made, makes by a gradual process every year; and not the "maddening wine," the intoxicating liquor, into which man changes the same by a process of fermentation? Is it not indeed monstrous, blasphemous, to presume that Jesus made and supplied unto the guests at the wedding feast in Cana as much as one hundred and twenty gallons of wine that is a mocker—fermented, alcoholic, intoxicating wine? Is it not a pitiable apology for Jesus—a shocking trifling with the character of him who was God manifest in the flesh—to say that though he did make it then, he would not do so now, as though he were not as cognizant of the deleterious effects of intoxicating liquor at that time as we are in these times?

In the allusion which Jesus subsequently makes to new wine and new bottles we have confirmation of the strong probability that the wine which Jesus made and drank was unfermented, unintoxicating wine. Says he: "Neither do men put new wine into old bottles; else the bottles break, and the wine runneth out, and the bottles perish; but they put new wine into new bottles, and both are preserved." The bottles here referred to were goat skins; if they were filled with wine already fermented, no such result as is here described would take place, however old the bottles, however often they had been used for a similar purpose before; and if they were filled with new, fermenting wine, it would burst new bottles as well as old. Hence it must have been unfermented wine—wine that was boiled and designed to be preserved in an unfermented state—to which Jesus referred, for then we see the reason why the new bottles should be used and not the old bottles. Old bottles would have portions of yeasty matter—nitrogenous deposits of the former wine which they contained—adhering to their sides; and hence, if new wine were put into old bottles, those yeasty particles would start fermentation in the wine, changing it into "maddening wine," which would burst out, "and the bottles perish." Whereas new bottles, being entirely free from all such yeasty deposits, the new, boiled wine would not ferment therein, "and both are preserved." It is evident from this statement about the new wine and new bottles that the people of Palestine were in the habit of preserving the juice of the grape in its natural, unfermented state, just as people now-a-days are in the habit of preserving fruits in their own juices. It is evident, further, that Jesus and the people to whom he spake were cognizant of the maddening quality generated in new wine by fermentation; and that it was a main object with them to preserve the new wine from undergoing this change. Are we not justified, therefore, in assuming confidently that the wine which Jesus made and drank was this sweet, unfermented, unintoxicating wine which the people were in the habit of putting into new bottles—preserved wine?

Then, again, in the history of the last supper, we find further confirmation of the assumption that the wine which Jesus made and used was unfermented wine. The bread and wine which constituted that supper were, of course, Passover bread and wine. Now we know that anything "leavened" was excluded, by the ceremonial law, from the feast of the Passover.—See Exodus, chapter xii. The prohibition of leaven or fermentation (both being convertible terms for the same process identically) applied to the wine as really as to the bread. So says Gesenius, an eminent Hebrew lexicographer; and so the prohibition was observed by the Jews, at least in former times and in Palestine. Rev. Dr. Peabody, in his essay on the Lord's Supper, says: "The writer has satisfied himself, by careful research, that in our Savior's time the Jews extended the prohibition of leaven to the principle of fermentation in every form; and that it was customary, at the Passover festival, for the master of the household to press the contents of the cup from clusters of grapes preserved for this special purpose." Dr. S. M. Isaachs, a leading Jewish rabbi of New York, says: "In the Holy Land they do not commonly use fermented wines. The best wines are preserved sweet and unfermented. * * * The Jews do not, in their feasts for sacred purposes, including the marriage feast, ever use any kind of fermented drinks. In their oblations and libations, both private and public, they employ the fruit of the vine—that is, fresh grapes—unfermented grape-juice and raisins as the symbol of benediction. Fermentation is to them always a symbol of corruption, as in nature and science it is itself decay, rottenness." Is it not manifest, from these facts and testimonies, that "the fruit of the vine" which Jesus made use of at the ever memorable last supper was not a fermented wine, not an intoxicating liquor, but was the fresh, unfermented, "pure blood of the grape?"

The fact that Jesus was called a "wine-bibber" is no evidence that he was in the habit of making use of any fermented, intoxicating wine. From the context it is very clear that he was called a "wine-bibber" because, unlike the Nazarites, unlike the ascetic Essenes, unlike John the Baptist, he abstained not from the use of new, sweet, unfermented wine—the wine which God prepared for man, year by year, in the fruit of the vine. Jesus abstained not from the use of this sort of wine, as did the Nazarites and other extremists, for it is the creature of God, and he would teach us that "every creature of God is good, and not to be refused or forbidden." Hence, evidently, the carping Pharisees who denounced John the Baptist for his severe asceticism in eating and drinking, saying, "He hath a devil," also denounced Jesus for his freedom from asceticism in eating and drinking, saying of him: "Behold a man gluttonous and a wine-bibber."

There is nothing, therefore, in the life of Jesus to disprove the fact that part of the law, which he came not to destroy but to fulfill, was: "LOOK NOT THOU UPON THE WINE when it is red, when it giveth his color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright (i. e., when it is fermented,) for such "wine is a mocker"—"at the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder."

Shall the General Rules be Changed?

The answer to this question is with the Annual Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, their General Conference, at its late session, having taken the initiative. We, with modest diffidence and respectful deference to others, must enter our protest against the proposed change, and offer a few reasons for it.

And, first of all, we have always considered these General Rules, as they were drawn up by Mr. Wesley himself for his societies, and adopted by the Methodist Episcopal Church in America at the time of its organization, as containing in them, as they were, and not as they might be made, the fundamental conditions of fellowship and membership in any organic association of people calling themselves Wesleyan Methodists. In this relation they have been recognized and regarded from 1739 until 1874, before any one, by resolution or otherwise, in as far as our recollection goes—and we were in the first delegated General Conference, where the right to act under this proviso commenced its date, and have been in this grand council down to our last—ever moved the General Conference to change these General Rules, either by adding anything to them or taking anything from them. The Church South, it will be said, left out the article on buying and selling slaves. Yes, because it was Cæsar's business—and to Cæsar we left it. And, by the by, that single rule was not by Wesley at all, we believe, but by Bishops Coke and Asbury, to conform our moral Discipline to the United States policy—when the African slave trade was made unlawful. Hence, buying and selling, with an intention to enslave, was the crime forbidden. To buy slaves already enslaved by the law of the land, with an intention to enslave them, was a solecism.

But not to buy Africans smuggled in, contrary to national law, these godly Bishops made a term of membership in the American Methodist Church. If any one older than myself can gainsay this, let him come out. Hence we take our stand on Mr. Wesley's General Rules, as Mr. Wesley laid them down, and as we took them up; and again declare that they are the fundamental law—declaring the conditions both of fellowship and membership in anything in every Wesleyan Methodist association.

Suppose these General Rules should be altered, even substantially—although kept in the Discipline and called the General Rules of the Methodists—they would not be the General Rules of Wesleyan Methodists. There can be no such church or people upon any plan of association except that matured by Mr. Wesley himself, and accepted by his followers.

We are sorry that, after so long a time, the first move we ever saw made in this direction to change these fundamental laws of membership and fellowship in our church should have been made in the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. We regret it, because if the Annual Conferences concur in this unfortunate move, as is provided for by a three-fourths vote, the example will be set that whenever, by outside pressure of popular feeling, it may seem necessary to change the General Rules so as to conform them to some measure of moral reform, it will be done. The whole underlying element in this move is to conform this condition of membership to the temperance idea of the times. No one would ever have thought of conforming our General Rules to this idea on the subject of liquor but for this temperance enthusiasm—we mean total abstinence enthusiasm. For no one of safe mind will say that total abstinence from anything that may be temperately used, ever was or ever can be a moral obligation per se. Mr. Wesley, like a wise man, made temperance one of his fundamental conditions of Methodist fellowship. But this he did not upon the basis of total abstinence, but upon the basis of a useless use of liquor. We suppose the idea of including all distillations of liquor, and all sale of it, never entered into his mind; for the good reason that what was obliged to be allowed required both the others.

It is a maxim, very little below an axiom, that whatever is overdone is undone; and this, in our opinion, is exactly what you will do, as Annual Conferences, if, by the requisite majority, you concur in the action of your General Conference, and make this change in our General Rules.

In the first place, you absolutely change the conditional ground of church membership of over six hundred thousand members already graduated into full fellowship upon the moral basis of the General Rules, as they were, every one of whom, if their right of membership should ever be called into question upon this added condition of membership, would be entitled to the plea, if he should choose to make it, of non-jurisdiction, on the grounds of your having changed the constitutional condition of his membership, and made it what would have prevented his becoming amenable at its bar if it had been a condition then. If we are not mistaken, this forfeiture of membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church South would be under the malum prohibitum rule rather than the malum in se. We insist on it that the church must not risk the making of things wrong, by laws of her own, when the proof of their being immoral per se is so utterly undiscernable to common consciousness. It is in vain for us Good Templars and others to set up the plea that, because distilled spirits either is or can be abused, that therefore no distillation or sale of it should be allowed by members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Against the daily habitual use of it as mere dram-drinking, or when made up into a stimulating beverage, our General Rules have always provided. And far into my day, whenever it was in proof that any member of our church was an habitual dram-drinker, in the face of this General Rule, he was arrested, and, when the issue was made, if he said he had fought for liberty, and intended to have it, we cut him off. This, however, was never done then, only when abuse was evident, and the practice entered into exemplary life. This was done then upon the General Rules as containing the disciplinary law of our religious connection.

But if this arbitrary change in the General Rules was made, and many members of the church were to violate this new condition, you could not try them on the disciplinary law of the General Rules as we did in primitive Methodism. You will have to try them under the rule for the trial of immoral members, as it now is and will be, at least until 1878. And you cannot touch one of them until it has been determined that the crime complained of is expressly forbidden in the word of God. No other is made cognizable in your Discipline as it now is.

The caution given us by Christ in his parable of the wheat and tares, as it relates to church purgation, means much—enough, at least, to guard us against making anything sinful, as by the tradition of the elders. And while we deplore the devastation of fortune, fame and family comforts, to say nothing of the moral desolations caused by intemperance, yet we would deplore the change in our General Rules, now in its travail for birth, through the Annual Conferences, for reasons with us strong enough to make us deplore its conception and pray for its miscarriage.

It is noteworthy in all moves of this sort: the enthusiasm is always when the move is from the strict to the extreme—itself prima facia evidence of error in conception and of folly in prosecution. As my good wishes for Methodism are now unquestionable, and as nothing worse will be charged against me on account of my opinion herein expressed than noviceism in theology, I declare that not one of all the advocates of this measure can show a single text in all the law of God which expressly forbids distilling as such, or the simply selling of liquors as such, or the temperate use of it at will, so as to justify any connection with it as sufficient to dissolve church relations. And any move of this sort that will fall of execution, because, as common sense, consciousness of right will deny your right to lay down any conditions of church rights, the reasons of which were not fairly deducible from the law of God, will always lead to a very hurtful demoralization in reference both to church discipline and church authority. No, my brethren, never encumber our church laws with impracticable rules; rather far rely on the force of moral suasion alone.

This proposed change in the constitutional terms of membership, if adopted, will never be enforced. Its legitimacy in reference to members now enrolled I do capitally doubt, only at their own acceptance. It is unlawful, in as far as it may be judged, to exceed Scripture authority. We say that this is an assessment in morals too much upon the basis of total abstinence ideas of temperance. Who does not see that the requirements of this pledge as a preliminary condition of members in our church would reduce us at once, in effect, to a total abstinence association. And yet, if this change is made, this pledge is, at least, silently imposed and silently taken; for, of course, if a candidate for membership should notify you that he excepted, from his personal obligation, so much of this law as allied it to the total abstinence pledge, you could not admit him without making yourself simply ridiculous. It is the same in all respects. Both allow its use in cases of necessity. If a man takes the pledge of total abstinence, and goes to drinking, otherwise than medicinally, which is necessity, you expel him; and if a man joins our church, knowing of this condition of membership (and know ye, if it is passed it must be a sort of an only condition, or else a farce,) and is found drinking, no matter how temperately, if it is not of necessity—as medicine—you must turn him out; for, mind you, much of all moral conservatism of this sort is upon the principle of honor, and an honorable consistency must be preserved.

I beseech you, brethren, never to rush out upon any tide of popular feeling, and make laws which cannot be enforced advantageously. In reference to some things we can get along very well without a specific law; but the moment we attempt to meet it by a stringent specific law—a sort of law always obnoxious to common sense—we place ourselves on the ridiculous roll by making a fuss over a grievous sin which we voraciously outlaw and then endure, because we find out the common sense of the country and of the church looks upon the measure as extra judicial. This will be the fate of this change if it finds favor enough to get into our Discipline.

It is useless to deny it; if it becomes a law at all, it must be an ex post facto law, in reference to our present membership, if they are made amenable to it, or else we must occupy the anomalous position of a church with a membership divided in its responsibility to law. In 1832 this thing was attempted by the General Conference in Philadelphia, with this difference: that it was sought thus by the enactment of an ecclesiastical statute—for at that time Mr. Wesley's General Rules with us were like the Ark of the Covenant among the Jews—too sacred to be touched by intermeddling officious hands. The enthusiasm then was just as it was in Louisville—overflowing all the limits of wise zeal, with all the signs of an overwhelming majority, crying, "Vote! vote!" when Bishop Soule, with his sense of constitutional laws, took the same ground we take now—that such a change in the conditions of church membership could not be levied on members already graduated into membership, under the terms of membership as then required. And if they made a new levy of this kind it could not act retrospectively, and a membership divided in relation to the legal right to membership would be inevitable, if claimed on this ground. So overwhelming in its reasoning were his cautions against all ex post facto laws that the bill hardly got a minority vote.

And more, in so far as the church must have to do with the liquor question, let the General Rules alone. For in so far as the non-use of spirituous liquors, except in cases of necessity, is concerned, true Methodism has always been a grand temperance compact—as strong as this change can make it. And, as to anything cognizable in distilling and in dealing in spirits, the less you have to do with abstract per se questions the better can you manage the moral. If I had to live my life over again, and be a pastor all the time, I would rather rely on our General Rules as they are, ten to one, than as they will be if this change is made.

There is nothing necessary to put a distiller out of our church, if he is refractory, but to try him under the first article in our General Rules, as they are, considering them as containing the fundamental conditions of fellowship in our church, which is to be secured first "by doing no harm." Let the charge be doing harm, and the specification ministering to intemperance, for filthy lucre's sake; and where the case is notorious, as a distillery would be, you will never fail to get a verdict of guilty. I never did. You cannot be flung in this issue. Everybody knows that running a distillery, as a business, is doing harm.

I offer no apology for trying to get my views before my brethren, who are soon to vote on this question, nor for advising them to give a strong negative vote. I am as true a Methodist as ever lived.

LOVICK PIERCE.

A CHRISTIAN CHINESE WEDDING. The San Francisco Bulletin gives an account of the marriage in that city recently of Loi Moug to Miss Chung Fa. Loi Mong became converted soon after arriving in this country, and has been employed as a missionary to his countrymen. It was while laboring in this capacity that he became acquainted with the lady in question. "The courtship of the couple was strictly in accordance with modern usages. The marriage ceremony was held at the Chinese Mission Home, on the corner of Stockton and Sacramento streets, in the presence of a large number of friends, Rev. Dr. Loomis and Rev. Ira M. Condit officiating, the former in English and the latter in Chinese. The bride was attired in an elegant white gros-grain skirt en train, panier looped up with sprays of orange blossoms and small white satin bows. The corsage was worn high, and with a white illusion ruche. The hair was worn high, and was surmounted by a wreath of orange blossoms. A handsome white point-lace vail was attached to the orange blossoms, and fell in graceful folds over the bride's brown shoulders. The bridal ornaments consisted of pearls and gold. The bridegroom appeared in a stylish black broadcloth suit, including the usual swallow-tail coat. At the conclusion of the ceremony the party repaired to the residence of the newly-married couple, and assisted in the wedding feast. The honeymoon will be spent in the interior. It is stated that this is the first time in this city that a Christian Chinaman and a Christian Chinawoman have been married in a Christian manner."

DIED, at the residence of her grandchild, Mrs. T. A. Eby, on the Amite river, in the parish of Ascension, Louisiana, on the tenth day of July, 1874, Mrs. A. E. DALE, aged seventy-four years. Her husband fought at the battle of New Orleans in the year 1814. She was one of the members of the first Methodist Episcopal Church erected in the city of Carrollton, where she resided for forty odd years. As a sister she was equally distinguished by the warmth and uniformity of her affections; as a friend she was frank, sincere and faithful in her attachments. Her sensibility was extreme, but in the adverse circumstances and afflictions of life, from which no mortal is exempt, and in which she was occasionally called to partake, she manifested uncommon patience and serenity, rarely or never complaining or showing any marks of discontent. She was fond of reading, and her mind was highly cultivated. She was asked by her grandchild if she was happy. She whispered: "Happy? happy? Oh, yes!" And in half an hour she fell asleep in Jesus, without a struggle or a groan.

Mrs Eliza Sharp and Mrs. N. Settoon, of the city of Carrollton, are her sisters.

ELISHA BELL.

DIED, at his residence in Claiborne parish, Louisiana, August 27, 1874, Bro. JOHN A. HART. Bro. Hart was a native of Maury county, Tennessee. He was born on the fourth day of June, 1826, and was converted at the age of sixteen, at Smith's camp ground, near Mount Pleasant, Tennessee. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and lived a consistent member up to his death. He served the church in the capacity of class-leader and steward. He was the subject of affliction. In the army he contracted that dreadful disease, consumption, in 1862. For the last two years of his life he was seldom able to leave his house, and most of the time his room. For the last six or eight months he was confined to his bed. He was never heard to murmur or complain, but felt all the time resigned to the will of God. He would talk about death as if going on a visit. He was a man much respected by all who knew him. In his neighborhood he was much loved, and his death is lamented. The church has lost one of its best members, one of its brightest jewels. The preachers always found a home at his house. But he is gone to his reward above. When dying, his friends standing around him supposed him gone, but he soon rallied, and was asked by a brother how he felt, and what were his hopes and prospects. With uplifted hands he said: "Blessed Jesus;" and then fell asleep in Jesus. He leaves a wife and two children to mourn his loss; but their loss is his eternal gain.

R. W. FLOURNOY.

JOSEPH W. COOPER was born in Monticello, March 1, 1827, and moved to the vicinity of Jackson, Mississippi, when about fourteen years of age, and here resided throughout his quiet but useful and honored life. On the twenty-seventh of May, 1857, he was happily married to Miss Sarah H. Andrews, sister of the Rev. C. G. Andrews, of the Mississippi Conference, who now mourns, with her fatherless children, the loss of a kind and noble husband. Mr. Cooper had a high sense of honor. In nothing did he ever compromise the dignity of a noble manhood. In the business affairs and cares of life he was scrupulously honest and honorable.—Though naturally retiring and unobtrusive in manner, he attracted a large circle of appreciative friends. He was never forward to express an opinion, but firm in maintaining his convictions. His integrity and generosity won the highest confidence and esteem. Though possessing so many excellencies of character, Mr. Cooper lived out of the church. But God is all-wise and infinite in mercy. His long illness of many months was the discipline of a loving heavenly Father. Feeling all earthly hopes to be vain, he looked to the cross. His heart was stayed on Jesus, and he was made to know the comforts of redeeming love. In failing health he went to Rockbridge Alum Springs, Virginia, hoping to recuperate. But there, instead of finding physical strength, he met the messenger of death, and on the twenty-seventh of July, 1874, his spirit bade adieu to earth and went home to God. His remains were brought to Jackson, Mississippi, and followed to the grave by a large concourse of mourning friends. For some days before his death he spoke of heaven and his prospects, and thus died, leaning on the arm of his blessed Savior. A worthy citizen, noble husband, loving father, honored friend and trusting child of God has gone. Farewell till we meet above.

C. B. GALLOWAY.

ANNA DOWLING, daughter of Stephen and Elizabeth Oats, was born in North Carolina, May 8, 1822; was married to Edward Dowling, in Henry county, Alabama, October 24, 1841; was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South at the old Zion camp meeting, Dale county, Alabama, in the fall of 1842, and was ever after a true and consistent member of the church below till called to the church above, at three o'clock on the morning of September 16, 1874.

She was a woman of firm character, strong faith, earnest devotion, fervent prayer, genial heart and happy spirit. As a wife she was industrious and economical, loving and trusting; as a neighbor prompt and just; as a mother discreet and kind, impressing all her children with the strength of her convictions.

Of late years she had been the subject of bodily affliction, which she bore with Christian resignation and fortitude. Her last suffering continued nineteen days, during all of which time she was the same pure-minded, trusting child of God. On the morning before she died she seemed to become fully cognizant of the near approach of death, and exclaimed: "The Lord is come! The Lord is come! Let me go!" At this time she had new physical strength, and called for all her family, and gave to each present her dying charge and final blessing, bidding each to meet her in heaven. In the afternoon of the same day she was in rapturous delight, and shouted: "Glory be to God, and to the Lamb that was slain!" Afterward she sang:

"The Lord has promised good to me;
His word my hope secures;"

and soon after took her final leave of this world, and the loved thereof, and ascended to her home in the skies.

She leaves an affectionate and devoted husband, six daughters, two sons, one daughter-in-law, four sons-in-law, seventeen grandchildren, numerous relatives and countless friends to mourn her departure. Hundreds of persons were present at her burial, at Claybank church, the services of which were conducted by Rev. M. E. Butt and the writer.

"Our suffering time shall soon be o'er;
Then shall we sigh and weep no more;
Our ransomed souls shall soar away,
To sing God's praise in endless day."

A. DOWLING.

MRS. SARAH WARREN HASELL was born in Claiborne county, Mississippi, September 19, 1822, and died at the residence of her husband, Benjamin Hasell, in Hinds county, Mississippi, August 11, 1874.

The subject of this notice was thrice married. Her maiden name was Burnes. She was first married to Bro. Isaac Whitaker, of Hinds county, Mississippi, July 22, 1847, in the house of the writer, who performed the marriage ceremony. Both the husband and wife were at the time worthy members of the Methodist Church and exemplary Christians. Their union was happy but short-lived. Bro. Whitaker died on the twenty-ninth of September following. Sister Whitaker was married again on the thirteenth day of February, 1856, to Mr. George W. Wilkins, who was an energetic business man, a kind husband and an acceptable member of the church. He was killed during the late war at the siege of Mobile, leaving our beloved sister a widow with the care of six small children. Relying upon God, and using all diligence and frugality, she was enabled to maintain her charge, nor ever felt the gnawings of hunger, but realized every day that he who feedeth the ravens was mindful of her and her little ones. Her third marriage was with Benjamin Hasell, March 7, 1870. Bro. Hasell, though claiming fellowship in a different branch of the church, testifies that in the person of his deceased wife he ever found a most congenial Christian spirit. They lived in the unity of the Spirit.

Sister Hasell was physically a frail woman, but possessed much mental vigor, and a true moral heroism that nerved her for the conflicts of life, and enabled her to endure all hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ. She fell at last, however, a victim to that insidious disease, consumption. The march of the destroyer was slow, but his pace was steady. In November last she took her bed, from which she was removed finally to her last earthly resting-place. About two weeks before her death she became convinced that her end was nigh. Summoning her household to her bedside, she said: "I am going to die, but perhaps not to-night. I shall not live long." She embraced each one, and bade them meet her in heaven. With the calm deliberation of a Christian she chose from among the ministers of her acquaintance Bro. D. A. J. Parker, of the Mississippi Conference, to preach her funeral, and on me she laid the sad labor of love to write this memorial. From long and intimate acquaintance with Sister Hasell, I am sure I speak the truth when I say that from her girlhood she was a model Christian. She professed religion in her seventeenth year, and remained faithful until death.

Just before she fell asleep she exclaimed: "I'm going to that bright place." "Oh, heavenly Father, receive me;" and her spirit fled to the world of bliss. May God comfort those who mourn for her.

AUTUMN.

BY W. W. S.

'Tis the golden gleam of an autumn day,
With the soft rain raining as if in play;
And a tender touch upon everything,
As if autumn remembered the days of spring.

In the listening woods there is not a breath
To shake their gold to the sward beneath;
And a glow as of sunshine upon them lies,
Though the sun is hid in the shadowed skies.

The cock's clear crow from the farm-yard comes,
The muffled bell from the belfry booms,
And faint and dim, and from far away,
Come the voices of children in happy play.

O'er the mountains the white rain draws its vail,
And the black rocks, crawling, across them sail;
While nearer the swooping swallows skim
O'er the steel-gray river's fretted brim.

No sorrow upon the landscape weighs,
No grief for the vanished summer days,
But a sense of peaceful and calm repose,
Like that which age in its autumn knows.

The spring-time longings are past and gone,
The passions of summer no longer are known,
The harvest is gathered, and autumn stands
Serenely thoughtful with folded hands.

Over all is thrown a memorial hue,
A glory ideal the real ne'er knew;
For memory sifts from the past its pain,
And suffers its beauty alone to remain.

With half a smile and with half a sigh
It ponders the past that has hurried by;
Sees it, and feels it, and loves it all,
Content it has vanished beyond recall.

O glorious autumn, thus serene,
Thus living and loving all that has been!
Thus calm and contented let me be
When the autumn of age shall come to me.

Ramblings in the Footsteps of Hannah More.

BY Z. EASTMAN, LATE U. S. CONSUL AT BRISTOL, ENGLAND.

If the reader will examine the map of England he will see, in what is called in that country "the West," a wedge-shaped area of water, pushing up from the Atlantic ocean, midland, almost in the center of that little isle; sud this inreaching arm of the sea is called the Bristol Channel, from an old and interesting city that lies upon its southeastern shore. From this city of ancient British mariners was sent out the expedition, under Cabot, that discovered North America, and got sight of the continent of the North before Columbus ever beheld the main land of this hemisphere, which he is accredited with discovering; and from that channel, for a long period of time, went out the commercial ventures that sought to monopolize the trade of the New World which it had discovered. From the inner extremity of the channel there extends a little stream—large in that country—called the Severn, which is partly navigable. In the center of that portion of her majesty's dominions to which this channel is a perpetual fingerpoint, is situated the "Black Country," so called from the vast works in coal and iron; and the city of Birmingham, which is the national workshop from which came the pen with which I write these lines, and nine-tenths of all the pens that the world uses, and from which come needles and pins, and almost every ingenious article in iron and steel, from the simplest to the most intricate, such as the sportsman's gun, and even the little metal gods which her majesty's heathen subjects in India worship. Such a country is full of the lively interests of the day that circle around the manufacturing developments of the age; it is also full of the storied incidents of the past, which have marked the progress of the history of this wonderful kingdom of which this section is the center. The region of the Bristol Channel is full of historical associations and ancient mementoes, which make it a charmed land to the antiquarian and student of the past. Full also is it of the reminiscences that relate to us, their descendants, as a people, and the growth of the sentiment of civil liberty in our mother country, which was the seed that germinated to maturity in the formation of our government upon principles of equality. Here was the source of moral power, on the side of the people, against kingly aggression, in the contest with the dissolute Charles. Here was organized Monmouth's futile attempt to overthrow the succession of this dissoluteness in King James; and here the battle was fought which proved the imbecility and overthrow of Monmouth; and here the people mainly felt the malignant tyranny of that unjust judge and tool of mouarchy, Jeffries. And the people of this section, and particularly about Bristol, led by such statesmen as Edmund Burke, their representative in Parliament, made themselves obnoxious as semi-traitors to the crown of George the Third, by their sympathy for the colonies in the contest of our Revolution. And rich as this section of the country is in historical interest, it is shut out from the usual course of travel, and seldom visited by tourists from the United States.

Near this city of Bristol was born, in 1745, Hannah More, one of the most interesting literary characters of the past century. To the American the associations of her birth and the particulars of her life should be peculiarly interesting, for she was one of the most popular of the female authors in the English language, read by our people in the beginning of this century. We then had comparatively few authors of our own—Irving had not yet arisen as our pioneer star in the literary firmament—where now may be found bright constellations; and book-making had not become an art in our young nation. We were in a large measure dependent on the mother country both for the printing of our books and the writing of them. Hannah More shines out new as one of the most distinguished of the religious authors of those times; and probably she has been better appreciated here and her reputation longer cherished than in her native land. It will be profitable to revive the memory and the labors of this most talented and excellent woman.

Her books were among the most valuable and attractive in the first collections of our Sabbath school libraries, and among those most read in the early publications of the Tract Society. Nothing better can now be found in the religious literature of the present time, to illustrate sacred truth, than her stories for the young, like "Parley the Porter," "Tawny Rachael," etc., and her celebrated tract, "The Shepherd of Salisbury Plain." It would be well if they would come into fashion again, and displace some of the mawkish tales, without human nature or manhood, that are now written for the young.

One hundred years ago Hannah More was a bright and shining light among the literati of London—then the most popular and promising female writer of the day. She was moving in the fashionable and captivating society of those times, and was the pet of the unprincipled world that smiled upon mere brilliancy of mind and vivacity of spirit that fed upon its applause. She was patronized by Dr. Johnson; she associated in literary gatherings with such distinguished characters as Boswell, Burke, Goldsmith, Lawrence, Walpole, etc., and became the intimate friend of Garrick, the actor, who performed in her dramas upon the London stage, portrayed her vivid characters, in form and feature, true to nature, and so became her brilliant leading star to the popular enthusiasm of the day. She began her career as a writer of poems, when poets could more easily achieve a reputation than at the present; and aspired to the position of a dramatist, in imitation of Joanna Bailey. Seldom had there been a reputation so brilliant, so rapidly attained, and which promised to hold for so long a time the admiration of the fashionable literary world. Suddenly she abandoned it all, left the fascinations of London life, retired to her rural home, under a religious conviction that her talent was not being devoted to the highest welfare of her fellow-creatures, and consecrated herself to a life of usefulness for the good of others in the exercise of her remarkable talents and the extraordinary power of her pen. And from this consecration of her life she rose to a higher sphere of influence, a more extended reputation, and an undying fame.

It is both pleasant and profitable to follow in the footsteps of such a life, and to become familiar with the scenes in which her labors were expended; and to behold the lasting fruits, ripening year by year, on the coming generations. It is true she is not as well known in her own town as we might have imagined; perhaps there are not now as many readers of her books in Bristol as there are in Chicago; and this only shows that her influence is world-wide. In the places where she planted her schools and rescued the rural population from gross ignorance her name is kept in remembrance. Here will be found old ladies, some who are teaching in the same humble stone school-houses, who speak of Hannah More with sublime reverence and love; for from her lips they received, in early life, that knowledge of divine things and moral truths that have made them new beings in that sphere of want and humble life in which she found them. She took them not out of their places, but she became the instrument of grafting a new life upon the humble stocks of their existence, with the roots of their being still adhering to the soil from which they first derived vitality.

Hannah More's birthplace was an eastern suburb of the city. She was educated by her father, who was a master of the free school of the parish, a poor man. She, with her sisters, became a teacher, instituted a young ladies' school in Bristol, also taught in the then fashionable city of Bath, twelve miles distant. In the meantime she became famous as a poet and dramatist, and discovered a capacity to earn a subsistence and gain means for usefulness by the vocation of her pen. Then it was that she retired to a new field of labor, shut out from active communication with the world, and gathered about herself new associations, and the retreats of a rural home, in its attractiveness said to be almost an Eden.—The Advance.

He had completed his fifty years in the itinerancy. I had just commenced to "travel," consequently his experiences and advices were very important to me, as he thought, and as I ought to have thought.

I must confess, however, that I made a liberal discount on his words, in view of the progress of the times, mentally maintaining that the Methodist preacher of to-day was a different species from the specimen similarly labeled fifty years ago.

The kindly but somewhat forgetful old worthy, after tangling up my name and personality with four or five other pin-feather dominies, at last succeeded in placing me, and then said he:

"Well, Bro. N., let me see; are you married yet?"

Of course I promptly responded in the negative, without saying a word of my prospects. Perhaps there was something mournful in my tones which led him to continue:

"Well, brother, time enough; don't be discouraged. Trust in the Lord; he will bring it about all right. You know Solomon says 'a good wife is from the Lord,' and I know that's the truth. Matilda and I have lived together, man and wife, fifty years come October, and she's been a good wife. Why, once I wanted to locate, and says she: 'No, Samuel. I married you for a traveling Methodist preacher, and I don't want you to stop now.' We've moved thirty-five times—think of that—and not a word of complaint has she ever uttered."

And the good old man's eyes filled with tears and his voice grew husky as he thought of the long and toilsome years of his pilgrimage, brightened by the presence of his noble, uncomplaining wife. Then he chuckled, as old men do when some favorite, well-tried form of thought or expression strikes them.

"Why, I know she's a good wife, for I tell the storekeepers that anything they can sell to her I'll pay for—she's so economical and careful, you see. And she always was. I noticed that more than fifty years ago, when I first met her. I had been sent to Norwalk circuit, and put up the first year at the house of a proud sort of a woman who was dreadfully down on the Methodists, as people often were in those days. You see she had two or three daughters, and was wondrous 'frail the young dominie might take a notion to one of her girls. So she kept talking and hinting and insinuating and disparaging, and at last one day said, says she: 'I'd as lief one of my girls would marry a dog-whipper as a Methodist preacher.' I couldn't keep still any longer, so I spoke right out: 'They'd make better wives for a dog-whipper than for a minister. I would not marry one of your daughters unless you gave me a thousand dollars a year to keep her;' then I went out. We both felt relieved.

"Well, next year, after I was ordained deacon, I stopped at the house of Matilda's father. He had several daughters—Matilda was the fifth one. I never talked much with any of them, for I was very strict about keeping the rules for a young preacher in the Discipline, especially about 'talking sparingly and conducting prudently with women;' but noticed that her father set great store by Matilda. She seemed kind of responsible like, always working around and looking after the children and such like, and when I see how much confidence her father placed in her, the thought came to me that a husband might trust her too. Still, mind you, I had no thought of marrying, you know; only these ideas would come into my head.

"Well, one evening I came home from visiting, and found that all the young folks had gone out for a sleigh-ride. Caleb Benedict, a nice, smart young fellow, had taken Matilda, her mother said. So we had prayers, and then I went up to bed. There was a window right at the foot of the bed, and through it I could see out into the road. It was bright moonlight, and somehow every time I heard sleigh-bells I would sit up in bed and look out to see who it was. Don't you see, I wanted to see Matilda when she came back? The truth was, I was under concern of mind about Matilda, don't you see?" And his eyes sparkled and his mouth pursed up as he thought of that night when he first found out he was under concern of mind about Matilda. "Well," he went on, "I thought I'd speak to her. So the next day, as I was reading, and she was tidying about the room, I said, says I: 'Matilda, I would like a few moments' conversation with you alone. Can I have them?' She said: 'Yes;' and do you believe it, to this day she says she thought I wanted to talk with her about the state of her soul. Well, when we were alone I said, thinking about Caleb Benedict all the time: 'Matilda, are you keeping company with any young man?' You see I wanted to make that sure before I went any further. So she said: 'No, she wasn't keeping company with any young man.' Then I felt better, and proceeded: 'Did you ever say you would never marry a Methodist minister?' She was all taken aback, and said: 'No, she never had said so.'"

"Then," interposed I, "you did some very special pleading, I imagine," thinking he might go into interesting and instructive details; but he was too weary.

"Well," continued he, "we talked matters over, did Matilda and I, and at last I proposed. Then she said I must ask her father. I went to her father and told him all about it, and he said: 'Well, Bro. D., your prospects in life are not very encouraging. Methodist preachers have a pretty hard time of it.' 'Yes,' said I, 'but we must trust in the Lord for all that.' Then he said he was willing, if I could get the consent of Matilda's great-parents. So I did, and then it was all settled. And, do you believe, I was so bashful that I never kissed Matilda till after we were married! And now, after fifty years, she's as good a woman as she was when I first knew her, and I love her as I did then. I tell you, my young brother, a good wife is from the Lord! Go right on and do your duty, and he will bring a helpmate for you."

I wish I could tell as he did. His experiences in courtship were not, on the whole, very romantic; they suggest no poetic fancies, but they were eminently practical. It's a question in my mind whether there would not be a decrease in "unfortunate marriages" if our young men would wait until they really "come under concern of mind" about somebody, instead of being satisfied with a whiff of fancy-free flirtness.

Old Bro. D. and Solomon spoke wisdom when they told us where to look for a wife.

The Loves of the Flowers.

A scientific writer has knocked from under our feet another æsthetic prop. Hitherto it has been taught in all orthodox Sunday schools, and in all poetic sermons by gushing young divines, and by all poets with an eye to nature and beauty, that the color and odor of flowers were expressly designed to please the eye and the olfactories of men and women. It is now, however, asserted and quite conclusively demonstrated that the odors and tints of vegetation have a quite different, as well as a very practical, commonplace, although an ingenious, mission. They are not to please the eye or pleasantly excite the nasal organs of man, but are designed solely to attract the attention of insects. As is generally known by all intelligent people, the operation of fecundation among the flora is, in a majority of cases, accomplished by the transfer of pollen from the male to the female plant. One of the agencies depended on by nature for carrying this pollen is the wind; but, as everybody knows, the wind is not a reliable institution. Nature evidently understood this, and hence she resolved not to rely wholly upon means whose action cannot be relied on. She therefore created bees and other insects, and implanted in them the taste for honey. She then proceeded to distill in each flower a drop of nectar, and so arranged it that the sweet would become available at about the same time the pollen would be ready for distribution. Moreover, she made certain flowers gorgeous in color and fragrant with aroma. The insect in search of honey, and attracted by the rich colors and the odors, enters the flower cup, and, in burrowing around it for sweets, his jacket becomes dusty with pollen. Passing on to another flower, more burrowing and mousing about, he dusts his overcoat of some of the fecundating pollen, which falls upon the required place. It is thus that Monsieur Anther woos and puts himself in communication with Mlle. Stigma; and it is thus that nature generates and perpetuates her flower-children. No clasping of hands here, no sweet propinquity of wooing; no gathering of honey from scarlet lips, as occurs among the sons and daughters of men. Husband and wife among the flowers dwell apart. The gorgeous and fragrant lord of a harem never gazes upon his houris, but sends them his adoration and love tokens by eunuch winds or by chance messengers who stroll along in search of sweets. It is further urged by the scientist who promulgates the theory that self-fecundating plants are colorless and odorless—and which, as a matter of poetic retribution, they ought to be. He further shows that, in cases of plants having an offensive odor, there are insects which are attracted by it—notably the case of the carrion flower, which attracts to it a certain buzzard class of insects, which visit it under the impression that it is decaying meat. Deceived by the foul odor, the carrion fly enters the corolla and performs its work before it discovers that it is humbugged—engaged, as it were, on a false scent.—New York Times.

Deep Sea Soundings.

The curious in such matters will read with interest a brief description of the process by which navigators are able to obtain samples of the earth lying at the bottom of the ocean. The machine used in sounding is known as the Thomson machine, having been patented by Sir William Thomson, of London. It consists of a drum or wheel thirty inches in diameter, on the edge of which is a V-shaped flange in which the wire is wound. This drum is mounted on a platform extending over the ship's side, and has on the axle a register which shows the number of revolutions. There is also an apparatus to control the running out of the wire, and another for reeling in the wire. The sounding-cup is the invention of Commander Belknap, of the United States navy. It consists of a rod about two feet long, with an auger at one end and a sliding cup, which, when the rod descends, incloses the auger and retains the mud, ooze or gravel which is collected. To the rod is connected a fifty-five pound shot, and the material used for lowering and raising is the No. 22 piano wire, weighing fourteen pounds to the mile. The wire is made to run slowly at first, the velocity being gradually increased. When bottom is reached the drum stops turning, but with the motion of the ship will start again, and make three or four turns in a sluggish way, which to the experienced is a sure sign that the sinker is on the bottom. Sometimes, when the ship is rolling badly, the drum will come almost to a dead stop, and those unaccustomed to the machine would think that the sinker had struck, but in a moment the drum starts again, and runs more rapidly than ever. The machine itself is so simple, and occupies so little room, that any cruiser might carry one as a part of her outfit, and make soundings from time to time, when getting up steam in calm weather, or for the purpose of going into port.

Commodore Ammen is now having manufactured some piano wire weighing twenty pounds to the statute mile, which is designed for use in the upper spices, where the depth is two thousand fathoms or more. This will decrease the liability of breakage and consequent loss of large amounts of wire.

With the above machine and apparatus Commander Belknap has recently taken a series of deep sea soundings in the Pacific, the result being an important addition to geological science, together with more valuable information as to ocean currents.

BIRDS OF PARADISE.—The birds of Paradise received their name from the idea, entertained at one time, that they inhabited the region of the Mosaic paradise. They live in a small locality in Australasia, including Papua or New Guinea, and a few adjacent islands. They are not easily tamed and kept confined, and few have been brought alive from their native locality. Mr. Beale had one at Macao, China, that had been in captivity nine years; but very few have been carried to Europe, although specimens of the skins and prepared birds were taken more than three hundred years ago. In form and size they somewhat resemble our crow or blue jay, but some are smaller. They are usually included in the tribe of cone-bills, though their bills are quite slender for that group, and a little compressed. The bills are covered at the base with downy or velvety feathers, which extend over the nostrils; their wings are long and round; the tail consists of ten feathers, two of them, in some species, very long; legs and feet very long, large and strong; outer toe longer than inner, and joined to the middle one toward the base; hind toe very long; claws long and curved. But they are chiefly remarkable for the wonderful development of various parts of their plumage, and for the metallic splendor of its rich hues. The sides of the body, and sometimes of the head, neck, breast or tail, are ornamented with lengthened, peculiarly developed and showy feathers.

SEEK to be lamb-like; without this all your efforts to save others will be as sounding brass and tinkling cymbal.

Religious Intelligence.

THE General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, at its late session, expelled four ministers for drunkenness and disorderly conduct.

THE union of the different Presbyterian bodies in Canada is now virtually accomplished. It is believed that every minister and congregation will come into it.

THE Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church reports an income for 1873 of $64,309. Its appropriations for the present year amount to $60,836.

THE ship which carried the first Baptist missionaries to India, fifty years ago, also carried a sailor-boy, named James Chrislie, who was converted during the voyage. The sailor-boy rose in due time to be a Christian captain, and at his recent death, in Albion, New York, bequeathed $10,000 to the Baptist Missionary Union.

THE Rev. Robert Bruce, of the Church Missionary Society, has a school of one hundred and fifty boys, including six Mohammedans, in Ispahan, Persia, all studying Scripture in the midst of a Mohammedan land. His labors are mainly among the Armenian residents, and he is now preparing a catechism to give the Persians a notion of the Protestant belief.

THE Presbyterian Church South is enjoying a healthy growth, according to its statistics, which are just published. There are 12 synods, 61 presbyteries, 4,056 ministers, 1,784 churches—an increase of nearly 200; 109,956 communicants. The total contributions for 1873 amount to $1,111,461. The increase in the number of members is 12,000, of whom 8,000 have been added by the union of the Old School Synod of Missouri with the church.

THE famous Cheney case, in Chicago, seems approaching a settlement. Closely following the death of Bishop Whitehouse comes the decision of the Chicago court, denying the application of the late Bishop for an injunction restraining Dr. Cheney and his congregation from further occupancy of Christ church. Pending further proceedings, this places Christ church in the hands of Bishop Cheney and his congregation of the Reformed Episcopal Church.

AT THE late meeting of the General Assembly of the South a plan was adopted for the organization of a separate church for the colored people, and Zion church, in Charleston, South Carolina, has taken the incipient steps to connect itself with the new organization. Dr. Girardeau, the pastor, has accordingly retired, and the church will be served by a colored pastor. A few other colored societies have taken similar steps. The Cumberland Presbyterians are likewise organizing their colored communicants into a separate church.

SECESSIONS FROM ROME.—A correspondent writes: "A commercial traveler was lately boasting, in a refreshment-room in a north of England town, that we never hear of secessions from Rome, but we do constantly hear of secessions to Rome. The keeper of the refreshment-room and his wife were both of them teachers in my Sunday school. He, overhearing this boastful and but too common remark, quietly said: 'It is quite true that you never hear of secessions from Rome, but there are such, nevertheless. There are many such seceders in our school, and my wife has now in her class four young women, all of whom have renounced Rome.' Can the disquiet of many not be relieved by a few more such instances as this?"

THE seven great missionary societies of England and America, represented at the recent Calcutta Missionary Conference, have invited the boards of these societies to unite in sending to India two able ministers alternately from Great Britain and the United States, to work in a catholic and evangelistic method among the various missions. The plan proposed is that the two visitors might leave home in autumn, preach in most of the large towns of Ceylon, Madras, Bengal, the Northwest and Bombay, besides holding less formal intercourse with all classes—European, Eurasian and Native. The seven months of the European and American autumn, winter and spring would suffice. If the societies would pay the traveling expenses Anglo-Indian hospitality would do the rest.

THE seventieth anniversary of the British and Foreign Bible Society was held at Exeter Hall on Wednesday, May 6, the president, the Earl of Shaftesbury, in the chair, and on the platform many gentlemen of distinction, laymen and clergymen. Among them were the Earls of Chichester and Harrowby, several bishops of the Established Church, the Dean of Chester, etc. The Rev. Bishop Harris was expected to be present as delegate from the American Bible Society, but was providentially prevented from attending, not being able to reach London in time. The Rev. S. B. Bergne led the devotional services, and the Rev. Charles Jackson read the annual report. It appears that the receipts of the society were, in all, £220,766 18*s.* 2*d.*, and the total expenditures £210,183 14*s.* 9*d.* The issues of the society, at home and abroad, were 2,654,080 copies, making the total issues of the society, since its organization, 71,131,111 copies.

THE public worship regulation bill passed its third reading in the House of Commons. The London Times, which, as always, is on the side of power, says concerning it: "The development of Ritualism may be traced to two causes acting together—the love of authority and the love of superstition. The operation of the bill in reducing to moderate proportions the independence the clergyman now enjoys will cut at the root of the mischief. It must be admitted that no law will extirpate the love of superstition, which is the second spring of Ritualism, but Mr. Richard's panacea of congregationalism cannot touch this evil. It flourishes in the United States and in the United Kingdom. But the conviction that superstition will survive the passing of the recorder's bill is no reason why it should be harbored and protected within the Church of England, and it is desirable, in the interests of public education and public advancement, that the encouragement now given it by the cumbrous and unwieldy character of our ecclesiastical procedure should be withdrawn."

THE venerable missionary, Rev. Titus Coan, in a recent letter to a friend engaged in the Madagascar mission, gives an account of his tour of exploration in Patagonia, forty years ago, in which he shows the advantage of trust in Providence over trust in gunpowder. He landed with a single companion in the Straits of Magellan, the captain being unwilling to risk any of the ship's company among the treacherous savages. After two days' search they fell in with natives, who, having thoroughly examined the strangers, to see if they were armed, took them under their protection and gave them horses to ride on. Under their escort, Mr. Coan and his companion, during three months, visited the camps of nearly all the clans on the Eastern Patagonian Pampas. They were ignorant of the language, had no interpreter, and communicated with the savages only through signs. Their defenselessness was, under God, their shield. Later, seven armed missionaries were starved to death on Terra del Fuego, because they feared to go to the natives and the natives feared to come to them. At a still later date eight missionaries, said to have been armed, with a view to procure game, were slaughtered by these same savages.

THE Synod of the (Dutch) Reformed Church, at its late meeting, took action upon the various projects which have been submitted to it of union with other religious bodies. Negotiations with the German Reformed Church were discontinued; as the committee appointed by the (Dutch) Reformed Synod, at its late meeting, had not succeeded in securing a conference with the committee of the German Church. The plan of co-operation in Christian work with the Southern Presbyterian Church, which was matured by committees of the two churches in this city last winter, was heartily approved by the synod. This plan contemplates alliance and combination in the mission-fields, in the work of education in this country and in some other particulars, but does not propose any organic union between the two bodies. The committee was instructed to mature the details of the scheme to be presented to the next synod. The Northern Church had proposed organic union. This was the leading question before the synod, and it was discussed at great length and with considerable heat. Finally the vote was taken, and by sixty to fifty the committee was forbidden to hold any further conference as to organic union with the Northern Presbyterian Church. Subsequently a proposition to enter into a co-operative alliance with the Northern Church, similar to that effected with the Southern Church, was unanimously carried. It thus appears that the old Dutch Church is not yet quite ready to be merged into the larger Presbyterian body; but the small majority by which this action was negatived indicates that the time of this union cannot be far distant. The revised constitution of the body was finally adopted and the church is now under its amended law.—Independent.

A CORRESPONDENT of the London Daily News has been interviewing Dollinger, to develop his views in reference to church union. The great Old Catholic leader is of the opinion that an understanding can be easily reached between his church and the Anglican and Episcopal churches, but that the case is more doubtful as regards other Protestant churches. According to the correspondent, he seems to think that the disfavor with which Ritualism is looked upon by the great body of the Anglican Church would be to some degree extended to any step which might be taken in favor of union with the Old Catholics. He made, however, a clear distinction between the two parties among the Ritualists themselves. "We have," he said, "no sympathy with those who are Ritualists merely for the sake of certain questions of liturgy, form of vestments, position of altars, etc.; but with those who lay stress upon doctrine, and upon keeping entire the chain of tradition of the ancient church, we are closely connected." The aim of the unionists will therefore be for the present simply to come to an understanding with distinguished leaders in the Anglican Church. Then, speaking of the United States, Dr. Dollinger said: "Of all American religious bodies, there is only one whose members we can consider as favorable to the idea—I mean the members of the Episcopal Church. All the other denominations would reject our first principles—that is, of adopting the doctrines and formularies of the ancient church as the common basis of union. The Episcopal Church alone professes to take the same basis; and every step taken to bring about a mutual understanding would be hopeless without such a common basis. Of course, if we said that we have a common ground in Scripture, you are perfectly aware that this would be in reality nothing at all, because endless new disputes would be engendered about the sense of the Scriptures. * * * The impossibility of a union exists only between those who will have no other authority but Scripture, because the interpretation of particular passages is a matter which can never be brought to an agreement. This is the reason why the Protestant denominations of England and of the United States cannot be taken into account when the question of forming an ecclesiastical union is raised. They cannot unite among themselves, and they cannot unite with any of the older Christian bodies." In answer to the question whether the aim intended was more than simple friendly intercourse, Dr. Dollinger said: "More than that. We must come at last to what is termed sacramental communion, which presupposes a mutual understanding in regard to essential articles of faith."—Methodist.

The Lord of Hosts.

This oft-repeated title is usually in such connection as to indicate the import which God himself and his inspired servants attached to it. Strength, boundless resources, help, protection and activity in the providential government of the world are among the ideas suggested. That the reference may have been sometimes to the heavenly bodies is probable. It raises the mind to the highest conception of the divine power, and wisdom to think of him as the Maker of the stars, and as "upholding them by the word of his power." They are under control and guidance, and are in perfect obedience to his laws. Surely he who sustains and marshals this vast array of worlds can be worshiped, adored, trusted.

The term also turns the thought of the devout to those spiritual intelligences which minister before God at the heavenly court. God dwells between the cherubim. The seraphim stand above the throne, and they cry one unto another: "Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hosts." There are principalities and powers in the heavenly places, also thrones and dominions—cherub, seraph, angel. Ranks, degrees and orders there are, and the number of these glorious beings may not be estimated. The human family, embracing all the generations from first to last, would make a small community in comparison. The Lord of these hosts is our God. They are obedient to his word and subjects of his government. They wait before him, and minister in the economy of providence, doing his will throughout the bounds of the universe.

As God's people are described as the hosts of the Lord, so, of course, he is the Lord of hosts with reference to the relation which he sustains to them. In their militant state especially, as they went up harnessed from Egypt, and as they subdued their enemies and marched victoriously into the promised land. It is as soldiers of the cross that Christians look to Christ as the captain of their salvation. The mysterious and wonderful man who met Joshua by Jericho, with his sword drawn in his hand, announces his character and mission: "As captain of the hosts of the Lord am I now come." The army of the Lord, composed of the millions of believers, has this divine Head. It is under his command and panoplied by his grace. Through his leadership they are advancing to the conquest of the world. The vision that the opening of the seal disclosed was one of gospel triumph: "And I saw, and behold a white horse; and he that sat on him had a bow; and a crown was given unto him; and he went forth conquering and to conquer."

Thus God is the Lord of hosts, Lord of the starry worlds, Lord of the angelic communities, and Lord of the elect company that compose the church on earth. These are all in his hand, wielded by his authority, and directed in their ministries to the perfect consummation of his plans of wisdom and mercy. A dominion so vast and multiform exceeds all our thought, and the service and praise which these stupendous hosts render assume the proportions of almost infinite grandeur and power. Besides their perfect quality, their magnitude places them among the sublimest conceptions of the human mind.

With this exposition which God's relation to certain aspects of creation and government suggests, it is allowable to connect a view of the divine character that these creations only serve to interpret. God is a host in himself. If there were no stars, nor angels, nor men, his power would not be less, his infinite fullness, his boundless resources would not be limited. However helpful and encouraging to think of his hosts, and the sway of his scepter over them, still our trust is in him. We look through and beyond the shining ranks which surround the throne to him who dwells in light, unto which none may approach. He, rather than his angels, "is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble." The eye of faith looks directly to him, and realizes the immediate presence and support of him who is above all thrones and dominions. "The Lord of hosts is with us." Not so much through and by his hosts, but rather through himself from whom these hosts have their being. Not altogether, nor chiefly, that he needs and commands their service for us, but that he who has framed and governs all is able and willing to help and save us.

In any case God's providence in the world is affirmed only with an amplitude which gathers all worlds and all creatures under the shadow of the Almighty. The Lord of hosts is with us, but he is also with all worlds, and governing and controlling the universal empire with unity of purpose and end. He touches us individually, as a race, as a province of his vast domain. The fires of Sirius, the electric and the luminous pulsation of the interstellar ether, the hairs of our head, the wings of the seraphim and the sparrow's fall, are all within the range of the omnipresent care. Sin has broken in upon us here and elsewhere, and seemingly jostled the moral equilibrium, and brought about the friction of natural evil. We feel the woes of sin; it has to us darkened the face of God and obscured the wisdom of his ways. But his banner over us is love, notwithstanding, and the Judge of all the earth will do right. "Even the Lord of hosts; the Lord is his memorial."

That Mistake.

For the information of a subscriber, and others who may have been exercised on the subject, we would state that the Rev. Mr. Hartzell, who preached that sermon in Chicago, has no connection whatever with the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. He is editor of the Southwestern Advocate, and a minister of the Northern Methodist Church. The Southwestern Advocate is an organ of the Methodist Episcopal Church (North,) published in New Orleans. The Vicksburg Herald quotes from the Chicago Tribune a report of Mr. Hartzell's sermon, and in that connection both papers represent him as editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. We presume neither Mr. Hartzell nor the journals mentioned had any intention in giving currency to this error. As to the matter of the sermon, it accords with the tone and spirit of the paper which Mr. Hartzell conducts, and, we suppose, pretty fairly represents the opinions and animus of the Northern Methodist preachers in our midst. We believe they are in perfect agreement with the Kellogg usurpation, that they go in heartily for the civil rights bill, and that their sympathies are altogether with the oppressors and plunderers of our country. It is well for our people to know where these men stand on the vital questions of the hour, and that the misrepresentation and the vile slanders which find their way North are largely sent abroad through the ministers and church papers of the Methodist Episcopal Church. We give an extract from Mr. Hartzell's Chicago sermon, wishing our readers to remember that he is ex-pastor of Ames chapel, presiding elder of the New Orleans district, Methodist Episcopal Church (North,) and editor of the Southwestern Advocate. The sermon as reported closes as follows:

The special controversy of the Lord with the American people of to-day was caste, just as in 1864 it was slavery. It would be remembered that in that year all that the slaveholders asked for slavery was that it should be let alone. Just so in 1874 the nation asked that caste be let alone. The question of the casting out or cherishing of the sin of caste was before the people to-day. People said that it was a small matter whether a black man be admitted to a hotel, or to the street car, or to political position, but the question had a deeper meaning. There was no question that the South was putting on its old habits of vengeance. This talk of a war of races was a myth. The talk of the negroes arising was mere fabrication. The negroes were anything but a blood-thirsty people. They hardly knew what hatred was. On the other hand, the recent utterances of Jefferson Davis and others showed that the South still held with tenacity to the idea that the natural relations of the white and the negro were master and slave, and that the freedom of the latter was the result of the war rather than an act of common justice. The present condition of the negro down South was a proof of his ability to succeed. It looked in the South as if in ten years the country would be ahead of what it ever was before.

The speaker stated that men and women who went South, and were not imbued with Southern ideas, were ostracised. Everything showed that there was present in the South the same spirit which, in a former time led to acts of cruelty and oppression to the negro and his friends. And, as in former times, the object was to secure the perpetuity of slavery. So to-day the idea was to bring the negro as nearly back to slavery as possible. When the South said that it wanted white men in its Legislatures, it meant men who were hostile to the United States. Even the religious papers were imbued with the same sentiments.

The speaker did not go into the question of the Louisiana election of 1872, but referred to the recent troubles in Louisiana as the fault of the old rebel population of the State. It had been said that the South has been oppressed. This sentiment has been very common in the North. He would tell the audience that there never had been such a piece of magnanimity as that displayed by the United States to the South since the end of the rebellion. All they asked the vanquished States to do was to reconstruct themselves on the basis of personal freedom. This they refused to do, because they could not do it the way they wanted. The speaker held that, if the men of the North said to those of the South that the black man should be treated equally by them, there would at once be an end of the troubles which were marring the progress and prospects of the country.

The next Presidential election would not be settled on a question of finance, or any other than the passage of the civil rights bill. The immediate duty of the nation to the South was the defense of the rights of the poorest of the poor, even though he were the blackest of the black. Every one should try to win away the South from their folly—to win them away from their sinful hatred of the black—and the best way for them to do this was for them to banish caste from among themselves.

Letter from Mexico.

CITY OF MEXICO, Sept. 10, 1874.

MR. EDITOR: I suppose I owe you an apology for my long silence. I have sent Bishop Keener regularly full and minute reports, with observations thereon, hoping his stronger pen would find time for reviews for your columns. My heart swells within me, and thought goes out in almost constant prayer, for material means to feed the famishing millions. If the church fails to improve the present opportunity, I fear much that her day will pass, and in the great and final day her garments will be stained with the blood of souls.

When I reached Mexico, on the first day of last January, we had but two native men at work—Rev. Alejo Hernandez, and a young man in training under him. This young man, however, soon left us for service among the Presbyterians. We have now six earnest and zealous missionaries at work. In addition to this number of preachers and congregations, schools, day, night and Sabbath, would have sprung up almost like magic; and of the end, what man can tell?

I have kept no particular account, and therefore cannot tell the number of intelligent and earnest men who, from far and near, have applied for work in the gospel. I have been unable to say: "Go ye also into the vineyard." Entire congregations, preachers and people, have knocked for admittance, and pressed their way to our doors. In one instance the chief officer of an interesting town tendered us the use of an old Catholic church, rent free, and plead for the gospel to be brought to his people. We could not accept the liberal offer, nor heed his earnest prayers, because we had no money. I have before me now an interesting letter from a congregation in a neighboring city of fifteen or twenty thousand people, asking admittance into our fold. This congregation was organized five years ago by the people themselves, and has maintained itself ever since, except about six months of the time it received foreign aid. Having its own preachers, yet it asks for a foreign pastor, giving a good scriptural reason—that a prophet is not without honor except in his own house and among his own people. You can judge something of the travail of my soul when I find it impossible to enter these open doors. If the sincere Christians of our church and the friends of humanity everywhere could have but a glimpse of what is here open before our eyes daily, they would not wait to be argued and plead to duty. Our Missionary would have no existence, and "prize essays" would be a work of supererogation. Free-will offerings would be abundant, and God's great name glorified. Oh, that the church would but prove the truth of his word: "And God is able to make all grace abound toward you; that ye always, having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work." When we measure our gifts by our poverty, and dole out to the Almighty the pittance which we think we are able to give, we distrust his word, and cut off supplies just at the point where we propose to save.

I repeat, you can imagine something of the agony of heart. On the one hand the people beg for help and pray for a purer gospel. Young men, noble-looking, engaging in manners, who with proper training would become bright and polished shafts, seek places in the vineyard of our God. And on the other hand I have been and am still so limited in means as to force me to shut the door in their faces.

I know our people—God bless them, for they are a noble people—have been greatly afflicted by flood and by drouth. Full-grown "hard times" is their companion; taxed by greedy and rapacious adventurers until the thing taxed is hardly of equal value to the taxes. But, with all this, "where there is a will there is a way." When it is in the heart of man to devise liberal things for the Lord, the Lord will provide liberally for man. The great future will reveal to many of us the startling fact that we were the builders of our own misfortunes. Take heed and beware of covetousness. A man's life does not consist in the earthly abundance he possesseth. An exhortation from this distance will be too cold by the time it reaches you, if ever at all, to have much life in it. And besides, as strong presentation and finished construction seem to be necessary in the premises after all talk, you have plenty whose special business it will be to talk face to face with the people, and urge upon them the work of foreign missions.

One of the most hopeful signs in our mission work is our school success. If there ever was a time, and ever a people, when the rising and future generation is the hope of the gospel, this is the time and this the people. The grown-up people, heartily indorsing the change, and rejoicing in the advent of a pure spiritual Christianity, will almost mournfully say to you: "It has come too late for us. It will be well for our children." So thousands feel, and hence the mighty flood of indifferentism prevailing, fully and strongly, among the upper classes, terminating more in formalism among the middle and lower classes. I opened the school on May 26, with one teacher and eight or ten scholars, and to-day—a little over three months—we have enrolled one hundred and sixty, with an average attendance of one hundred. I have two teachers and a superintendent. Already I have selected in my mind several future preachers and teachers from the throng, and in prayer specially commend them to our Father. There are as many bright-faced, intelligent boys and girls in our school as can be found anywhere among the same number. Of course I visit the school often, and it would amuse you to witness the hand-shaking when I enter. Sometimes I have three or four little hands in mine at once. They all know me, from the little four-year-old to the half-grown boy or girl. They recognize me quickly also on the street, and I have to ask if they belong to the school to be able to locate them. With the means in hand I could have two or three other schools just as good.

In connection with our day school I have opened a night school for adults. There is a fine attendance, and promise of much good. It is really touching to see grown men, some of them in the middle of life, perhaps ill clad and rough in appearance, but with warm, true and sympathetic hearts, taking their first lessons in the elementary branches. I never think of or behold the scene without feeling thankful that it is my lot to be made the humble instrument in doing such a good work.

A dear, sweet little girl, whose father is a member of the Mississippi Annual Conference, gave me a small donation—the produce of a missionary hen—saying: "Bro. Daves, I send my mite for the Mexican mission. Accept it, please, and do good with it." I cannot tell you the many thousand times I have in fancy connected that little donation with these poor children. It has seemed more precious to me than many larger sums. May our Father bless the dear, sweet child. Let her know that her little Mexican missionary contribution is out at compound interest, and will doubtless bring her many precious benedictions.

Our hearts long for home associations, and our thoughts grow weary thinking of the delightful intercourse of the past. I almost grow envious as I think of the approaching Conferences—the annual preacher-jubilees.

If I do not write often, find the cause in the above. Let our preachers and people remember, this fall and winter—their harvest-time—Mexico.

We are much indebted to our good Bro. Brown, of the Mississippi Conference, for his liberality in proposing to take a Mexican youth to board and educate. Are there not one hundred Browns in the Church South who will come immediately to the front? Surely not less. In one of my early letters I brought this matter before the church—more important, I think, than any suggestion submitted. Permit me to express my sorrow and disappointment that the matter has attracted so little attention. Bro. Brown's kind offer, brought me by the last mail, is the first and only reference made to it, privately or publicly.

Wishing to be remembered in much love to the church, I am,
Very affectionately,
JOEL T. DAVES.

THE New York Independent, in an article on the President and Louisiana, says:

Condemning the insurgents for their folly in attempting to do what was not practicable, we are glad to commend them for "their sober second thoughts" in not attempting to do what would have been open war upon the government of the United States. The moment the President appeared upon the scene, clothed with the authority of law and executing its behest, Kellogg—that official poltroon and contemptible usurper—went out of sight.

The complication which the case now presents consists in the fact that the equity and the right, as determined by the constitution and laws of Louisiana as they were in the fall of 1872, when this contest began, are clearly on the side of those whom the President has treated as insurgents, while his official opinion and position place the authority and power of the government on the side of Kellogg and his associates. The natural sequel of the President's position and course is the re-establishment of Kellogg in office and the maintenance of his authority against all resistance. This is the proper thing to be done on the supposition that he is really the lawful Governor of the State, and the only thing which can be done in consistency with the President's views, unless they undergo a very material change.

The fact, however, is none the less real that this course continues and in this sense perpetrates upon the people of Louisiana one of the most wanton political outrages of modern times. If anything can be demonstrated by evidence, then it has been proved before Congress and before the country that Kellogg is a usurper, never legally elected; never legally declared to be elected; depending in the outset upon the unlawful orders of Judge Durell; unfortunately for the interests of justice, backed up and supported by the President; and maintained in office as Governor de facto by Federal power, with no just claim de jure. He is Governor only by the subversion of State law. We do not now argue this point, having done so frequently on previous occasions. We simply state the fact, pronouncing it to be one of the most stupendous political iniquities ever committed against a free people. We are aware that this is strong language. We mean to make it so. Justice in respect to the merits of the Louisiana controversy requires that it should be so.

—The President's mistake in the outset of the difficulty has placed Louisiana in this most deplorable condition. We do not impeach his motives or doubt that he acted conscientiously; but that he gravely erred when, on the twelfth of December, 1872, he recognized Pinchback as the acting Governor of Louisiana and Judge Durell's Legislature (for it was nothing else) as the lawful Legislature of the State, and thus laid the basis for putting the non-elected Kellogg into power and creating the necessity for maintaining his power, is to us perfectly clear. The report of the Senate committee on this whole question shows that Pinchback had no title to office and Kellogg no title. Both of them were usurpers, and they should have been so treated by the President, if he had anything to do with them at all. Congress, too, being fully advised of the facts, as brought out in this report, and also asked by the President in a special message on the twenty-fifth of February, 1873, to take some action on the subject, with the admission on his part that recent investigation had made it doubtful even in his own mind as to who were elected by the people, nevertheless, by a most shameless disregard of its duty, omitted to do anything. The mistake of the President continued and the omission of Congress to furnish any remedy have compelled the people of Louisiana for now nearly two years to submit to a government in its executive department which they never elected and which the proper authority never declared to be elected.

There ought to be a remedy for such a state of things. Facts clearly show that the people, if left to themselves, would supply a remedy by resorting to the right of revolution. This, however, as we have already said, the general government should not tolerate. What, then, shall be done? To our apprehension, it is entirely clear that the government, even by a special session of Congress, if necessary, should call into exercise its guaranty power, and give to the people the practical equivalent of the revolutionary right, by a peaceful election under its own authority. This is what ought to have been done when the Senate committee, on this twentieth of February, 1873, informed the Senate "that there is no State government existing at present in the State of Louisiana." No action being then taken, Congress at the last session ought to have adopted Senator Carpenter's guaranty bill. It is still the thing which ought to be done. There is no other road out of this muddle that is consistent with justice. The continuance of Kellogg in office some two years longer by Federal bayonets is an idea which ought not to be entertained for a moment. Such a mistake as that under which Louisiana now suffers need only to be repeated sufficiently often to make State elections nothing but a mere sham, and turn the general government into a great engine of political wrong.

In another place the Independent further says:

While we hold the Republican party, through its President and Congress, responsible for the terrible breakdown of popular government in Louisiana, and while we are willing to be recognized as a thoroughly Republican newspaper, we yet decline to be held in any sense or degree responsible for that collapse. We call our readers to witness that from the first we have protested and continued to protest, first, against the usurpations of the Republican party in Louisiana, and then against the action of the President and of Congress in supporting and maintaining this usurpation. We have during the past twenty months repeated these our protests, till our readers were weary and we were ashamed to speak more. We now have the sad satisfaction of seeing it proved that we did not speak too soon, too earnestly nor too often. We have held all along, as we hold now, that nothing else has occurred in American history to discredit so deeply our boasted theory of republicanism. A government returned by a fraudulent canvassing board which had no returns to canvass, has usurped for nearly two years the role of the State. It happened to be Republican. Had it been Democratic, there is not a particle of doubt that it would have been put down in two days. At last a popular uprising overthrows the usurpers; but the President, being committed to the usurpation by his own act and the action and non-action of Congress, is compelled to restore it. If this be the republicanism of the Republican party, we want none of it. We believe it is not. It shall not be, if we can help it. The President may hesitate to convoke Congress in this supreme emergency, that it may undo the consequences of its own neglect; but Congress meets in three months, and must then do tardy justice. What a pity that it did not dare or care to do right at first, and save this disgrace! Perhaps it needed this lesson.

MAHOMET ALI was a barber.

Tragic Death of Judge Byrd.

Rev. Dr. Andrews furnishes the Nashville Christian Advocate the following sketch of this honored Christian gentleman:

SELMA, ALA., Sept. 25, 1874.

MR. EDITOR: It is likely that by telegraph you have heard of our calamity. Alabama mourns the loss of one of her most honored and estimable citizens, and our church weeps for one of her best, most intelligent and useful members.

Judge William McKendree Byrd was instantly killed at half-past four o'clock yesterday morning by the falling of Waxahatchie bridge, on the Selma, Rome and Dalton railroad, about seventy miles from this city.

The day before he left us in excellent health and spirits to go to Columbiana to render a final decision in a case of arbitration, in which a large amount was involved, and on which he had been laboriously engaged all the year. He was returning home, and had been on the cars but a few minutes when the accident happened. The bridge was a new one, of the Howe truss order, and built of heart pine, and was regarded by the railroad officials as perfectly safe. There is some mystery about its falling. Five persons have died—among them a Congregational minister of Marion—and thirty or more were wounded, some of them severely. The mystery is how any escaped with their lives, as the entire train fell sixty feet, and was completely wrecked. It is said to be by far the most serious accident that ever happened on any of the six railroads centering at this place.

Judge Byrd was born in Perry county, Mississippi, December 1, 1819. He was educated at LaGrange College, Alabama, where he graduated with credit and distinction in 1838. For Bishop Paine, who was at that time the president of the college, he ever cherished feelings of the most affectionate regard. His father was a Methodist, and early in life he was taught to respect religion and reverence the church, but it was during his college course that his religious character seems to have been definitely formed. During that period he connected himself with the church, and, though quite young, was appointed a class-leader among his fellow-students. From the principles and faith imbibed at that honored seat of learning he never departed in after-life. Choosing the legal profession, he first settled in Linden, Marengo county, Alabama, one of the richest sections of the South. Here he rapidly acquired celebrity at the bar, and was, for a young man, somewhat prominent in the politics of the State. In 1853, that he might have a more central position and a larger field, he removed to Selma, where he has resided ever since. He has filled the various offices of legislator, chancellor and judge of the Supreme Court of Alabama. He was on the supreme bench of this State when the reconstruction measures of Congress deprived him of his office and his fellow-citizens of his valuable services. On retiring from his official position he entered his solemn protest against the duplicity and tyranny of the Congressional action—a document which will have its place in the history of the State for many generations. Since that time he has been in private life, giving his attention mostly to the practice of his profession in the Chancery Courts, as he was unwilling to appear as an advocate before ignorant negro juries, which now are very common in this part of Alabama.

Possessed of a vigorous mind, well stored with varied learning, and being remarkably industrious and persevering, it is not wonderful that he left his impress upon the community in which he lived and upon the whole State.

He was one of the most honest men I ever knew, and was decidedly a positive character—literally uncompromising toward all forms of peculation in office and dishonesty in dealing.

He was eminently a spiritual Christian, delighting in all the ordinances and services of God's house. When at home and able to be present he was never absent from any service of the church. O how we shall miss him here! He has been an official member perhaps for forty years, and was a member from the Mobile Conference of the General Conference of 1870. He loved the Methodist Church, and has left his only son and three daughters acceptable members of it. He was social and hospitable, and delighted very much in having religious company at his house.

The whole community bear testimony to his integrity and moral worth. Even men whom he antagonized, because he would not be swerved into what he regarded a time-serving policy, give him credit for the highest honor and purest motives. For several years he has been president of the board of trustees of the Southern University, and ardently desired the prosperity of that institution. Truly we have been afflicted in his death. In the prayer meeting, the protracted meeting and in the church council he was always present, and ready to help with exhortation or prayer. He was also liberal with his means.

M. S. ANDREWS.

WE are much obliged to Bishop Keener, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, for the Minutes of the Missouri Conference, save memoir and numbers, which will doubtless be forwarded by Bro. Vincent, the secretary. Particulars in our next. Vote on the new rule: Yeas, 27; nays, 78. Bishops' fund paid in full.

THE vote on the proposed change in the General Rules in the Western Virginia Conference, which met September 16, was taken, on motion, without vote, and resulted as follows: Against the change, 26; for the change, 18.

DEFERENCE is the most complicated, the most direct and the most elegant of all compliments.

THE wealth of a soul is measured by how much it can tell; its poverty by how little.

THE Christian Union, in an article on Louisiana, has the following:

The Kellogg party, however, had one element of support whereby lack of numerical strength was made up by moral influence. Early in the canvass, and before the nominations were made, it became evident that the President of the United States desired the support of the State of Louisiana; for what was known as the "Customhouse party," headed by United States Collector Casey and United States Marshal Packard, appeared as vigorous workers for the success of the Kellogg ticket. At the election which followed there was doubtless a vast amount of dishonest and illegal work done by the partisans of either side; but neither from appearances nor evidence does any preminent man but President Grant seem ever to have believed that a majority of votes were cast for the Kellogg ticket. The Kellogg party, however, counted themselves in, and by the assistance of the army and navy of the United States took possession of the government. The insulted people appealed to the President, but were curtly refused a hearing. They succeeded in getting Congressional consideration, the result of which satisfied the country more fully than ever that the Kellogg government was a usurpation; but a knowledge of the conviction of the President prevented appropriate action, even after the detection of so important a Presidential adherent as Senater Carpenter.

Since the recognition of Kellogg by the President the people of Louisiana have submitted to his rule, but with an evident determination to oppose him and his party at the coming election more determinedly than before. The indications of this feeling have not escaped Mr. Kellogg's notice, and he has devoted all of the influence of his office to the purpose of strengthening his party. His cowardice and unscrupulousness seem to exceed those of the most illustrious carpet-baggers with whom the South has been cursed, for the action he has taken by the assistance of a notoriously venal Legislature exceeds in despotism anything heretofore perpetrated or even attempted in the South. The new registration law, which he carefully left unsigned until after Congress adjourned, lest that body should be roused to anger that would fear not the Presidential displeasure, provides for the appointment for all registrars by the Governor, declares the decisions of these officials to be final, forbids the courts to interfere in any manner, and provides for the appointment by the registrars of "suitable persons to preserve order at the polls."

The passage and approval of this law deprived respectable citizens of any hope of reform by means of the ballot. Unable to longer endure the ominous influence of the Kellogg government, hopeless alike of redress from the courts and from that power which it is provided "shall guarantee to every State a republican form of government," they have apparently resorted to arms and overturned the Kellogg government in the faint hope that a military government—even a military despotism—would be established in its stead. Illegal as was the action of the insurgents, that action was taken under the pressure of motives whose force must be recognized by all intelligent and candid men.

What now is the duty of the national government toward Louisiana? The first and paramount duty, of repressing armed insurrection, has been promptly and successfully discharged by the President. A duty scarcely less imperative remains. The people of Louisiana, having for two years suffered grievous wrongs at the hands of their rulers, are now cut off from the possibility of peaceable revolution at the ballot-box. With such a weapon as the State registration law in the hands of Kellogg and his party the November election will be simply the instrument of a gross usurpation. That the men who have for two years held power by a fraudulent tenure, have tyrannized over the State and have urged it toward financial ruin, should now be allowed under color of law to count themselves into office again, would be as much an outrage as a usurpation by force of arms. For the Federal government to sustain the fraud by its naval and material strength would be a gross dereliction from its rightful office, and a perversion of the government into an instrument of oppression. Having interfered in behalf of legality, the government must not interfere in behalf of justice. It must secure to the people of Louisiana the opportunity for a free and fair election of their own rulers.

WANTED.—Any person knowing the address of Prof. H. Spangiuberg will confer a favor on Rev. Levi Pearce by forwarding said information to Rev. R. J. Harp, New Orleans.

MECHANICS' AND TRADERS' INSURANCE COMPANY.—It will be seen by the fifth annual statement of the above-named company that their premiums amounted to $272,662.72; losses, expenses, taxes, etc., $221,824.57. Net profits, $57,838.10; which, in view of all the circumstances calculated to embarrass business during the year, must, we think, be exceedingly gratifying to the company.

The liabilities of the company foot up only $20,505.04, while the assets (available) amount to $581,735.80. The affairs of this institution are conducted in an able, prudent and conservative manner, and consequently it enjoys the entire confidence of the business community.

No one who has been observant of the steady growth and continued healthy condition of the affairs of this corporation will fail to perceive that the company have been especially fortunate in the selection of their officers. It is not saying too much when we affirm that a more urbane, attentive and prompt corps of officers cannot be found in any institution within our knowledge. Colonel L. R. Coleman, the worthy president, combines, with that suavity of manner which is so highly agreeable to those who are brought in contact, an eminent financial skill in the management of the institution, for which the company are greatly indebted for its success; as they are also to the excellent secretary, Joseph A. White, Esq., for the clear and satisfactory manner in which he has kept the affairs of the company posted. No institution more deservedly enjoys the entire confidence of the mercantile community than this.

We notice that the board have declared ten per cent. interest on paid-in capital, four per cent. dividend on the same, and eighteen per cent. on earned premiums. A good showing.

MEDICAL.

DR. TUTT'S VEGETABLE LIVER PILLS.

THE STARTLING DRAWBACK ON nearly all medicinal agents has ever been that in their process of purgation and purification they have also debilitated the system. To obviate this difficulty physicians have long sought for an agent that would

PURGE, PURIFY AND STRENGTHEN
AT ONE AND THE SAME TIME.

Their research has at last been rewarded by a discovery which fully realizes the fondest desires of the medical faculty, and which is justly regarded as the most important triumph that Pharmacy has ever achieved. This important desideratum is which purifies the blood, and removes all corrupt humors and unhealthy accumulations from the body, and yet produces no weakness or lassitude whatever, but, on the contrary, tones the stomach and invigorates the body during the progress of its operation. It unites the heretofore irreconcilable qualities of a Strengthening Purgative and a Purifying Tonic.

Dr. Tutt's Pills are the most active and searching medicine in existence. They at once attack the very root of diseases, and their action is so prompt that in an hour or two after they are taken the patient is aware of their good effects. They may be taken at any time without restraint of diet or occupation. They produce neither nausea, griping nor debility, and as a family medicine they have no rival.

Price, 25 cents a box. Sold by all druggists.

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT.

THE CRUCIAL TEST of the value of a medicine is time. Does experience confirm the claims put forth in its favor at the outset? Is the grand question. Apply this criterion, so simple, yet so searching, to TARRANT'S EFFERVESCENT SELTZER APERIENT. How has it worn? What has been its history? How does it stand to-day?

Tarrant's Seltzer Aperient
is a household name throughout the United States. It is administered as a specific, and with success, in Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Nervous Debility, Liver Complaint, Bilious Remittents, Bowel Complaints (especially Constipation,) Rheumatism, Gout, Gravel, Nausea, the complaints peculiar to the maternal sex, and all types of Inflammation. So mild is it in its operation that it can be given with perfect safety to the feeblest child; and so agreeable is it to the taste, so refreshing to the palate, that children never refuse to take it. For sale by all druggists. oc8 2t

CANCER.
IT IS WELL KNOWN that the whole medical faculty of all schools of medicine have pronounced cancers incurable. What sublime effrontery in any person to stand up boldly in the face of all this authority and claim to be able to cure Cancer. To put forth such a claim in the teeth of the medical profession, in the city of Philadelphia, with its world-renowned scientific professors and medical colleges, would be, unless it be substantiated in the most unquestionable manner, a height of impudence rarely attained by mortal man. Dr. Thorpe boldly claims that he can cure, has cured, does cure, and will cure Cancer, as well as diseases of a chronic and scrofulous nature; and, further, that he cures every case taken by him. He does this by a system which no other physician in the world practices. His method of treatment invigorates the body, stirs up the dormant energies of nature, purifies and cleanses the system, and imparts tone and health to all the organs of the body. His method is the most potent ever discovered, and that it is what it is claimed to be will be established to the entire satisfaction of any one who will investigate. Address

TO THE SUFFERERS
WITH RHEUMATISM.
In view of the numberless sufferers afflicted with this painful malady, I feel inclined to offer to the public my "ANTI-RHEUMATIC MIXTURE," which medicine proves to be the only successful remedy in this line, for it always gives instant relief, and in most cases cures permanently.
During the last fifteen years I have cured thousands of people, in this State and city, of this dreadful disease, with this medicine; and, what astonishes most, the patient recovered by the use of a single bottle of it. This medicine cures nothing but Rheumatism, and should the patient not recover by using the first bottle of it, that patient is not affected with Rheumatism at all. This being the first time of making my discovery known to the public after fifteen years of most successful results, I hope the sufferers will take advantage of this rare remedy, and by doing so add their names to the thousands already cured by it.

The Child's Corner.

SHELLING PEAS.

Passing by the kitchen,
Through an open door,
I espy three children
Sitting on the floor.
Through the open window
Comes the morning breeze,
Fanning them so gently
While they shell the peas.

Little eyes are busy,
Little fingers too,
Picking all the peas out,
Soon as brought to view.
They are free and happy
As birds upon the trees,
Laughing, talking, singing,
While they shell the peas.

Baby's dish has in it
Naught but pods, 'tis true,
But she's just as busy,
And as happy too.
They must learn to labor—
Little ones like these Should have some employment;
Let them shell the peas.

Up at early morning,
By the break of day;
All their work done early,
They'll have time to play.
Children are so happy
When they try to please;
They do much to help us
While they shell the peas.

FOR THE ADVOCATE.

Little Mary.

"Oh, papa, I am so glad we are going to Mississippi to live!" So said little Mary many years ago.

Her father was busy making preparations to leave his native State, and seek a home and fortune in Mississippi, whither dear friends had lately gone and sent the tidings back of good lands, easy labor and fine crops. Little Mary's mother had been toiling many months at the spinning-wheel and loom to fit her family out for the long journey, which was to be made by private conveyance; for this was before the day of railroads, when the great locomotive made his swift-winged flight, bearing travelers over thousands of miles in a few days.

Mary had been very patient in rocking her infant sister, singing her sweet little songs, and often shouting praises to the Savior; for, though she was but four years old, she was a Christian in her young life.

She was a frail and delicate little one, loving and affectionate in her nature, and had entwined herself very closely around her parents' hearts. Now her young heart was all aglow with the thought of the pleasant journey they were soon to enter upon. So happy did she seem that her mother scarcely noticed her weary looks or her pallid cheeks; for disease even then was preying upon her vitals, and prophetic friends had said: "You will never get her to your journey's end." With buoyant hearts and bright anticipations the parents and grandparents, with their families, bade farewell to all their youthful companions, and set out upon the journey that must occupy them at least a month, in that old-fashioned way of traveling by day and camping at night. Little Mary was so enchanted with everything on the roadside—she saw so many beautiful streams, and ate so many luscious fruits of the forest—that she did not complain until the destroyer had made ravages upon her tender frame too plainly to be mistaken. Her parents and relatives then did everything in their power to stay the hand of disease, but ere their trip was half way made little Mary was too ill to travel, and her parents were compelled to stop, that she might have medical treatment.

They took quarters in a beautiful village in South Carolina, where kind strangers essayed to assist the distressed parents in relieving their sick child. Three long weeks they tarried, and the little one bore her sufferings patiently, longing to see the new country, when our heavenly Father called: "It is enough; come up higher." Kind ladies of Greenville made a beautiful shroud to wrap her little body for its burial. Clever citizens brought the little casket, saying: "It is our custom to bury strangers who die in our place." So they gathered together, and with the bereaved parents laid her in their church-yard one beautiful Sabbath evening. Oh, it was bitter grief to put her away in a strange land and think of resuming their journey, never again to see the place where she was laid to rest. The pitying compassion of our Savior alone enabled them to say farewell forever as they passed out, next day, from the lovely wayside village, leaving their sweet little Mary in her narrow home.

Little Mary had an influence, though she was so young, as all good children must. Methinks the memory of the dear child has comforted her patient mother all along the weary way of life. Now she is growing old and ripening for the eternal life. She looks forward to a reunion beyond the skies. She often tells other dear children, who have come into her home, of little Mary, and they must feel purer and happier for having an angel sister. Her father, too, loves to think of that long-lost one from his pleasant home. Often she has nestled upon his strong arm and made his young heart throb with pride; but many years have fled since then, and he is nearing the close of another journey. The silver strands that once waved in jetty curls upon his noble brow tells us that he cannot linger much longer upon the shores of time. O that he may be as ready to meet his little angel as she must be anxious to give him a welcome in her heavenly home.

Had little Mary lived until now she would have been a grown woman; but it pleased the all-wise Father to make her a child-angel in heaven, and she is still remembered as little Mary.

The little brother who shared her joys and sorrows, and was her constant companion while she was on earth, has dear little children of his own, to whom he loves to tell the story of his gentle sister. No doubt the influence of that sweet sister has made him pure and noble in his aspirations, and will help him at last to obtain an inheritance with her in immortal bliss. She has sisters and brothers here who never saw her, but they love to hear about her, and we hope they are trying to live a holy life, that they may see and know her in the glory-land.

Precious is the memory of little Mary, who awaits us on the shining shore. D.

Johnny's Conversion.

The following account of the conversion of a little boy, as related by his father, will, we are sure, interest our little readers, and, we trust, be blessed to them:

"When my child was about three years old, and while speaking to him of a divine Savior, I said to him: 'Johnny, the Lord Jesus came into the world to save sinners—little sinners like you, as well as big sinners.' He looked up and said: 'What is a sinner, papa?' 'You are a sinner, Johnny.' 'No, I am not, papa.' I don't know what a sinner is.' I described some of his little faults; but without applying the description, and remarked: 'Any little boy who does so is a sinner. These things do not make him a sinner; but they show that he is a sinner; for, if sin was not in him, it would not come out in this or in any other way.'

"With blushing face and flowing tears he sobbed as though his little heart would break. Laying my hand gently on his head I asked him, with tenderness, what was the cause of his grief; but he only wept more loudly, and clung to me the more. I then asked: 'Have you found out who is a sinner?' 'Yes, papa!' 'Who is a sinner?' 'I am a sinner, papa!' 'Then the gospel is good news to you, Johnny; for it tells you of Jesus, the sinner's friend.' It was my habit to direct his mind to Christ Jesus alone.

"When my child was about seven years old I was occupied, during a few months, in a large village, in making known the gospel of the grace of God. Many poor, neglected sinners were there brought together to hear; and about forty of them were led by grace to know the joyful sound. Infidels, openly immoral persons and gray-headed sinners were of the number saved; and in the midst of these was my own little one, confessing Christ his all in all.

"A few of the particulars of his conversion may serve to show the simplicity of his faith in Christ.

"One evening, after a meeting at which Christ alone was exalted, and God's way of saving sinners through him was declared, my little boy came to me, led by his mother, who said: 'Papa, Johnny wishes to say something to you.' 'Well, my dear,' said I, 'what is it you wish to say?' He replied quietly: 'I believe now, papa.' 'What do you believe?' I inquired, being careful not to anticipate nor suggest. 'I believe, with my heart, that Jesus is the Son of God, and that he died on the cross for sinners; and God the Father raised him from the dead, and he is now at the right hand of God in heaven, Lord of all.' These were his precious words, and he added: 'I do believe this, papa, with all my heart.' Giving thanks to God, I asked my little one this question: 'Are your sins forgiven, Johnny?' 'I don't know.' This was said just as a little child would speak.

"About a week after he came to me with a placid countenance and said: 'Papa, I believe more now.' 'What do you believe now, my dear?' 'I believe, with my heart, as I told you last week, that Jesus is the Son of God who died on the cross for sinners, and that God raised him from the dead; and he is at the right hand of the Father, Lord of all. And I believe that God has forgiven my sins for Jesus' sake. All fear is taken away, papa, and I am now waiting for Jesus to come from heaven.'

"It was a touching sight when, in the midst of a group of rescued sinners, this little one stood and confessed his faith in Jesus, the divine and only Savior of his soul. There stood the infidel and the gray-headed sinner, and, in the midst of such, this little one of seven years old, confessing alike the grace by which they were all equally saved from sin and death, and the value of that precious blood in which their various sins were all and forever washed away."—Pure Streams.

SAYING AND DOING.—Two brothers used to go to school together. One evening they thought they should like to have a holiday the next day; so they asked their father to give them one. He said: "I cannot, because it will put you back in your studies; so, mind you, go to school." One of the brothers said: "Yes, I will;" but the other said he would not, and his father was very angry with him.

The next day the one that said "Yes" played truant, but the one that had refused went to school. Then the father said to them in the evening: "Both of you are in the wrong; but you that promised to go, and broke your promise, are the worse of the two."

Our Father in heaven speaks to us every day, and says: "Do my will;" and whenever we kneel down and say, "Thy will be done," we answer God and say: "Yes, I will." Now if we say we will do God's will, and yet do not try to do it, are we not like the boy that first made a promise and then broke it?

Some people never pray to God at all, and never promise to do his will. Perhaps you are inclined to say: "They are very bad people." But if you promise, and do not try to keep your promise, are you not worse than they?—Parables for Children.

DO NOT let us confound zeal with faith. A man may be zealous yet have little faith. No; we must believe the promises. We must have it engrafted into our being that God is the rewarder of those who diligently seek him. Our faith in the Lord has been such for years that we felt as one would on being told the Lord was in our house, and we had but to open the door to see him face to face.

A MISSIONARY in India says that he regards the conversion of one woman as equal to that of twenty men, so far as their influence in the propagation of Christianity is concerned.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Poultry Parasites.

The use of sassafras wood for perches and nest-boxes has been repeatedly recommended as a preventive of vermin in poultry-houses.

A recent correspondent of the Poultry Bulletin furnishes to that paper an article from the American Farmer of 1819, in which it is most positively asserted that sassafras possesses this virtue. Every year or two this same old story is repeated by theorizing writers on poultry affairs. Why is it that such idle statements so often find their way into print? In this case it must be owing to a misunderstanding of terms, as well as to ignorance of the nature of some of our poultry pests. The term "vermin," as used in the article above mentioned, is explained to mean chicken lice, yet the writer no doubt referred to what was commonly known as "jiggers," or chicken mites; for chicken lice proper live on the bodies of fowls, while the mites infest the perches, and trouble the fowls chiefly at night. The chicken mites are to poultry-houses what bedbugs are to human habitations. They suck the blood of the fowls at night, and hide away in the cracks and crevices of the perches during the day. They belong to the class of spiders; while the chicken lice are true insects, a different class altogether.

In neglected poultry-houses the mites are sometimes found in great numbers crawling over the perches, nests, floors and walls, so that a person dare not enter for fear of being overrun by them. As the true chicken lice are never known to accumulate to such an extent, the sassafras preventive is no doubt meant to apply to these swarms of mites rather than to lice proper; and now the surprise is that this pretended preventive (having no foundation at all for reliability, except in the fertile imaginations of some writers gifted with peculiarly sensitive olfactories) should be so often brought to our notice without calling forth the indignant protest of better informed poultry-keepers against such senseless theories.

We have been in the habit of using sassafras poles in our hen-houses for many years past, because they are here easily obtained, and besides the bark is just about the right roughness to admit of the fowls grasping the perches comfortably; but the mites seem not to be annoyed in the least by the aroma of the sassafras. Even the free use of whitewash will not dislodge them. We have also freely applied sulphur to the perches, but without much effect. The only means by which we have been able to rid our fowls of these pests has been to well saturate the perches occasionally with coal oil. This is applied with an old paint brush. The oil is very penetrating, and quickly finds its way into the crevices and beneath the loose bark.

The same correspondent of the Poultry Bulletin, who has again brought to light this old notion about the virtue of the aromatic sassafras, promulgates this additional piece of information:

"The thousand-and one remedies recommended to free chickens from lice are thrown into the shade by the following safe and effectual mixture: A spoonful each of lard oil and powdered sassafras bark; mix and apply to the head and neck of the chicken, and under the wings and breast of an old fowl. One application of the work carefully done is all that is necessary."

Now the lard oil alone, or common clean lard, will answer every purpose of the above mixture. It is the lard or oil stopping the breathing pores of the lice that kills them so effectually, and the sassafras has nothing to do with it whatever.

Some writers have recommended sulphur and lard for the same purpose, but the lard alone will do the work every time, and the chicks are spared the risks of taking cold and being otherwise injuriously affected by the use of sulphur.—Prairie Farmer.

SNOWFLAKE CAKE.—Take a half cup of butter, two cups of white sugar, four cups of flour, one cup of sweet milk, three eggs, one teaspoonful of cream of tartar, and one-half of that quantity of saleratus. Stir butter and sugar together, add the beaten yolks of eggs, and half the flour with the cream of tartar in it; turn in nearly all the milk, dissolve the saleratus in what is left and add it. Beat the whites of the eggs and mix in; stir in remainder of the flour. Bake in jelly-cake tins. Grate the meat of two fresh cocoanuts after parting off the outer skin; add to them one cup of sugar and the beaten whites of two eggs. Spread between the cakes, which should have been baked in three pans. Heap the cocoanut very high on the top of the uppermost cake, and scatter sugared almonds among it.

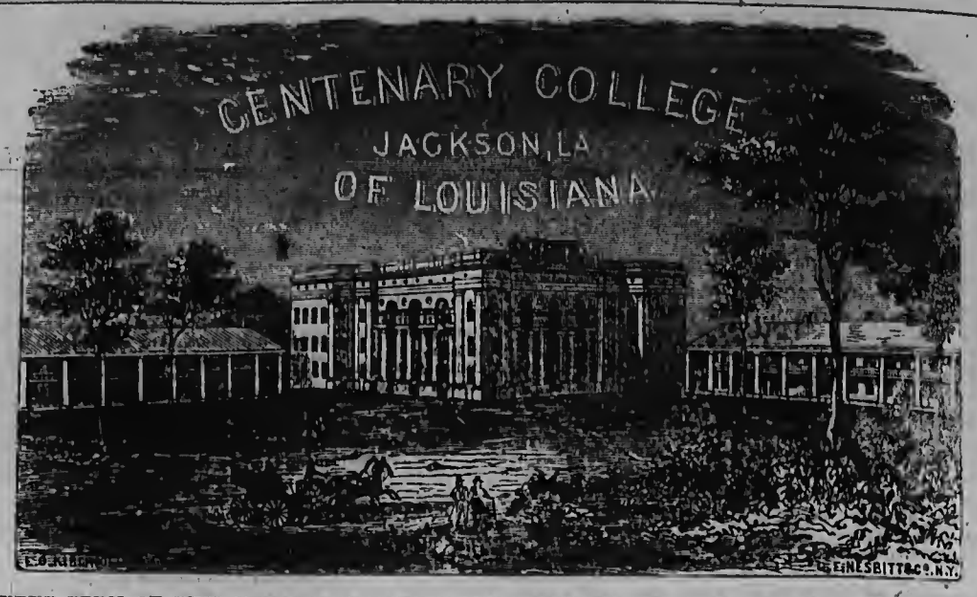
HOW TO BECOME A DRUNKARD.—Every man is in danger of becoming a drunkard who is in the habit of drinking ardent spirits on any of the following occasions: 1. When he is warm. 2. When he is cold. 3. When he is wet. 4. When he is dry. 5. When he is dull. 6. When he is lively. 7. When he travels. 8. When he is at home. 9. When he is in company. 10. When he is alone. 11. When he is at home. 12. When he is idle. 13. Before meals. 14. After meals. 15. When he gets up. 16. When he goes to bed. 17. On holidays. 18. On public occasions. 19. On any day. 20. On any occasion.

COMPOST FOR COTTON.—The Rural Alabamian recommends two parts by weight of cotton seed, one of superphosphate, one of plaster and one of salt, as being the best compost it knows of for cotton. Mix and put under shelter for three months or so, and apply four or five hundred pounds to the acre.

RIBBONS of any kind should be washed in cold suds and not rinsed.

A HOT shovel held over varnished furniture will take out spots.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.



THE NEXT TERM OF THIS VENERABLE INSTITUTION OPENS ON THE FIRST MONDAY IN OCTOBER, 1874.

Faculty.—REV. C. G. ANDREWS, A. M., President, and Professor of Mental and Moral Science, Political Economy and International Law; REV. A. R. HOLCOMBE, A. M., Professor of Mathematics and Adjunct Professor of Natural Science; G. D. WILEY, A. M., Professor of Ancient and Modern Languages; ——, Professor of Natural Science; THOMAS J. KERNAN, A. M., Principal of the Preparatory Department and Adjunct Professor of Modern Languages.

Charges.—Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in College, $60; Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in Preparatory Department, $40; Contingent expenses, $5. A matriculation fee of $5 must be paid on entering any regular college class. One-half the charges must be paid when the student enters; the other half on the beginning of the second term, March 1.

Board.—Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be had in the best families for $20 per month. Day-boarding with the same families, $12 per month. Rooms provided in the dormitories free of rent. Board to be paid in advance at least one month.

Location.—This institution is located in the lovely village of Jackson, about twelve miles from Bayou Sara, in a grove of pine, magnolia, oak and beech. The location is remarkable for its beautiful woodlands, its bland and delightful atmosphere, its pure water, its unrivaled healthfulness, and its cultivated and refined society.

When Founded.—The college was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and ceded to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845.

Alumni.—Its Alumni numbers two hundred and three, and they are to be found in the most honorable and useful stations in the land.

Apparatus and Cabinet.—The college possesses a valuable set of Philosophical, Astronomical and Chemical Apparatus, and also a well-selected Mineralogical and Geological Cabinet. The apparatus includes a Theodolite, Sextant, Compass, Chronometer, Atwood's Machine, Whirling Tables, Electrical Machine, Air Pump, various combinations of the Mechanical Powers, Batteries, Chemical Tests, etc., sufficient for a thorough and extended course of observations and experiments. Steps have been taken by the Board of Trustees to put these in thorough repair.

Literary Societies.—There are two regular Literary Societies connected with the Institution. These are of great utility to young men acquiring a liberal education—improving them in the art of public speaking, making them in some degree familiar with the proceedings of deliberative bodies, and in cultivating systematic business habits. Each Society has a convenient hall and a well-selected Library—about one thousand six hundred volumes each, which, added to the College Library of two thousand volumes, makes over five thousand volumes in the college.

Buildings.—The Trustees are determined to continue the repairs on the buildings till completed. The grand Center Building is a noble specimen of architectural beauty and adaptation to the purposes of its erection. The wings, built of solid brick, present each a front of two hundred feet, with upper and lower galleries the entire length, supported by Tuscan columns, and with the center making in the perspective a continuous front of seven hundred feet.

Preparatory Department.—In the Preparatory Department students are fitted for regular college classes, or may obtain a thorough English or commercial education.

The Faculty.—Its Faculty are men of experience and success in teaching.

Scientific.

A NEW species of squid has been recently described by Prof. Verrill, from Long Island Sound and the southern New England coast, under the name of Soligo pallida. It is not so brilliantly colored as the very common S. Pealii found in the same waters. The S. pallida is abundant, and is taken by fishermen in their nets.

A NEW air machine has lately been put in operation in the House of Commons, London. By means of this apparatus a constant supply of air, cooled to any required degree, even in the warmest weather, can be supplied at the rate of from 60,000 to 90,000 gallons per minute. The house contains about 900,000 gallons of air, so that, when the apparatus is working at its maximum, it is possible to renew the air without sensible draft every six minutes.

DISCOVERY OF GUANO.—Extensive beds of guano have been recently discovered in Peru, to the south of the Province of Tarapaca. An examination of the beds, made by two surveyors, sent out by the Central Board of Engineers of Lima, Peru, has brought out a report showing that several large beds of guano, of excellent quality, exist in that locality. Those which have been surveyed are supposed to contain nearly eight million tons; one of them alone contains five million tons of fine quality. These discoveries not only remove all fear of a present failure in the supply of guano, but indicate that there are yet other undiscovered beds in existence which will provide a practically inexhaustible supply.

LIGHT-WAVES.—Light is a force, and science holds that it is made up of impulses. Nature has been shown to conform all kinds of dynamical effects to rhythmical pulsing, or wave-like action, and the impulses of light are held to be of the same kind. There are, at any rate, measurable effects which are unequal in the different colored lights, and the scale has been determined. In an inch of violet light it is shown that there are no less than 57,000 waves, a statement in which there is nothing extraordinary or impossible, as Nobert, the German optician, is in the habit of ruling his microscopical test-glasses at rates all the way from 100,000 to 200,000 per inch. But, when we are told that the ray enters the eye at the rate of 185,000 miles per second, and, as each inch contains 57,000 waves, that when we are looking at a violet object there are 699,000,000,000,000 beats upon the retina each second, the statement baffles all imagination; we may accept, but cannot understand it.—Popular Science Monthly.

SOME months ago Darwin wrote to his disciple, Fritz Muller, now in Brazil, directing his attention to the habits of the leaf-cutting ants. The reply contains a confirmation of Mr. Belt's observations to the effect that these ants do not feed on the leaves they gather in such vast quantities, but on the fungus which grows on the leaves in their underground chambers. On examining the stomachs of these ants Mr. Muller found no trace of vegetable tissue which might have been derived from the leaves, but only a colorless substance, showing, under the microscope, some minute globules, "probably the spores of the fungus." Again, as to the protective partnership between certain plants and their ant inhabitants, Mr. Muller says he has cut down hundreds of cecropiæ, and never missed the ants, and adds: "I wonder that it had never occurred to me that the trees are protected by the ants; but there can be no doubt that this is really the case, for young plants of cecropiæ, not yet inhabited by ants, are often attacked by herbivorous insects."

PROF. AGASSIZ, and other distinguished men of science, never seemed so much at home as when enunciating the importance of facts, and the dangers of mere speculation; and yet few young naturalists "speculate" more than many of these illustrious personages. A capital illustration of this has recently been furnished by Dr. Regel, of St. Petersburg, who is eminent as a botanist. He has recently published a sketch of the vines of North America, China and Japan, and has come to the conclusion that the European grape-vine, Vitis vinifera, is not a good species, but a hybrid between the common fox grape and the Muscadine (Scuppernongs) of the United States. He contends that these species also grow in Japan, Mantchuria and the Himalayas, and certainly "in the district of Asia, where the cultivation of the vine originated," while the cultivated vine has never been found truly indigenous. This speculation has at least the charm of novelty, and will be encouraging to those who think that by crossing the native grapes they may in time have American grapes equal to the European.

HOW SOIL WAS MADE.—Prof. Agassiz said that all the materials on which agricultural progress depends are decomposed rocks, and not so much those that underlie the soil, but those on the surface, and ground to powder by the glaciers. Ice all over the continent is the agent that has ground out more soil than all other agencies put together. The penetration of water into the rocks, forests, running water and baking suns have done something, but the glaciers more. In a former age the United States was covered with ice several thousand feet thick; and the ice moving from north to south, by the attraction of the tropical warmth or pressing weight of the snow and ice behind, ground the rocks over, which was called soil. These masses of ice can be tracked by the hunter. He has made a study of them in the country as far south as Alabama, but has observed the same phenomenon in Europe, particularly in Italy, where, among the Alps, glaciers are now in progress. The stones and rocks ground and polished by the glaciers can easily be distinguished from those scratched by running water. The angular bowlders found in meadows, and the terraces of rivers not reached by water, can be accounted for only in this way.

On Saturday the market opened with a fair inquiry, and, although the supply was only moderate, the sales during the morning embraced 1,000 bales, mostly at strong prices, with some transactions, however, at easier rates, but later in the day the movement exhibited less animation, and prices were barely maintained, the entire sales summing up 1,900 bales. On Monday the movement commenced under the conflicting influence of an advance of 1-16d. at Liverpool, with sales of 20,000 bales, but a decline of ⅛c. in spots at New York. The latter, however, seemed to have little or no influence, and buyers came forward quite freely, offering previous rates, while factors claimed an advance of ⅛c. This checked the movement, but the sales during the morning nevertheless embraced 1,000 bales, after which, the New York market giving way another ⅛c., and there being a prospect of more copious supplies, factors met the demand more freely, and accepted Saturday's offers, the entire business summing up 2,150 bales. On Tuesday the tenor of the dispatches received from Liverpool and New York was not of a character to have any influence on the movement, and the demand continued fair, but at easier prices, and about 1,200 bales changed hands during the morning, partly at previous rates and partly at a slight falling off, without establishing any quotable decline, after which, factors being free sellers, the advantage was a shade more on the side of the buyers, and closing rates showed a partial decline of ⅛c., to which we have confirmed our quotations. Low middling sold at 14, 14⅛@14¼c., middling at 14⅞@14⅝c., and good middling, full style, at 15c.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 39,631 bales, against 34,852 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 24,028 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 836 to France, of 644 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 2,854 to Great Britain. We quote:

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

CAMP MEETING NOTICE.—A camp meeting will be held in McComb City, commencing on Wednesday, October 14, 1874, and will continue one week. The meeting will be self-supporting, and every person will be expected to provide for their own food and lodging. We have some four or five houses within one-fourth of a mile of the ground, of five large rooms each, which can be had for a small rent for the meeting. Each suite of rooms has ample accommodations for a whole society.

Tent-poles can be had on the ground. The DeSoto House, a temperance hotel, the largest and finest hotel in the State, will furnish board and lodging for the week at $1.50 per day; board, without lodging, at $1.25 per day. Fifty cents per meal, and same for lodging, for transient customers.

No pains will be spared to make this a profitable meeting to the people of southern Mississippi.

Half-fare tickets will be furnished by the New Orleans, St. Louis and Chicago railroad, and the railroad company will send extra trains on Sabbath morning to McComb City, from the north and south, if the people on the road generally wish it. The trains leave McComb City every night going north at half-past ten, and south at eleven P. M.

We have secured the promise of several eminent clergymen to attend the meeting and give us their help. Our help is in the name of the Lord.

Further arrangements will be published when made.

If we have a good rally and success we may make a permanent arrangement for a yearly feast of tabernacles for southern Mississippi.

Ministers will be provided for by the meeting.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. J. HARP, FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH.

VOL. 20. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1874. NO. 42.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, Oct. 6.—The first annual meeting of the Church Congress in the United States was commenced this morning in Calvary church, at half-past ten o'clock, by the administration of the rite of holy communion. Bishop Whipple, of Minnesota, officiated, assisted by several ministers.

NEW YORK, Oct. 7.—The following special to the Herald undoubtedly reflects the views of the President. It comes almost directly from him.

Washington, Oct. 6.—The opinions of Reverdy Johnson and Charles O'Conor, with the rejoinder of Mr. Johnson, on the Louisiana question, have called attention to an important principle in the political government of the country, viz: the right of the President to review his own acts. The President recognizes the necessity of having this subject settled without delay.

The views of both Johnson and O'Conor, published in the Herald, have been carefully read by the President. He does not agree with Johnson that either Kellogg or McEnery was elected, but equivocally declares that the election in 1872 was a mockery, and his only motive in recognizing Kellogg was to save society in Louisiana from anarchy. He does not consider either Kellogg or McEnery, the lawfully elected Governor of Louisiana.

On Friday last, in conversation with a Southern gentleman, he intimated that this would be his position in his next message to Congress, and that he should ask that provision be made for a free and fair election at the earliest possible day, and should give emphasis to what he had already declared—that it was time for the Republican party to unload Louisiana.

NEW YORK, Oct. 7.—The Protestant Episcopal Convention began this morning in St. John's chapel, Varick street, where the religious services of the body were held. The chapel was filled almost to the doors by the congregation. The morning service and communion service of the Episcopal Church were celebrated, many prominent divines participating. Bishop Silwyn, of Litchfield, England, preached the sermon. Bishops Lee, of Delaware, Green, of Mississippi, Atkinson, of North Carolina, Potter, of New York, Clark, of Rhode Island, and McCoskey, of Michigan, also took part.

AUGUSTA, GA., Oct. 7.—The election for members of the Legislature passed off quietly; scarcely any opposition, except in a few counties, to the Democratic candidates. There will not be exceeding fourteen Republicans in both houses of the next General Assembly, giving a Democratic majority on joint ballot of 205.

AUGUSTA, GA., Oct. 9.—So far as heard from, only three counties in Georgia—Liberty, Newton and Glynn—have gone Republican. The indications are that the entire delegation from Georgia in the next Congress will be Democratic.

CHICAGO, Oct. 11.—The petition to the Episcopal Convention for delay in the confirmation of Bishop Seymour, which has been forwarded to New York, is said to have received the signatures of a majority of the members of the late diocesan convention of Illinois. On the other hand, the standing committee of the diocese to-day telegraphed to the General Convention a request to take no notice of the petition.

VINITA, INDIAN TERRITORY, Oct. 12.—President Grant, ex Secretary Borie and others arrived here to-day. Hundreds of Cherokees turned out to see the Great Father. The President made the following speech:

"It affords me great pleasure to visit your beautiful country, which I have never seen before, though I have been far on all sides of it. It is rich in soil and unsurpassed in beauty. Without saying anything at this time about the policy which I think should be adopted with regard to the Territory, I will say I am pleased with such evidences of advancement among you, and I hope that you will be encouraged in cultivating the soil of so rich and magnificent a country."

NEW YORK, Oct. 12.—A dispatch, dated in the field with General McKenzie's expedition, via Fort Worth, Texas, October 11, 1874, says: General McKenzie, after repelling two attacks by Indians on his column, on the twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh of September, marched all night on the twenty-seventh, and surprised, at sunrise the following morning, five companies of Cheyennes and their allies, situated in the Canon Citroblanco, on Jute creek, near the fork of Red river.

A decisive blow was inflicted, and the troops captured and destroyed over a hundred lodges and their entire outfit, comprising robes, munitions of warfare, etc., and 1,434 horses and mules, of which 1,048 were at once killed.

The bodies of four Indians who were killed in the fight were brought in. Our loss was one soldier slightly wounded. General McKenzie is in pursuit with thirty days' supplies.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 12.—The United States steamer Plymouth, which was commissioned at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, on the tenth instant, has been ordered to the north Atlantic station.

Information from Japan of September 4 is that the difficulties between that country and China were still unsettled, and both parties concentrating their forces on the island of Formosa, and at strategic points on their respective coasts. A settlement is thought to depend on the result of the negotiations of the Japanese embassador sent to Pekin.

The northern parties for the observation of the transit of Venus at Oludorastap and Peking arrived at Nagasaki August 31. The Kearsarge was detailed by Admiral Pennock to take the Oladorastap party to their destination, and the Ashuelot the Peking party. The latter sailed from Nagasaki September 3, and the former September 4.

A telegram from the Pensacola navy-yard, dated yesterday, reports no new sick, fourteen convalescents discharged to duty, and the death that day of Private John R. McGowan, of the marine corps.

LITTLE ROCK, Oct. 13.—The election to-day was one of the most quiet and orderly ever held in this city. Not a single disturbance occurred. The vote was quite full. Indications are that the Conservatives have carried the city by 200 majority, and the county by 350 majority. It will be midnight before any official returns are received.

LOUISVILLE, Oct. 13.—Heavy frosts fell on Sunday and last night throughout Kentucky and northern Tennessee, over the great tobacco region. Well-informed men from the country and dealers in this city unite in saying that great damage has been done to the growing crop of tobacco.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Oct. 13.—Scattering returns received here indicate that the Democratic State ticket is elected, and that they also carry the close congressional districts.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Oct. 8.—The Globe, in its issue this afternoon, says a telegram from Shanghai states that war has been declared between China and Japan. We are not able to confirm the report.

A special dispatch to the Standard, from Berlin, states that in consequence of domiciliary visits to the residences of the friends of Count Von Arnim throughout the empire they cannot communicate with him. It is reported, says the dispatch, that these events are connected with a forthcoming book, the early sheets of which are already in circulation in Ultramontane circles in Munich and Vienna. It is now said the missing documents number one hundred.

LONDON, Oct. 13.—A special dispatch to the Pall Mall Gazette from Santander confirms the report of the partial submission of the Carlists.

Juggernaut.

The Juggernaut pilgrims at Serampore are said to have manifested considerable dissatisfaction at the conduct of the Serampore municipal authorities in regard to the cars. The commissioners declined to allow one of the cars, which was in a manifestly rotten condition, to be removed until it had been repaired. The priests sent hundreds of men to work, and kept them at it incessantly for a day and a night. But the next morning the magistrate was still dissatisfied with the condition of the car, and impounded the ropes to prevent any attempt at moving it. "The result was," says the Patriot, "that for the first time within the memory of man the sacred car was not drawn on the day of the festival." But by the wise action of the authorities in preventing the removal of the car in its unsafe condition, there can be no doubt that many lives were saved. The magistrate, who has thus been the indirect means of preserving the lives of a number of his fellow-creatures, is covered with abuse, and accused of "conspiring to interfere with the religious observances of the people."

A NOBLE example in behalf of missions to the heathen, says the Christian Intelligencer, is that which was recently set to Christians by Mr. Walter C. Jones, of Manchester, England, who made a gift of £20,700, or more than one hundred thousand dollars, to the cause of foreign missions. The gift was made to the Church Missionary Society. Who is there to imitate this example among the merchant princes of our own country? Certainly there never was a time when help, even on a less munificent scale, was more needful or could have been more beneficial. Never did heathendom seem so inviting a field as at the present moment, never so impregnated with a desire for change, never so ready to abandon institutions, like that of caste, which have hitherto offered the most stubborn resistance to the spread of "gospel truth and light. Moreover, never was Christianity in a better plight than now for aggressive action, by the number and learning of its missionaries, by the multiplied translations of the Scriptures, and by the knowledge resulting from the experience of past efforts.

A NEGRO BRUTALLY MURDERED. A well-known Democratic negro, named Thomas Williams, was atrociously murdered last Sunday night by a party of negro Ku-Klux, at Lake Pelgneur, in Vermillion parish. The assassins, it seems, went to his house after dark, called him out and riddled his body with buckshot. Before assistance could arrive he was dead; but the names of the men who committed this horrible deed have been ascertained, and if caught their cases will most likely be disposed of by Judge Lynch. We would like to know what sort of government we are living under that cannot protect its colored citizens in their right to choose their own political faith?—Iberia Sugar-Bowl, October 8.

From the Work.

RALEIGH CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: Perhaps it will not be amiss for you, through the ADVOCATE, to let the friends of our beloved Zion know something of the workings of the good One on this circuit. Our revivals have not been so extensive as we desired, but we can say that the Lord has revived his gracious work among us. Our round of protracted meetings is about through. We have had quite a number of conversions and accessions to our church. The church membership was greatly revived and strengthened.

BROWNSVILLE CIRCUIT, JACKSON DISTRICT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE. Mr. Editor: As we have just closed our protracted meetings for this Conference year, we will give you a brief statement of their known results. Our people have been greatly revived, and of the four appointments we have, two of them hold regular weekly prayer meetings. We have had forty-five accessions to the church, sixteen of whom were heads of families; baptized nine adults and seventeen infants. Our people desire to return thanks to Bros. J. D. Hays, C. B. Galloway, T. Holloman and C. Powell for valuable pulpit assistance.

EDWARD'S, MISS., Oct. 3, 1874.

AUTAUGA AND CLANTON MISSION, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: We have just held a camp meeting near Clanton, Baker county, Alabama, at which great good has been done. The meeting commenced on Friday night, September 25, and closed on Wednesday night, September 30. The camp ground is a new one, and was gotten up in a very short time; consequently there were only nine plank tents, most of which were double ones. In these were encamped about fourteen families. Besides these, several others came in with their wagons, and remained part of the time. I had but little ministerial help—for the first two or three days only Bros. J. T. Roper and W. A. Montgomery, of our church. On Monday evening Bros. S. W. and N. A. Dobbs, of the Methodist Protestant Church, came to our assistance. But God was with us in mighty power; and although we were somewhat hindered during the early part of the meeting by rain, we have had a very successful meeting. The visible results were about forty conversions, several reclamations of backsliders, and thirty-nine accessions to the church, including six by letter.

This camp meeting was self-supporting, and the people like the plan, and have all fallen in love with camp meetings. We expect to make this a perpetual camp ground.

Yours in Christ,

R. A. MIEARS, P. C.

CLOVER HILL CIRCUIT, MAYERSVILLE, MISSISSIPPI.—Mr. Editor: We commenced a meeting for Clover Hill church, near the town of Mayersville, on Saturday, September 26. On Sunday morning Rev. A. B. Stewart, from Rolling Fork, came to our assistance. The meeting continued up to last night, the fourth of October—nine days. We had one or two experience meetings, in which great good was done. Backsliders testified that they were again on their way to heaven. We do not know how many were converted or born of the Spirit, but there were several who declared before the congregation, by giving their hand to the pastor, that they had "passed from death unto life." At almost every opportunity large numbers offered themselves as penitents to be prayed for. Oh, how our poor hearts rejoiced to see sinners, from seventy years old down to twelve, trembling before God. One old gentleman, aged seventy-four, presented himself as a penitent. He never had belonged to any church, nor had he been baptized. He came forward as a candidate for church membership, and besides him fifteen others.

Yesterday I took up a collection for the Conference funds, and received $15.20—just half of what I expect to get before Conference. After service I inquired if any needed hymn-books, Bibles or Disciplines, when several came forward and asked for books, and now I am ready to send to Bro. Harp for $42 worth of books. As far as I can learn, this is the first protracted meeting that was ever held at this place.

Yours truly,

T. B. WALDEN, P. C.

MAYERSVILLE, MISS., October 5, 1874.

BUFFALO CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: Yesterday we closed one of the most wonderful works of grace I ever beheld. The meeting continued only five days, but during this short period God wrought wonders in the land in converting precious, blood-bought, immortal souls, and in building up his church. Eighteen were converted and forty one added to the church. A young man who was converted feels that God has called him to the work of the ministry. We need more ministers in this country, and we pray God to send men into this glorious work. Twenty adults and twelve infants were baptized. All present spoke of this revival as the most wonderful one they ever witnessed. Mr. Editor, you can form some idea of this meeting when I tell you that there were as many as seventy-five persons rejoicing in the love of God at one time. It seems that the preachers were directed by God in the selection of the subjects to preach from.

Just one month before we held a very interesting meeting at Mount Carmel church. It lasted four days, and there were two happy conversions and twelve accessions to the church. It was, indeed, a good meeting. There were not many conversions and accessions, but the membership was wonderfully blessed. One young man who had been a member of the church, having violated the vows, had his pastor to make an open confession before the congregation, which was very noble indeed. At other points on the circuit I have received ten members, making in all this year sixty-three received into the church. Pray for us. Yours truly,

JAMES L. PARKER, P. C.

ARCADIA CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The last of July we held a meeting of ten days at Salem, and the Lord was with us in great power. The result was twenty-four accessions and about twenty conversions.

We next held a meeting at a place known as Dubbin's School House, in a community where there is but little preaching. There were several conversions, and we organized a church of twenty-four members, some of whom had been members at Salem.

During the political excitement in Lincoln parish we held a meeting at a union church, six miles west of Vienna, which resulted in several conversions, and the organization of a church numbering twenty-one members, some of whom were from the Vienna circuit.

On Friday night before the fifth Sunday in August we began a meeting at Mount Moriah, which continued ten days, resulting in sixteen conversions, I believe, and nine accessions, and a general revival in the church.

On the first Sunday night in September we commenced a meeting at Athens, which in some respects was one of the best we have known. It continued two weeks, and was said by old citizens to have been one of the best ever held there. Our Presbyterian and Baptist brethren, many of them, were with us in the spirit of labor and love, and party spirit seemed unknown. O what a feast of love! The result was thirty-five accessions, and, as nearly as we can tell, fifty conversions. Thanks to many of the ministerial brethren for efficient help. The total results are ninety accessions and about the same number of conversions. To God be all the praise, honor and glory.

MORE ABOUT THE CLANTON CAMP MEETING.—Mr. Editor: Having been present at the above camp meeting, from its commencement to its close, Bro. Miears, the pastor, requested me to write an article for your paper in reference to it.

The camp ground is situated a little over one mile east of Clanton, which is the county seat of Baker county, Alabama, and is on the South and North railroad, about forty-one miles north of Montgomery. This is a new camp ground, just established; but it is now considered as established for years to come. There were not a great many tenters, but I heard several who were not tented say they intended to tent next year; and I would not be surprised if there should be forty or fifty tenters another year. The meeting is conducted on the self-sustaining plan—every one is expected to take care of himself. There was no boarding tent this year, but I think it is the intention to have one another year. The plat of ground is a beautiful one, well suited for a camp ground. This year we had to make out with a brush covered arbor, but it is the intention to have one covered with boards or shingles next year—one that will shelter a thousand people or more.

The proposition to have a camp meeting here met with some opposition, and even some members of the church predicted that it would be a failure. But there were a few men and women of determination and strong faith, who knew no such word as "fail." In connection with such enterprises; and, in spite of opposition and unpropitious circumstances, they undertook and carried on the work, and the result was "according to their faith." Instead of failure, it was a grand and glorious success. There were but few ministers present; several who had promised to attend failed to do so. All the preaching, except two sermons, was done by three men. But God was with us in mighty power, and the results were truly wonderful. Some men who have passed beyond the meridian of life were brought in, and some little boys and girls only eight or ten years old. Among the converts and accessions are some who had wandered very far from God, and their reformation has caused great rejoicing in the camps of Israel. During the camp meeting, and a protracted meeting held in Clanton, a few weeks before, by Bro. Miears, whole families were brought into the church. The labors of Bro. Miears in this community have been greatly blessed. Two years ago there was no house of worship, and only fifteen or twenty members; now they have a neat framed house and something like eighty members.

A word now in reference to this country and the people that live in it. Many people outside of Baker county are disposed to look upon it as the poorest part of the State, and the people as but little elevated above the savage. In both particulars they are greatly mistaken. The land is much better than is supposed, and the crops are much surer than in many other parts of the State—not so seriously affected by either floods or drouth. The people, too, are nice and clever, and many of them intelligent. This country is destined to become one of the most desirable portions of the State. The people are out of debt, and make a good living at home. This country has two great advantages: it is healthy, and it is a white man's country. Along the South and North railroad are springing up towns and villages, which have already become centers of trade and places of summer resort for the inhabitants of some of our larger cities.

W. A. MONTGOMERY.

VIENNA, LOUISIANA.—Mr. Editor: The Lord is still with us, converting, converting and saving sinners, and refreshing his people. On the twenty-sixth of August we began a meeting at this place, and continued it until the night of the third of September. The results are as follows: There were twenty conversions and nineteen accessions. The church here was in a backslidden condition; a great majority of the members seemed to be destitute of the comforting influences of our holy Christianity. But the Lord reclaimed his people here, and is establishing their goings by the way.

Our camp meeting at Wesley chapel began at the time appointed (September 10,) and closed on the morning of the sixteenth, which resulted in fifty conversions and thirty-six accessions. The church here was most graciously revived. We engaged assistance, but were disappointed. In our camp meeting Bros. Henry O. White, of Trenton, Louisiana, R. T. Parish, of Downsville circuit, and John W. Hearn, who lives on said circuit, C. W. Hodge, of Castor circuit, and Robert Parvin, of the Farmerville circuit, labored faithfully and effectually in the vineyard of their Master in subduing sin. Now, Mr. Editor, the result of our labors to date is as follows: One hundred and forty-four conversions, one hundred and seventeen accessions, and the church most graciously revived. The Lord has revived every church where we have held protracted meetings. There is one church on my circuit at which there has been no protracted meeting as yet, but we are getting ready to move on it, and will make the attack in good earnest, expecting to succeed. The Lord is blessing and reviving his people throughout our district. So you see that the Lord is favoring our beloved Zion in this part of the Louisiana Conference with his presence, whether our Bishops do or not. Our Bishops can go to Round Lake and Seashore camp meetings, and hold District Conferences at various points within the bounds of the same Annual Conference year after year, and we are left out. If I mistake not, our Conference pays as much toward their support as any other Conference in the whole connection, according to our membership, and yet we never see a Bishop unless we go to an Annual Conference. I know the argument used to all this is that there are no railroads nor steamboats running through our country. This is very true, and we regret that such is the case as much as any one; but then it will cost our Bishops no more to travel in north Louisiana than in any other Conference, save now and then they might be required to walk up some long, muddy hill. This is good exercise for us circuit preachers. The preachers on any district would pay the traveling expenses of any one of our Bishops who would come and hold a District Conference for them. O how our people and Zion pant for an opportunity of beholding a Bishop one time in these lands.

Vanderbilt University.

The board of trust met, on the call of the president, in Nashville, on September 30.

The vacancy in the board, occasioned by the death of the Rev. Dr. A. L. P. Green, was filled by the election of the Rev. Dr. R. A. Young. Also the vacancy occasioned by the transfer of the Rev. W. C. Hearn from Arkansas to Colorado, was filled by the election of the Rev. Dr. A. R. Winfield. Dempsey Weaver, Esq., was elected treasurer, an office previously held by Dr. Green.

In filling up the professors' chairs the policy of the board is to proceed cautiously. Two additional officers of instruction were elected at this meeting. Milton W. Humphreys, Ph. D., was elected professor of Greek language and literature. B. W. Arnold, A. M., was elected adjunct professor of Latin language and literature.

Dr. Humphreys is from Lexington, Virginia, where, at Washington College, he graduated. Subsequently he taught there, and two years ago went to Germany to pursue his studies there under the best auspices. Prof. Humphreys took his degree at Leipzig.

Mr. Arnold graduated at Randolph Macon College, and subsequently taught in West Tennessee College, at Jackson, and at the Military Academy of Kentucky, from whence he went to Berlin, where he is now prosecuting studies in his favorite department of learning. He will return in 1875, in time to take part in the organization of the literary and scientific departments of the University. Our readers have had the pleasure of perusing several communications with which he has favored us from Germany—some of the best we have ever published.

Other chairs will be filled at a future meeting of the board.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

Oregon Correspondence.

CORVALLIS, OREGON, Sept. 21, 1874.

MR. EDITOR: Many incidents have occurred since my last writing that might interest your readers, but the time at my disposal for writing for the public eye forbids my "telling my experience," notwithstanding my fondness for experiences.

The Columbia Conference closed September 14. Our session was very pleasant in the main. Ten out of the twelve preachers were present. Two were absent by reason of age and infirmities. Two were received on trial. One transfer was present, who, with two transfers (Bros. Skipworth and Bradley) from Louisiana, were assigned work. Hope there will be no let or hinderance in those brethren coming on with all speed. The people are looking eagerly for them, and will give them a cordial welcome. The Bishop has his episcopal eye on six other men to supply destitute portions of the work. Our loss of effective preachers is four—two located, one superannuated, and one suspended. Our little, struggling band will, we hope, be seventeen strong at our next annual convocation. May the little one become a thousand! The Willamette district reported an increase of over one hundred during the year. We thank God, take courage, and push the battle to the gates!

Bishop Pierce and Dr. McFerrin, by their presence, counsels and preaching, infused life into our ranks. Men as dissimilar physically, intellectually and in style as any two you might select, and yet true yoke-fellows—matches—like the fellow's team: one white, the other black, and strikingly unlike in other points. But when it came to pulling, the match was perfect. "The unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace." How beautiful! I have had the company and presence of these veterans for about two weeks. These representative men are charmed and captivated with our country, and fully comprehend our wants, obstacles and prospects, and will send workmen and means to supply this inviting field. God bless the dear, good men. May they live long to bless the church!

Our Conference was held at Dixie (you see I haven't gotten out of Dixie) camp ground. It was well attended and provided for. A number of souls were converted and eight united with the church.

Our wheat harvest is nearly over. We have had some showers of rain during the harvest season. It is rather unusual. Great fears have been entertained that much grain would be lost. I think very little is lost, or even injured. The yield is about as usual—twenty to twenty-five bushels to the acre; in some specially favored places as high as fifty to sixty bushels. Wheat is low, very—sixty-two and one-half cents per bushel at this place. Not much selling. Business is stagnant and money matters are hard, yet everybody has plenty to eat and wear. Our country is enchanting at this time of year. The weather is all the most fastidious could ask. Peace, quiet and health prevail. How in contrast with your worried, tax-burdened and groaning State. Gladly would I liberate you from your shackles, if possible. I read the dispatches with avidity. God save the right! The tone of your editorial, "Moderation and Peace," was good and timely advice. But I am no little perplexed how the people are to hold their peace.

In company with Bishop Pierce and Dr. McFerrin, filling a long list of appointments up the valley, I was at Salem the day of the Governor's inauguration. The Bishop preached that night, and Dr. McFerrin next night. These representative men were received and treated with the courtesy and consideration their position as leaders of a great and growing church called for by the "powers that be." The Bishop offered the prayer. The message was full, comprehensive and statesman-like. Governor Grover is a polished gentleman and a statesman. This message was listened to by say five hundred people. The Bishop and I were remarking how greatly in contrast with a similar occasion, on Lafayette square, when Governor McEnery was inaugurated. I suppose there must have been ten thousand people present. He offered prayer then. How different the condition of your State and this! May our kind heavenly Father guide you out of your troubles to the haven of peace, quiet, prosperity and good government!

Affectionately in Christ,

T. B. WHITE.

A GOOD LADY once remarked to Dr. Adams that his sermons were a little too long. "Don't you think so, Dr. Adams?" said she, "just a little." "Ah! good sister," said he, "I am afraid you don't like 'the sincere milk of the word.'" "Yes, I do," said she; "but you know the fashion now-a-days is condensed milk."

SOME observant people state that the English sparrows of late introduced into New York and other cities eat up the musquitoes, thus performing a most essential service to people with sensitive skins.

SO MANY need help that those who have power and means, and use them not, lose the noblest luxury of life.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1874.

LEFT ALONE AT EIGHTY.

BY ALICK ROBBINS.

What did you say, dear? Breakfast?
Somehow I've slept too late.
You are very kind, dear Ellie:
Go tell them not to wait;
I'll dress as quick as ever I can;
My old hands tremble sore,
And Polly, who used to help, dear heart!
Lies t'other side o' the door.

Put up the old pipe, deary:
I couldn't smoke to day;
I'm sort o' dazed and frightened,
And don't know what to say.
It's lonesome in the house here,
And lonesome out o' door;
I never knew what lonesome meant
In all my life before.

The bees go humming the whole day long,
And the first June rose has blown,
And I am eighty, dear Lord, to-day—
Too old to be left alone!
O heart of love! so still and cold!
O precious lips! so white!
For the first sad hour in sixty years,
You were out of my reach last night.

You've cut the flower? You are very kind.
She rooted it last May.
It was only a slip; I pulled the rose
And threw the stem away;
But she, sweet, thrifty soul, bent down
And planted it where she stood.
"Dear, may be the flowers are living," she said,
"Asleep in this bit of wood."

I can't rest, deary—I cannot rest;
Let the old man have his will.
And wander from porch to garden-post—
The house is so deathly still;
Wander, and long for a sight of the gate
She has just left ajar for me.
We had got so used to each other, dear—
So used to each other, you see.

Sixty years, and so wise and so good,
She made me a better man
From the moment I kissed her fair young face,
And our lover's life began.
And seven fine boys she has given me;
And out of the seven not one
But the noblest father in all the land
Would be proud to call his son.

O well, dear Lord, I'll be patient,
But I feel sore broken up;
At eighty years it's an awesome thing
To drain such a bitter cup.
I know there's Joseph and John and Hal,
And four good men beside;
But a hundred sons couldn't be to me
Like the woman I made my bride.

My little Polly! so bright and fair!
So winsome and good and sweet!
She had roses twined in her sunny hair,
White shoes on her dainty feet;
And I held her hand—was it yesterday
That we stood up to wed?
And—no, I remember, I'm eighty to-day,
And my dear wife, Polly, is dead.

What Is Temperance

IN RESPECT TO THE USE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS?

NO. VI.—BY J. W.

In our last article we examined the testimony respecting the wine which Jesus made and used, and we found it leading inevitably to the conclusion that his example in no wise contravenes but supports the testimony of science and of Scripture that intoxicating wine is a mocker and is maddening in its nature, and that therefore temperance respecting it involves total abstinence from its use. Let us now examine the passage wherein the Apostle Paul recommends Timothy to substitute wine for water as his beverage. It reads: "Drink no longer water, but use a little wine for thy stomach's sake, and thine often infirmities." Keeping in view the fact that there were two sorts of wine in use at the time, we ask: Which did Paul here recommend? Not intoxicating wine, certainly, for an inspired mind would not recommend that which would produce precisely the opposite effects desired in the case. Science demonstrates that intoxicating liquor is never a tonic—does not minister continuous strength to the human system, but the reverse; that it is, medicinally, at best, but a stimulant, tiding life over some great emergency in disease, very much as a horseman's spur impels his jaded steed to make one more leap in his escape from some pursuing enemy. "A stimulant, when applied to the living tissues, in a sufficiently dilute form, exalts for a time their vital activity, but this exaltation is temporary only, and is followed by a corresponding depression." Let Dr. Carpenter, of London, tell us the chemical effects which intoxicating wine would have had on Timothy's physical system. Says he: "It has been affirmed by some that alcohol in small doses is tonic; but of this there is no adequate proof. The property of tonic remedies is to increase permanently the vital contractility of the animal solids in general, but more especially that of the walls of the blood vessels. Now, although some slight effect of this kind is at first manifested after the application of very dilute alcohol to a living membrane, yet it is very transitory, and is succeeded by an much longer period of diminution of the activity of the functions of life. The supposed tonic properties of alcohol in small doses, especially in the form of wine or malt liquor, are really but a manifestation of its stimulant effects." Then it is to be remembered that its stimulation is but one in a series of the pernicious effects of intoxicating wine. So much for the scientific proof that Paul, an inspired man, was not likely to recommend Timothy a stimulant, instead of a tonic, as would be the case if the recommended him to use fermented, alcoholic, intoxicating wine. Further, we learn from Philo, Pliny and other ancient historians that fermented wines were known in their times, as well as in ours, to produce "headaches, dropsy, madness and stomach complaints." On the other hand, science demonstrates that the pure, unfermented juice of the grape is a grateful, nutritious, healthful beverage; that, as the Bible says of it (the new wine,) "there is a blessing in it;" and that it is eminently valuable as a tonic for the sick and enfeebled. We learn, too, from the ancient historians, that in Paul's day the sweet, unfermented wines were celebrated for the possession of these qualities. Pliny testifies that the unfermented wines were "most useful for the sick." Athenæus says of the sweet Lesbian wine: "Let him take this sweet wine, either mixed with water or warmed, as being very good for the stomach." Last fall this sweet, unfermented, unintoxicating wine, obtained from Cincinnati, was given to some patients at Shreveport, during their convalescence from yellow fever, with the best of results; it proved to be a most excellent tonic—good "for the stomach's sake," and greatly helpful to those in the "infirmities" of physical prostration. Who will say, in the face of these facts of science and history and experience, that the wine which Paul advised Timothy to drink, instead of water, was any other than the sweet, unfermented, unintoxicating wine?

Again, we find several exhortations in the epistles against excessive drinking of wine, from which it is argued that not the moderate use of intoxicating liquor is intemperance, but the excessive use of it. This would be a fair conclusion if the term "wine" always signified an intoxicating liquor; but there being two sorts of wine clearly distinguishable in the Scriptures—one a mocker and poisonous in its nature, and the other having a blessing in it—is it not probable, at least, that the wine which we may drink in moderation, but not in excess, is the latter sort of wine? The history of the times in which the epistles were written are in proof that the exhortations against "excess of wine" had special reference to the drinking of sweet wines, for we find that the excessive drinking of said wines, unintoxicating though they were, was one of the vices of that epicurean age. We are told by the historians that men and women, in those times, voluptuously gormandized upon sweetmeats and sweet drinks. The Roman ladies, it seems, were so fond of sweet wine that they would first fill their stomachs with it, then throw it off by emetic in order to continue drinking it. This, evidently, was the "excess of wine" which many Christians in those Eastern churches were given to, and against which the apostles so frequently exhort them. Surely it was this sweet wine to which Paul referred when he says of the deacons and the women: they must not be given "to much wine."

After a careful examination of every passage of Scripture wherein wine is mentioned, we find that not once is man counseled, by example or implication, to make use of wine that can be identified in the context as an intoxicating liquor; further, we find that in every instance where wine can be identified in the context as an intoxicating liquor, its use is absolutely forbidden. Are we not justified, then, in concluding that the Scriptures reiterate the teachings of science respecting intoxicating liquor—that it is a poison, and that therefore temperance in respect to its use is not moderation, but total abstinence?

We do not assume, of course, that this examination into the works and words of God has been as thorough as it might; but surely we have found sufficient evidence to furnish us with a plain answer to the question with which we set out. Does not the mind of God clearly articulate to us, in the two volumes of nature and revelation, that nothing short of abstinence—total abstinence—from intoxicating liquor as a beverage is temperance in respect to its use?

So long as we overlook the fact brought out in this investigation, that intoxicating liquor is essentially poisonous to the human system in its very nature, our arguments to persuade men to abstain therefrom will be weak, and our schemes to reform them will be inefficient. So long as the line recognized by the church and society between temperance and intemperance in the use of intoxicating liquors is the shifting and elastic one of "moderation," and not the straight and well-defined one of "total abstinence," so long thousands upon thousands of our fellowmen, in the church and out of it, will be "deceived thereby" into the use of that which God brands "a mocker" and "the poison of dragons." Upon any other basis than this every attempt to legislate and make war against the drinking, selling or making intoxicating liquors is essentially defective. Upon any other basis than the proof of its intrinsically evil nature there is no reason why the saintliest churchman in the land may not go on manufacturing and selling intoxicating liquor ad libitum, he asking no questions for conscience' sake. But unmask this destroying dragon—tear off the good-for-food fallacy with which its poisoned fangs have been so long hooded; let men see the bloated, hideous, destroying monster that it really is; let them see the fire of hell which reddens in its tongue, and the dragon-teeth which bristle in its jaw, ready to devour remorselessly everything good and true and noble in human nature; let them know that, like its father, the devil, it "was a murderer from the beginning"—a murderer of human bodies and of human minds and of human souls; that there is murder in its breath, murder in its touch; that its every movement upon man means murder; and then shall we understand the force and import of the divine injunction: "LOOK NOT THOU UPON THE WINE when it is red, when it giveth his color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright (that is, when it is changed by fermentation into an intoxicating liquor.) At the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder."

Fraternity.

MR. EDITOR: The articles recently published in the ADVOCATE on the foregoing subject are decidedly unfraternal in their spirit. I have been looking for something on the other side, but nothing has appeared. Lest it may be thought by some that they set forth the opinions of every one, I have concluded to write a few short articles myself.

The articles above alluded to are quite different in their styles and modes of treating the subject, but all of them breathe the spirit of hostility against the establishment of fraternal relations between the Northern and the Southern Methodist Church, as contemplated by the two General Conferences, whether so intended or not. I may hereafter pass the articles in review. The length of a newspaper article will not permit it at this time.

I propose to show that the Methodist Church South has, ever since its organization, been willing to cultivate fraternal intercourse with the Northern Church, if her own utterances are to be taken as true.

The convention at Louisville in 1845 passed, without a dissenting voice, the following resolutions:

"That while we cannot abandon or compromise the principles of action upon which we proceed to a separate organization in the South; nevertheless, cherishing a sincere desire to maintain Christian union and fraternal intercourse with the Church North, we shall always be ready kindly and respectfully to entertain, and duly and carefully consider, any proposition or plan having for its object the union of the two great bodies in the North and South, whether such proposed union be jurisdictional or connectional."

Bishop Soule, in his letter to our General Conference at Petersburg, declaring his adherence to the Church South, used the following language: "I indulge the joyful assurance that, although separated from our Northern brethren by a distinct Conference jurisdiction, we shall never cease to treat them as 'brethren beloved,' and cultivate those principles and affections which constitute the essential unity of the church of Christ."

Following out this same spirit, the General Conference, by a rising and unanimous vote, delegated Dr. Lovick Pierce to visit the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church to tender to that body the Christian regards and fraternal salutations of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

From the foregoing and other similar statements we learn what was the spirit of our fathers. The steps for the division of the church were sorrowfully taken, but they were believed to be necessary to the better promotion of the cause of religion. Notwithstanding the severance which was consummated at Louisville in 1845, the church in convention solemnly and unanimously agreed to consider kindly any plan that has for its object the union of the two churches, and this seems to have grown out of the desire to maintain fraternal intercourse.

But some one may say that this was a long time ago, and that under changed circumstances we may change our opinions. Certainly this is so. But, so far as fraternal intercourse is concerned, the voice of the church has continued the same. Dr. Pierce was not received in his official capacity; nevertheless, we left the door wide open for the Northern Church to send us fraternal messengers. They came to Louisville and were most cordially received.

But before that time we find our Bishops using very strong language in favor of peace. In their reply to the Northern Bishops at St. Louis, in 1869, they say: "We deplore the unfortunate controversies and tempers that have prevailed and that still prevail; and our earnest desire and prayer to God is that they may give place, and that speedily, to peace." The Northern Bishops proposed reunion; but our Bishops showed them a more excellent way. "In our opinion," say they, "there is another subject to be considered before that can be entertained, and necessarily in order to it; we mean the establishment of fraternal feelings and relations between the two churches." We cannot quote at greater length. The reply shows most clearly that our Bishops not only favored peace, but prayed for peace; and that the subject of fraternal feelings and relations should be considered.

The General Conference at Memphis uttered similar sentiments. We find in the resolutions offered by Dr. (now Bishop) Keener, and adopted by the Conference, the following: "We earnestly desire true Christian fellowship with every other branch of the Christian church, and especially with our brethren of the several branches of Methodism in this country and Europe."

The majority report of the committee on fraternal greetings of the Methodist Episcopal Church contains this paragraph. I quote from the report as first made: "We are called upon by the terms of the action of their General Conference to consider measures necessary 'to prepare the way for the opening of formal fraternity.' Every transaction and utterance of our past history pledges us to regard favorably, and to meet promptly, this initial response to our long-expressed desire."

This is very strong language in favor of formal fraternity. Our church is pledged by its past history to regard favorably the initial response of the Northern Church, according to that report. The fraternal messengers came in due form. If their coming was not in the manner required by the letter of Dr. Pierce to the Northern General Conference in 1846, which was approved by the General Conference of our church, then the General Conference at Louisville ought to have said so. But the Conference received the messengers in their official capacity, and the fraternal greetings of the Northern Church also, and did it with pleasure; and did more than that. The Conference authorized our Bishops to appoint a delegation to bear our Christian salutations to the next General Conference of the Northern Church, and also a commission to adjust all existing difficulties.

Now, Mr. Editor, the question arises: Has our church been sincere in all of its utterances on this important subject, or has it been speaking merely hollow words? I for one believe that the church gave its utterances in sincerity, and that it will not take such action now as will show that it never meant what it said. I know not what may be the final result of the negotiations between the two churches; but I earnestly pray that the action of our church may show, in the language of Bishop Keener's resolution, that we earnestly desire Christian fellowship, especially with the several branches of Methodism in this country and Europe.

TO COMPREHEND a man's life it is necessary to know not merely what he does, but also what he purposely leaves undone. There is a limit to the work that can be got out of a human body or a human brain, and he is a wise man who wastes no energy on pursuits for which he is not fitted; and he is still wiser who, from among the things that he can do well, chooses and resolutely follows the best.—Gladstone.

Terms of Communion.

MR. EDITOR: In the ADVOCATE of August 27, over the signature of J. C. Taylor, M. D., I find a very remarkable article—remarkable, as you will see, for several reasons. It may be presumption, amounting to a crime, for a humble Methodist preacher to differ in an opinion with a learned M. D. who has "been a member of the Methodist Church since the eighth of January, 1834;" but, fortunately for the preacher, the manuscript is forthcoming from which the sermon was preached that so "deeply pained and exercised" the good brother, and we submit it verbatim et literatim, so that you and the readers of the ADVOCATE may judge between J. C. Taylor, M. D., and the preacher.

"Text, First Corinthians xi, 23-26. The holy ordinance of the Supper has been in high estimation by the followers of Christ in all ages of the church.—Acts xx, 7, etc. The apostle represents it:

"1. As a divine ordinance. 'For I have received of the Lord that which also I delivered unto you,' etc.

"2. As an emblematical ordinance. 'Took bread,' etc. The emblems are bread and wine; the one referring to the Savior's body and the other to his precious blood. The breaking of the bread refers to the bruising of his sacred person; the pouring out of the wine to the blood shed for our redemption. The eating of the bread and drinking of the cup refer to our actual participation of the benefits, etc.—John vi, 56.

"3. It is a commemorative ordinance. We are directed by Christ to do it in remembrance of him. To keep up a lively remembrance of the Savior—of his person, his love, his sufferings, especially the end and design, our deep interest in them, and salvation growing out of them, etc. He describes it:

"4. As a professional ordinance. In this we 'do show forth the Lord's death'—that is, we keep up the remembrance of the event in the world; we show our faith in it, our hope, love, obedience to Christ, our separation and distinction from the world, etc.

"5. It is the Christian's social communion ordinance. Unlike secret duties when we retire into solitude; also unlike the public means where saints and sinners, professors and profane, meet together. It is the family ordinance for all of the household of faith, all the kindred, etc. It is represented:

"6. As a perpetual ordinance. 'Ye do show the Lord's death till he come.' From his first to his second coming the gospel is to be preached, salvation's streams are to flow, prayer is to be continued, and the Savior's death perpetuated.

"This sacrifice retains all its virtue and efficacy, and shall be accessible to all believing sinners until he come the second time without a sin, offering unto the salvation of his people, etc.

"1. Who should approach the Lord's table? All penitent, sensible, believing sinners. We do not make baptism a condition essential to communion. (It has been asserted here that the Methodists do not allow any but baptized persons to commune, and the only difference between the Methodists and close communionists is in their opinions as to what constitutes baptism.) It is nowhere said you must be baptized in order to commune. No, it is not said you must be a member of any particular sect or denomination; but 'ye that do truly and earnestly repent of your sins, and are in love and charity with your neighbors, and intend to lead a new life, following the commandments of God,' etc.

"2. In what way? In the spirit of self-abasement, love to the Savior and to all mankind, and the exercise of trust or faith in the sacrifice of Christ, etc.

"3. What benefits may we expect to receive? Increased strength, comfort, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost, and greater meetness for the fellowship of heaven."

Now, Mr. Editor, I submit it, what is there in these notes that could so "deeply pain and exercise" any one who "believes the doctrines of the Methodist Church to be the doctrines of the Bible, and those that glorify God, and in his hands shall convert the world?"

But what do the authorities say? Mr. Watson says: "All are welcome there who truly love Christ, and all who sincerely desire to love, serve and obey him. All truly penitent persons, all who feel the burden of their sins and are willing to renounce them."—Institutes, part 4, chaptor 4.

Dr. A. Clarke says: "And every minister of Christ is bound to administer it to every man who is seeking the salvation of his soul, as well as to all believers. Let no man dare to oppose this ordinance."—Commentary, verse 7, page 256.

But my brother asks: "Is not examination needed?" Yes; but it must be self-examination. "Let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread and drink of that cup."

PREACHER.

THAT was a good though a rather severe pun which was made by a student in one of our theological seminaries (and he was not one of the brightest of the class either,) when he asked, "Why is Prof. —— the greatest revivalist of the age?" and on all "giving it up," said, "Because at the close of every sermon there is a great awakening."

CHRISTIANITY is the most perfect kind of knowledge; it must essentially produce the perfect kind of happiness. It is the golden, everlasting chain let down from heaven to earth; the ladder that appeared to the patriarch in his dream, when he beheld Jehovah at its top, and the angels of God ascending and descending with messages of grace to mankind.

IT IS not so true that men act wrong without a reason as it is that they act from an insufficient reason.

TO KEEP silence when inquiry is up as to the cause of some wrong done, is—how far from lying?

Obituaries.

DIED, at her parents' residence, in East Baton Rouge parish, Louisiana, August 26, 1874, EMMA VAUGHAN, youngest daughter of H. H. and Victorie, aged one year, six months and twenty-six days. Thus another precious treasure has been torn from the fond embrace of her earthly parents to sweetly sleep with the dead, awaiting the resurrection morn till the last trump shall call them forth to share God's everlasting love.

A FRIEND.

DIED, September 6, 1874, at Bright Star, Arkansas, Mrs. ELLEN R. GROVES, wife of J. W. Groves, in the thirty-sixth year of her age. She died happy in the blessed hope of immortal life beyond the grave. Her sorrowing husband, mother and sister naturally grieve for her as one departed from their earthly vision forever; but the cheering thought of meeting her in the land that knows no sorrow, pain or parting robs death of its sting, and will dry their tears of grief. Her release from long-continued suffering and her happy departure for the better land is an evidence of her Father's love. Our loss is her eternal gain.

AT a regular meeting of Marion Sabbath school, held October 4, 1874, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, Almighty God, in his wisdom, has seen fit to remove from the field of usefulness in our Sabbath school, and from the circle of those who loved her, Mrs. SARAH JANE RAY, eldest daughter of the late Rev. L. M. Boyd, deceased; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in this sore bereavement the Marion Sabbath school has lost a worthy member and a most efficient teacher.

Resolved, That while we feel deeply grieved thus to have one to whom we were so much attached so unexpectedly taken from us, we also bow in humble resignation to the will of almighty God, and that we deeply sympathize with the husband and relatives of the deceased.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the Sabbath school, and a copy handed to her relatives; also that a copy be sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

DIED, at Johnston's, Pike county, Mississippi, on the twenty-eighth of August, 1874, of disease of the heart, Mrs. SARAH M., wife of Mr. James C. Crawford, formerly of Copiah county, Mississippi, in the sixtieth year of her age.

The subject of the above notice was born in Rutherford county, Tennessee. She was the daughter of Elizabeth and John Hall. Her father died when she was about a year old, and about two years afterward her mother removed with her family to Mississippi, and settled in Pike county in the year 1818, where they remained about five years, and then removed to Copiah county. In the year 1829 she was married to Mr. J. C. Crawford. She was the mother of ten children, four of whom live to mourn her loss. She embraced the Christian religion in 1835, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. After the division of that church she adhered to the Church South, in which she died. She lived a consistent Christian life, but owing to the deranged state of her mind for some time previous to her death she left no special testimony in confirmation of the faith in which she had lived. The bereaved sorrow not as those who have no hope.

J. W. SANDELL.

DROWNED, in the Atchafalaya river, at Pattersonville, Louisiana, on the twenty-fourth of September, 1874, WILLIE SHEMENAUER, second son of Mr. George (deceased) and Mrs. Alma Shemenauer.

Willie was about four years and eight months old, and was a member of the Sabbath school of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. The Sabbath school met on Sunday, the twenty-seventh of September, and adopted the following resolutions:

Whereas, It hath pleased almighty God to take unto himself our little friend, Willie Shemenauer, it becomes us as members of the Methodist Sunday school of Pattersonville, wishing to express our sorrow, to render this last tribute to his memory; therefore, be it

Resolved, That while we bow in humble submission to the will of our heavenly Father, yet we deplore the fact that grim death has again appeared in our midst and claimed one of our little band.

Resolved, That though we believe that little Willie is now safe in that better land, where there is no sorrow, still we cannot help mourning his loss, and expressing our feelings of deepest sympathy to his bereaved family.

In behalf of the school.

R. A. DAVIS, Supt.

DIED, at his residence in Fayette county, Texas, July 26, 1874, JONATHAN LANE, aged eighty years.

Having been endowed by nature with a convivial temperament, his early life was spent amid the delights of the chase, with the votaries of Calliope and Terpsichore, and in the vortex of frolic and fun, in the vain search of happiness. Nor were his eyes opened to their emptiness until God in his goodness called from earth to heaven a beloved baby boy, around whose infant form his affections had become entwined. Thus God in mercy transplanted his affections from the transitory things of earth to the bright realms of the home of the good, where they remained in faith for forty years, sometimes greatly shaded while battling with the vicissitudes of life, but often dwelling beneath the resplendent blaze of the light of God's love, until the hour of his dissolution approached, when, calling his family and friends around him, he told them he had but a few hours to live, that he had an unwavering faith that all was well with him, and asked them to meet him in heaven. He repeated the Lord's Prayer, and with perfect resignation was enabled to launch his bark of life upon the still waters of the Jordan of death, while the cross for his compass, and not a lingering doubt but that he would land in the haven of rest, and hear re-echoed along heaven's high archway shouts of welcome to the skies by angel and kindred spirits.

J. R. CROCKETT.

DIED, in this vicinity, February 20, 1874, Dr. TURNER LUMBLEY, in the eighty-first year of his age. The deceased was born in Wake county, North Carolina, March 13, 1793, and removed to Claiborne county, Mississippi, in early life, and was for many years a practicing physician, much esteemed by all who knew him. He professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at Mount Olivet church, in Yazoo county, Mississippi, in 1836, in which he remained a consistent member to the close of his life. Although he was not very demonstrative in his religious profession, his conversation and example were blameless, and his end peaceful. He has left a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn his loss. We subjoin the resolutions of the Satartia Masonic Lodge, of which he was a member, expressive of their respect for his memory:

Whereas, It has pleased the Supreme Grand Architect of the universe to call from our fellowship by death our beloved brother, Turner Lumbley, who was gathered unto his fathers on the twentieth of February, 1874, having by reason of strength carried with us to the ripe age of eighty-one years; be it

Resolved, That while we submit to the rulings of our Grand Master above, yet we feel that by this act of his providence Satartia Lodge has lost the fellowship of one of its most esteemed and worthy members; and that while the seat of Bro. Lumbley is here vacated, he has left us the glorious example of dedicating our lives to the service of our Supreme Master, and the bright assurance that he now occupies a seat at the right hand of the glorious Redeemer of mankind.

Resolved, That we commend his piety, devotion and virtues to the membership of our lodge.

Resolved, That we sympathize with his beloved family in this their irreparable loss.

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be sent to his family, and that the brethren wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

SATARTIA, MISS., Sept. 27, 1874.

MARY T. WRIGHT was born April 21, 1839, and on the fifteenth of September, 1874, at the first watch of the morning, she fell asleep. A woman dead to this world—an angel born in paradise!

"We watched and wooed,
She smiled and fled;
She could not dwell among the dead.
O land of light, how bright thy sky
Upon her steadfast, raptured eye."

In early life Mary moved to Caddo parish with her parents, Josiah and Nancy Scott. She was married first to Thomas C. Sample, of Keachie, Louisiana. About five years after his death she was married, April 7, 1868, to William A. Wright, of Shreveport, Louisiana.

For eighteen months before her death, at the earnest solicitation of husband, physician and friends, she wandered over the plains of Texas in search of health. All their fond hopes were vain, and when she realized that she was fast approaching her end she returned to her old home and youthful surroundings at Keachie to spend her last days. The shadow of the black-winged messenger chilled and darkened the household for many months, and yet when the summons came it seemed hasty. The insidious, unerring, merciless disease, consumption, pointed the death-dart; and while the distressed husband and grieving sister and sorrowing friends mourned over the inevitable calamity awaiting them in her certain departure, she, the victim, quietly put her house, temporal and spiritual, in order, and calmly awaited the Master's command: "Come up higher." We who knew the lingering torture of those last days, and the blissful hope of rest after the final victory, could not possibly wish her welcome here again. We can only rejoice in her happiness and eternal rest. She often said she was not afraid to die. She was a member of the Methodist Church, and her hope had anchored on the Rock of Ages for many years. When the physician came in her last moments she requested him not to give her anything to prolong life. She only asked the skill of his science to mitigate the agony of the last struggle. Her white lips whispered "Jesus," and her pure spirit floated out into eternity, resting on her Savior. We thank God for the religion which reaches beyond the tomb. How miserable we should be if our faith vanished in the dark grave, outlined with the pale, rigid form! Look upward, sorrowing ones. Since Christ has brought life and immortality to light, the eye of faith penetrates the gloom. In the grave the consecrated dust is casketed until he comes to make up his jewels. Beyond the grave our brightest conceptions fall short of the riches and glory of the redeemed spirit revealed in him. The hungry, aching hearts left behind must be comforted and illuminated by the radiance of the sun of righteousness reflected on her tomb. The stone is rolled from the sepulcher; and behold! she is not dead, but liveth. Jesus hath said: "I come quickly, and my reward is with me."

SELF-RENUNCIATION.

I cannot think but God must know
About the thing I long for so;
I know he is so good, so kind,
I cannot think but he will find
Some way to help, some way to show
Me to the thing I long for so.

I stretch my hand—it lies so near;
It looks so sweet, it looks so dear.
"Dear Lord," I pray, "oh, let me know
If it is wrong to want it so?"
He only smiles—he does not speak;
My heart grows weaker and more weak
With looking at the thing so dear,
Which lies so far, and yet so near.

Now, Lord, I leave at thy loved feet
This thing which looks so near, so sweet;
I will not seek, I will not long—
I almost fear I have been wrong.
I'll go and work the harder, Lord,
And wait till, by some loud, clear word,
Thou callest me to thy loved feet,
To take this thing so dear, so sweet.

Sure-Holm's Stories.

A Morning in a Kindergarten.

Mrs. Kraus Boelte's Kindergarten is a glorified nursery, introducing the children into wider companionship and more artistic play than the mother's nursery can do or should try to do, even when that is at its best. It is the next stage of the child's education, whose necessity is indicated by its desire, when it is about three years old, to break out of that sacred precinct, and find more and varied objects.

Going with Mrs. Kraus into the large sunny room, where already sixty children were assembled, who had been arranged in a large circle by the ladies of the normal class (five of whom assist every day,) it was lovely to see her go round and shake hands, kissing and saying some sweet word to every one, who were evidently awaiting it with eager expectation, and sparkled and glowed at her approach. As she took her place in the circle all rose and joined hands, and repeated after her the words of a verse of thanksgiving to the heavenly Father, which they then sang; and this was followed by one or more morning songs, adapted to their infant minds. Then all sat down, and she began to tell a story (which is the spell by which she every day brings them to punctual attendance.) There were, however, some tardy ones; and when any of them came in she paused in the story to give a welcoming kiss, and hear the eagerly-told excuse for being so late.

The whole style of procedure was courteous and kind, but simple and unconventional; and the same air pervaded the whole morning's exercises, the children talking naturally, though a little subdued in tone by their number; and brought to perfect silence, at any moment, by a slight clap of the kindergartener's hands; for she seemed to be the center of their interest and attention.

The story was about the sun's sending his rays all over the world, to wake up the animals and birds and flowers from their night's sleep, each sunbeam being followed on its separate mission, and every animal described in so picturesque and animated a manner that they were guessed by the children, who also joined in the imitative motions she made. Thus, when the little hares began to skip, after their morning breakfast, several of the children were on the floor at once, imitating, but at the clapping of Mrs. Kraus' hands resumed their seats immediately. When the sunbeam went into the barn-yard there was a general crowing, lowing and cooing, as cocks, cows and pigeons successively awoke. One sunbeam discovered the newly-laid eggs, that the waiting-maid carried into a breakfast-room, where a happy family of children were at table with their papa and mamma, making a domestic scene that had its interest. It can hardly be imagined how much instruction was involved in this perfectly easy conversation, that engaged the eager attention and co-operating thought of all the children, who evidently had been made quite familiar with the characteristics of the objects mentioned. When it was over there was a little verse—one line—of thanks sung by the circle of children, led by the assistant ladies, and it was responded to by the corresponding line of the couplet sung by Mrs. Kraus.

The story done, all rose to their feet, as Mrs. Kraus, in the play-room, struck the piano with a lively march; and they marched in single file around the room, members of the intermediate class filing off, as they came to the open door which was then shut.

More than forty were left behind, who sat down again; and then Mrs. Kraus called out two by two, till quite a column was formed, and began to sing a boat song, in which all joined; those standing up making a kind of swinging step sideways, accompanied by a movement of the hands to represent the rowing of a boat. This movement of the hands was also made by the children who were sitting round in the circle, who sang with the oarsmen, describing objects on the banks of the river, down which they were supposed to be rowing. When the voyage was over, and the boatmen had returned to their seats, and some had told what they had seen in their voyage, the rest of the children had another very simple play in their turn, accompanied by a simple song, in which all joined; for though it was necessary to have only one division on the floor at a time, on account of the limited space between the tables, they all joined in both plays by singing. After this they rose and marched to the words of a song, and placed themselves at the tables for their more sedentary plays (or "occupations," as Froebel calls them.) There were five tables, at which children of differing degrees of skill sat; and weaving, sewing and pricking materials were distributed to them, for they were all engaged in making some things to carry home for Easter presents. There was a lady assistant at each table, sympathizing, suggesting, and, whenever a more mature hand was necessary, helping to finish up.

A large number of the children had circles of tissue paper folded three times, on each of which was drawn a flower in outline, to be pricked, and on the edges were pencil marks, different shaped marks being drawn on each one, and an arc of a small circle round the point of the cone. As the pricking of the flower, which had been begun another day, was completed by one and another, scissors would be given them, and they cut according to the marks made on the edges, and the curve at the top, and then unfolded their papers, and each was found to be a different pattern of a lamp-shade.

It was the prettiest thing in the world to see the rapture of the children on unfolding their papers, and finding what beautiful things they had made. As we all joined Mrs. Kraus in expressing our sympathetic delight, they looked sometimes so proud and happy, and sometimes so bashful and modest, as if they felt themselves covered with too much glory of success! This cutting of paper, folded on the kaleidoscope principle, is the one thing they do, in which their understanding does not quite follow out the process, though they learn some of the inexorable conditions of success, and thus is intimated the substantiality of some unseen law-giver, as much as when they assist in the production of flowers, where they plant and water, and await the increase which God alone can give.

But all the other children were also rejoicing in their finished mats and embroidered baskets, which they were to take home for Easter gifts. Mrs. Kraus was ubiquitous, asking how each had done the work, and listening to their little plans of surprising somebody they loved, for whom they had been working many days.

Mrs. Kraus then said to me aloud: "The advanced class always invites the kindergarten children to share their gymnastics;" and immediately the piano was struck by Mr. Kraus, and the doors were opened that the children might march out and make a large circle in the play-room, outside of the circle which the advanced class had already made. Mrs. Kraus then broke through both circles and stood in the midst, and made Dio Lewis' free gymnastic motions, which they imitated to the sound of the music. I observed she was very particular that the inner circle should make the motions with precision; but the outer circle of smaller children made them as they could; and many of them did as well as those in the inner circle.

Meanwhile the assistant ladies were putting little mugs of water and plates and the luncheon-baskets on the tables, in the two rooms which had been left. It is a splendid suit of four large rooms, facing the south, and making the best conditions for a kindergarten that I have seen yet. While the children sit at their lunch the ladies flit round the tables, gently suggesting the kind and delicate manners which it is so desirable to connect with the pleasures of eating; refining sensuous impressions by the social sentiment.

The lunch over, Mr. Kraus struck the piano, and they all rose and marched, singing a little song, into the play-room again, Mrs. Kraus explaining to me that, as the advanced class had invited the kindergarten to their gymnastics, so now the kindergarten was going to share with the advanced class their games. They first stood in a square, round the room, and then, to very sweet music, two sides of the square advanced toward each other with a courteous gesture, singing: "How do you do? how do you do?" Then, after going backward, they came forward a second time, singing: "Very well, I thank you; very well, I thank you." Afterward the other two sides of the square did the same. Then they played the swallow's nest, and several other games, while the lunch-tables were cleared, and pieces of shingle, with a bunch of soft wet clay on each, were put on them for each child. To this occupation of modeling they all marched in, with the greatest delight, for, as they severally said, on my asking, they "like it better than anything;" and the last hour of every week is given to it. My companion being an amateur sculptor, asked for some clay too, squatted down at the children's table, charming them with a beautiful bird she made to sit on a nest of eggs that she made. In this occupation the children are left more entirely to their undirected spontaneity than in any other, and marvelous is the variety and exhaustlessness of their inventions.

This was the last exercise of the day, and shared by the advanced class, who remained for a whole hour. But gradually the smaller children were taken off by their mothers and nurses, who came for them. I saw that none were willing to go without a kiss and some last words from dear Mrs. Kraus. The whole morning realized the idea of Paradise for childhood. The serpent of disorder did certainly tempt, now and then; but the human embodiment of the saving love was at hand, with timely advice; and sometimes there was the rebuke of changing the place of the child, with an affectionate remonstrance, being accompanied by the cheering hope that the mistake would not be made again. Always it was pointed out clearly that the offense produced social pain or disturbance; so that the substance of a common humanity was made to underlie the abstract idea of right; and prepare for the opening up, later, into a clear apprehension of the divine love as the law-giver, giving vital motive to all right action, instead of making duty done a mere gymnastic of the will. I have never seen so complete a realization of Froebel's idea of the law of the Lord that gives perfect liberty, because it is one with the love that takes captivity captive, as in this kindergarten of Mrs. Kraus Boelte.—Miss E. P. Peabody, in Kindergarten Messenger.

I LOOK upon death to be as necessary to our constitutions as sleep. We shall rise refreshed in the morning.—Franklin.

'TIS virtue alone, and not dress nor titles, that can ennoble and adorn the human character.

Extinction of the Elephant.

The elephant, like the whale, is dying out. In India he is becoming rare. The hunters have driven him farther and farther inland. Unless something be done to protect him he will before long become, upon the main continent at any rate, altogether extinct, and Sahib will have to import his elephants from Burmah and Ceylon, much as those of Great Britain import horses from Ireland, and foxes from any country that will send them in sufficient number and of sufficient size and strength. In Africa, it is true, the evil is not yet past remedy. Over the vast table-lands of that unknown continent the elephant still roams in countless droves, and still holds in undisputed possession vast tracts to which rum and glass beads, cast-iron muskets and clay pipes, printed calico and coarse gunpowder, have never yet found their way. The respite, however, will probably be but brief. Almost daily caravans start from the Zanzibar coast to the interior, carrying with them all that the native heart needs to make it glad, and willing to take payment in ivory for all that they have to offer. For ten or a dozen large tusks the African chief can dress his wives out in beads and striped calico, furnish himself and his ministers with rum and gunpowder, and can so afford to wait patiently until next year's hunting season commences. The danger which the chase involves is exaggerated. The elephant is a dangerous beast to meet face to face, but he is easily circumvented by craft. He can be shot with poisoned arrows; he can be frightened by midnight fires, and driven into pitfalls; or, if the hunter have the requisite nerve and courage, he can be followed and hamstrung. And so the butchery goes on. Year by year Zanzibar sends inland a large number of bales, and year by year a large number of tusks is carried down to the coast. We may regret the idle waste, but we are powerless to stop it. Nor is it, after all, easy to see by what precise arguments we are to convince a native chief that it is his duty to allow the elephant to multiply in peace. What is it to him if in a century or so the elephant be altogether extinct, so long as in the interval he is able to drink his rum and to dress out his ebony charmers in gaudy yellow and red? But, after all, rapidly extinct as the great brute is becoming, it is yet certain that we shall have supplied his place long before we begin to feel his loss. The tramway will supplant the elephant in India as surely as the train has supplanted the stage-coach in Great Britain; and science will discover some material fully as elastic as ivory, and equally as capable of doing service in the shape of a billiard ball—the one and only article of modern luxury to which at present ivory is absolutely indispensable. Indeed, it is not improbable that long before the elephant is finally extinct science may have taught us so to fuse glass as to impart to it all the elasticity of ivory, exactly as it has already taught us to supply the place of the bamboo with cast-iron pillars and pipes, and that of the sponge with fibrous India-rubber.—Morning Star.

How a Skeptic Concedes Deity.

Herbert Spencer, whose psychology is so inadequate to account for religious emotions, declares that contact for countless generations with the unknowable has produced a hereditary awe of the Ultimate Cause, so that men are now born with an aptitude for religious feeling, and that this native religious sentiment is ineradicable.

But this sentiment, which Spencer confesses to be, in this generation, inborn and of the highest value, cannot possibly have the form assigned to it by that ingenious writer, of a mere awe of the unknowable. The unknown and unknowable cannot excite awe, for it cannot affect our feelings in any manner—a conclusion which would not be affected by conceding Spencer's and Maudesley's doctrine of the hereditary accretion of our mental and moral powers. What is wholly unknown and unknowable to the race cannot affect the consciousness of an individual.

Were Spencer right in making all religious emotion consist in awe of the Ultimate Cause, that awe would not arise from the contemplation of the unknowable, but of the known. In recognizing the existence of a Cause, we just so far know it as a cause. This is precisely the way in which we know all that is known—as the causes of phenomena; we know the causes in the effects. Spencer says that our belief in an omnipresent, eternal Cause of the universe has a higher warrant than any other belief—that is, that the existence of such a Cause is the most certain of all certainties; but asserts that we can assign to it no attributes whatever, that it is absolutely unknown and unknowable. Yet in his very statement of its existence he assigns to the Ultimate Cause four attributes, namely: being, causal energy, omnipresence and eternity. And afterward he implicitly assigns to it two other attributes—repeatedly expressing his faith that the cosmos is obedient to law, and that this law is of beneficent result; which is an implicit ascription of wisdom and love to the Ultimate Cause. By his own principles it could be shown readily that these six attributes are absolutely known attributes, and that therefore the being of God, in the Jewish and Christian sense of that sacred name, is the most certain of all certainties. For when we have arrived at the generalization that the whole universe is moving by intelligible law to the fulfillment of benevolent ends, it is impossible to refrain from assigning its origin to a being omnipresent, eternal, almighty, all-wise and all-good.

It has, indeed, taken a long course of culture, aided by the sublime word of Genesis, which Spencer ignorantly calls a Hebrew myth, to lead men to this clear perception of the presence of God in the creation; but this does not show that the idea is the mere product of culture. Some of the self-evident truths of mathematics have required thousands of years of the culture of mathematical genius to bring them now to light; yet they were true from before eternity.—Thomas Hill, D. D., in Bibliotheca Sacra.

The Habit of Drinking.

A man that takes a dram to-day will surely want it to-morrow. Those who drink daily are the most punctual in time—in no business engagement are they so exact, not even at meals. Another incident equally marked is the desire of a larger potation, consequent upon successive indulgence, and this, when there is not much self-control, ends speedily in drunkenness; or, if a man has resolution enough to avoid that extreme, he still has a gnawing sensation of uneasiness that unfits him more or less for business. It is almost invariably seen that whoever takes an intoxicating drink daily becomes a lounger, wasting part of his time in unprofitable talk; generally will be a frequenter of bar-rooms or other like places of resort, and this will grow upon him as he drinks oftener.

Aristotle sets down in the class of intemperate men not merely those who actually indulge to excess, but those who have a desire for such indulgence, and feel a pain for want of it. In the early stage of intemperance there is something exceedingly deceptive. The desire seems not to be very strong; a man thinks he can easily break off. Nothing is more common than to hear moderate drinkers say they can give up the habit whenever they choose. Let such an one try it, and he will find that what he thought was merely voluntary is a power like that of the many-armed sea monster that fixes a fatal grasp while yet the victim is at a distance and unconscious of the presence of his enemy.

Again, there is a deception in advanced life, a feeling of security in the formation of a new habit. It is not likely (thinks the respectable elderly man) that at my time of life I should fall into excess when I have always heretofore been regular. Yet nothing is more likely than, if indulgence be yielded to at all, it will under this false security become excessive; and the instances are not infrequent of men, who were in early youth exemplary, giving themselves up to unlawful gratifications in later years. Balzac has sharply depicted a proclivity to sensual pleasure between the ages of fifty and sixty, when is often seen an infatuation wholly beyond control. This theory applies not merely to the passion of love—whatever may be a man's propensity is apt at that age to break through restraint.

Plato rebuked a man for playing at dice, who answered that he was playing only for a trifle. But, said Plato, is the habit a trifle? Of all habits none are so controlling as indulgence in strong drink. The appetite is constantly increasing, while moral energy is becoming weaker. In the ordinary course there is therefore little hope of reform, and it is rare to see complete recuperation; loss of fortune, pains of disease, misery of his family, do not reclaim the confirmed inebriate. The fear of such results may check in some degree the moderate drinker, but in most cases even this is only for a time. His mind becomes clouded, his moral perception impaired; and while he may be conscious of his weakened condition and its cause, still he will seek temporary strength in the fatal expedient of more frequent stimulant.—A. H. Dana, in the Sanitarian.

Taste for Collecting.

There is no reason that collecting should be perverted. On the contrary, there can hardly be a greater safeguard to a young man entering life than the possession of a taste, especially a taste for art. Since the days of Ovid it has been commended, and, considering how many boys learn it with their early rules of grammar, it is surprising how few afterward apply it. About forty years ago a young gentleman, with a moderate allowance from his father, took a fancy to some china at a shop in Hanway street. He mortgaged half his quarter's income to buy it. His father and his friends, who would not have been the least put out if he had lost twice as much in a bet, looked aghast at the purchase. It was downright madness, wanton extravagance, to give £50 for a couple of trumpery jars. But the same pair was sold at Christie's lately for a sum which paid principal, interest at twenty per cent. for the forty years, and something over. The possession of knowledge is the first requisite for forming a collection, and the habit of acquiring even useless knowledge is not to be despised. Nothing can have a better effect on the growing mind than a conviction, however impressed, that knowledge is money. The judicious collector must know something, if it is only about china mugs and snuff-boxes. And though a little knowledge in an important matter is dangerous, a profound knowledge of what is comparatively unimportant may lead on to fortune. Few men who have distinguished themselves have been without a collection, or at least a taste. John Selden formed a library. The Duke of Wellington loved music. One of the greatest living statesmen is a judge of china. The first financier in Europe collects enamels. The busy man finds great relaxation in such pursuits. Without being frivolous they afford a relief from serious cares. Walpole and Richelieu formed galleries as refuges from affairs of State.

It may be a question how far education neglects this subject. The early development of a turn for collecting, which was noticed in the opening sentence, is perhaps worth more consideration from those who bring up children than has yet been given to it. Monograms and postage stamps may, in this way, be among the civilizing agents of our time.—London Saturday Review.

Religious Intelligence.

ENGLISH METHODISM contributed $100,000 per month last year for the erection of chapels, school-houses and parsonages.

THE Friend of India estimates that Protestant Christians raise at least $5,000,000 annually for the evangelization of India.

RITUALISM in England still enlarges its boundaries, and reached the extreme recently in the saying of a mass for the dead at a funeral in a London Episcopal church.

IT IS asserted that in a Jesuit church in Chili the figures of Emperor William and Bismarck figure in a representation of purgatory, contrived by the priests for the edification of their people.

THE London Weekly Review says that the American Presbyterian mission work is accomplishing great things in Damascus. The Arabs have manifested a remarkable interest in hearing the gospel.

THE new act to vest in the congregations of the Church of Scotland the appointment of ministers, will come into force on the first of January next, under regulations to be framed by the General Assembly.

IT IS estimated that Miss Rye and Miss McPherson, two ladies in London who are devoting their lives to the work of educating the ragged children of that great city, have already rescued from a life of sin and misery upward of 3,000 children.

BENGAL.—A new native mission has been established in Bengal, the Rev. Babu Mathuranath Basu, a graduate of the Calcutta University, missionary. The mission is supported by the Free Church of Scotland, and promises great success in saving the heathen.

THE Sierra Leone Church is sending out men to the mission-fields beyond. Seven have joined Bishop Crowther on the Niger during the year. Yoruba is showing how the grace of God can maintain the native church, even when the fostering care of the European missionary is withdrawn.

THE church of the American Board at Kobe, Japan, makes a beginning worthy of the best New England churches. Of its eleven members six will probably become preachers. The chairman of the standing committee is an energetic young Japanese, and the church manages its financial affairs without seeking the advice of the missionaries.

MR. HENRY BRUGSCH BEY has issued a pamphlet on "La Sortie des Hebreux d'Egypte," in which he claims the Israelites did not cross the Red sea at all, but a portion of land in the Mediterranean sea which was laid bare during low tides. He fails to account for the various other miracles, striking the rock, for instance, although a plausible theory would be that the rock was simply a hole in the earth from which a natural spring gushed.

IN SPEAKING of an accession of twenty persons to the Methodist Church in Calcutta, the Foreign Missionary says: "A noteworthy feature of this work is the fact that the meetings are frequently attended by Roman Catholics, Hindoos, Brahmos and even Mohammedans. One Mohammedan has been converted and baptized, and several Hindoos have been awakened, but not as yet brought to a decision. A considerable number of Roman Catholics have been converted."

THE General Conference of the Canada Methodist Episcopal Church has adopted provisions to admit lay delegates to the General Conference without any conditions or limitations as to the restrictive clauses of the Discipline. It has also made proper modifications in the composition and powers of the District Conferences, by which the lay delegates are to be chosen. A report on Methodist union was adopted, and a committee was appointed to consider and formulate a basis of union "with the Methodists of the Dominion, or of the Continent, or any branch or section thereof."

THE library of the American Baptist Historical Society, at No. 530 Arch street, Philadelphia, has recently been enriched by some very rare volumes. A fire-proof building has become an imperative necessity, for no insurance money could replace many of the volumes if destroyed by a conflagration. The valuable services of the Rev. Howard Malcom, D. D., for the last thirteen years have been entirely gratuitous. It is hoped that each Baptist association will take up a collection for the building fund, and that every Baptist will send at least $1 for the building and one book for the library.

THE REVIVAL IN EDINBURG.—Dr. Bonar says of the result of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's work: "Almost every one, whether interested in the work or not, has felt the last winter to be different from the usual course of things. A librarian told a lady of our acquaintance that he could not sell novels now. A confectioner complained that the part of his trade which consisted in providing ball-suppers had almost entirely fallen off. One of the leading skeptics in Edinburg watched the work during December and January with contemptuous feelings. 'If Mr. Moody was away,' he said, 'we should soon see all those ministers, who are now working together so harmoniously, at each other's throats.' Mr. Moody left; and he watched in vain for the fulfillment of his prediction. Four months afterward he said: 'The work and the oneness perfectly stagger me.'"

THE father of the Wesleyan missions in China, Rev. George Piercy, gives a very interesting account of the effect which Protestant preaching has had upon the learned (who number about five in every one hundred) in the province of Canton. For a long time there was not even a ripple of interest; but recently the progress of the missionary cause has arrested their attention, and set them at work to retain their leadership among the people. The measures they have adopted show that they have closely studied the Christian methods. They have formed a society called "The Society of Sustaining Love." They have taken up four missionary modes: public preaching (they have six preaching halls in Canton, where the morals of Confucius are daily proclaimed,) distribution of books written, like those of the missionaries, in a style intelligible to the common people; some twenty free schools in various parts of the city; a large hospital, with four physicians, where every kind of disorder is treated except surgical cases, which are referred to the Presbyterian hospital. During its first year one of these societies raised $125,000 and a second one $75,000.

IN JAPAN there are facilities for mission work through the medium of the English language not found in any other country. The young are so anxious to learn foreign languages, especially English, that classes are obtained with little difficulty, and many ask to study the Bible, frequently, I think, from curiosity, and because it is in a foreign tongue; nevertheless it is well to have it read, and it is ours to pray that the good Husbandman will foster and bring the seed to perfection in his own best harvest-time. I find the Japanese very fond of music. They learn a hymn tune quickly, and their voices, as a rule, are pleasant. My great want here is a house proper for work. I believe if any permanent good is to be accomplished it will be through the means of boarding schools, where a steady, direct influence can be brought to bear, and where they can see what is the daily regulation and conduct of a Christian home. Day schools are all very well where nothing better is to be obtained, but both can be combined; and so little seeds can be wafted among the multitude. A. M. C., in Woman's Work for Woman.

RENOSA, the priest who instigated the brutal murder of Rev. John L. Stevens, of Guadalajara, Mexico, has been acquitted. It is not generally known how thorough were the plans of the Roman Catholics to crush out Protestantism from the country, nor how nearly their designs succeeded. For a time after the murder the work was at a standstill. Nor can we wonder at it. It will be remembered that the murderous plan included Mr. Watkins, as well as his associate, Mr. Stevens, but he avoided the men sent to take his life. A mark was set upon all converts as well. Numbers were poisoned, and by other means were put out of the way, and for a long time it was dangerous for Mr. Watkins to venture from his house without a guard. However, with the accession of Mr. Morgan to the force, the little flock have plucked up new courage. Our idea of the malignity of the priests, and of the Mexicans instigated by the priests, is vivified when we know that it was not safe even to bury the bodies of the murdered Protestants in the country, but Mr. Stevens' remains were removed to California, lest the infuriated populace should tear the body limb from limb.—Congregationalist.

FRIENDS of the foreign missionary work in England are urging the sending out of more women to the various fields. Rev. Dr. Eitkins, an old missionary, hopes the British societies will take a step forward in this direction and follow the example set by the Americans. On this point he gives valuable testimony as follows: "There have been about fifteen American female missionaries resident in Peking for longer or shorter periods during the last ten years, and there are ten there at present. One has read through the four books—a task which has not been achieved by all of the sterner sex—and has thus qualified herself for high-class instruction. Another has commenced a Roman orthography to save the poor from needing to learn the Chinese character before they can read the Scriptures. Others speak the language with remarkable fluency and elegance. Others have begun writing Christian books needed in their work. One is dead (Mrs. Bridgman,) leaving behind a fair name for devotedness and zeal such as has not been exceeded in China. Sickness or approaching old age have taken back two to their native country. The rest are all now engaged in schools, classes, cottage meetings, studying and administering medicine. The delicacy of the female element compared with that of the stronger sex is the great fault in our churches."

THE Church Missionary Intelligencer gives an interesting account of Chinese pilgrimages paid to a celebrated shrine, named Ling-fang, and situated on a hill-top, fifteen miles east of Ning-po. Here a man, Keh by name, is said to have lived and to have been translated into the state of the Genii fifteen hundred years ago. His birthday, on which the pilgrimages are made, falls on the early days of May, when azaleas redden the hill-sides and wistarias hang in festoons over the jutting rocks. The steep summit on which the temple formerly stood (the temple has been destroyed by the magistrates, on account of the acts of lawlessness perpetrated during the festivals, but the pilgrimages still continue) commands a beautiful view over the populous Ning-po plain, the sea and the Chusan Islands. The object of the pilgrimage is the purchase of charms, which are very popular among the Chinese. They were invented in their present form in the city of Ning-po, one thousand years ago, and consist of papers, reminding one somewhat of Tetzel's indulgences. They can be bought at any Buddhist temple, but those from Ling-fang are considered the most efficacious. They are used largely in cases of serious sickness, and are burnt while the priest is praying. Their chief value, however, is a financial one. They are supposed to supply the spirit with passage-money to the place of the departed, and with a comfortable income when that abode has been reached. Purchased at about a penny apiece, they are said to be worth $1,000 in the spirit banks. Such a flattering prospect of future abundance draws crowds of pilgrims, and the aged are seen tottering to the top of steep crags to lay in heavenly wealth before they die.

Some Causes of Our Troubles.

There are two classes on whom the responsibility of the most of our troubles in the South rest: these are the radical politicians and the Northern preachers and their organs. The politicians, where they are the appointees of the centralized despotism at Washington, have devoted themselves to party interests and success almost exclusively. In proof of this we have only to refer to the course pursued by the customhouse coterie and other Federal officials in this city. It is well known that Packard, the United States marshal, controls and directs the political machinery of Louisiana in the interest of the Republican party. The same is true in other Southern States. These government officials are partisans of the most unscrupulous sort, bent solely on serving their party and of keeping the South in subjection, not to national authority, but to the domination of a political party. A most important part of their service is to stir up strife and to manufacture startling tales of violence and terrorism. The government patronage and power and the entire executive functions have been used not for the peace and welfare of the reconstructed States, but for political ends.

In the local affairs of these States the radical politicians, mostly adventurers without character or respectability where they came from, depend for success upon the control of the colored voters and the intervention of the Federal authority. The maintenance of their position and influence depends upon the alienation of the negroes from the white people. By the free use of money which they have stolen from the public crib, and by artful appeals to the ignorance and prejudices of the freedmen, they have succeeded in keeping them in an attitude of opposition and enmity to the whites. By falsehood and malignant misrepresentations, and by every species of meanness, they have attempted to imbue the colored people with a distrust and hatred of those who are in reality their best friends. A state of friendliness and good understanding between the two races is the last thing which they desire. When these obtain there will be no further place or occupation for these dilapidated mendicants and carpet-baggers who have come among us with a single eye to public plunder. It is of vital importance to them that the negroes should be incited to animosity against their former masters and friends, and that the public North should be kept awake and excited by the bloodshed and riot which they have themselves incited, or accounts of which they have manufactured, where there were no facts to be distorted or exaggerated. These men live and plunder by stirring up strife, and by keeping the country in a ferment by their incendiary intrigues and teachings among the negroes, and by the infamous lies and slanders which are circulated through a partisan press.

The religious class to which we have referred is closely allied with the politicians. The politician and the missionary are often identical, and the church agencies and funds are largely subsidiary to political ends. But, apart from this, the church as well as the political organization flourishes and fattens upon the discord which it foments and nourishes. The Methodist Episcopal Church in the South, especially in the States of Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana, is composed almost exclusively of negroes. Originally they were toiled off from the Southern Church by persuading them that we were their enemies and oppressors, that they must come back to "mother church," and that while the South was miserably poor the Northern Church was rich and able to help them. These very plausible arguments, connected with the forcible seizure of our church property, had their effect. For ten years the purpose and influence of the Northern Church in the South has been to excite distrust and hatred in the negroes against the whites. It is by this course that they hope to maintain and extend their churches among them. So long as they can keep up this distrust and suspicion of the church to which they owe nearly all they know of the gospel, and so long as they can imbue their minds with bitterness and hate toward the white people, the negroes will submit to their dictation and guidance. Where there is any symptom of defection these colored flocks are easily herded and whipped into line by missionary shekels, and by the old fanatical appeal against slaveholders and rebels.

We do not doubt that many instances of uprising and disorder among the blacks, and that very much of the disquiet and turbulence which prevails, is to be attributed to the teachings and example of those whose avowed mission is to promote peace on earth and good will toward men. Not only is it needful to keep the blacks alienated from our people in order to secure them to the Northern Church, but the church at the North, as the base of supplies, and the public opinion of the nation as the power behind the throne, must be kept well stirred up. The defamations, slanders, and garbled and disingenuous statements which are sent abroad by preachers, teachers, and their local organs here, are, if possible, worse than those concocted by the professed politicians. Only one side of an affair is ever given, and the frequent instances in which the negroes alone were to blame are never recorded by them. A colored school mistress in Tennessee was murdered. This is published abundantly. A house near Crystal Springs, Mississippi, occupied by a widow and her daughters, is entered by negroes at night, and the inmates outraged; another instance of like character in the vicinity of Alexandria, Louisiana, occurred, but not a word is said about them by these Northern religious journals. With their minds prejudiced and embittered by the teachings of religious fanatics and political scoundrels, hoards of armed negroes assemble, and threaten to rape the women, murder the men, and burn the homes of a community. No hint of these circumstances is ever found in the columns of the radical religious press.

All this pays for a time. The poor blacks must be protected, the missionary support must not be slack, the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Republican party must be sustained in the South. We point out two chief causes of our troubles: the political and the religious. We make no excuse for murder and persecution where the white people of the South have been guilty. A few instances of unjustifiable violence and bloodshed have occurred, but even these may be traced remotely to the political abuses and false teachings of Northern adventurers and miscreants. The negroes, if not misled and perverted, are peaceable, and the white people of the South are disposed to treat them kindly and generously. There would be peace, a comparatively honest government, and a considerable degree of prosperity, if the mischief-makers, both political and religious, would cease to do evil and learn to do well.

ST. LOUIS, MO., October 9, 1874.

MR. EDITOR: I have just concluded the Southwest Missouri Conference. The Missouri, the Western and this Conference came so closely one upon another as to leave me but little time for writing. The Western Conference is that part of the Missouri Conferences which look out toward the Pacific, and embraces the States of Nebraska and Kansas; in fact the heroic part of their territory. It argued but little healthy progress to cut off these thinly-populated and difficult regions from the strong and inviting breadth of the mission-field. There is a necessity for something to fall back on with men who occupy outposts; they must have the moral support of a good backing. It not only strengthens their own hands, but it presents a front to the enemy not estimated by the scouts and skirmishers which appear, but by the army behind, of which they are but the advanced guard. As it is, the preachers of the West have to go back constantly by transfer to the Missouri Conferences, and their places must be supplied by fresh men. A small Conference is worse than a mistake—it is a calamity. Our system of District Conferences is admirably adapted to meet the wants of those who have to work so far from the center as to be unable to go to the meeting of an Annual Conference. Then the advantage of throwing, as often as may be needed, fresh relays of laborers upon the frontier, without their losing pleasant Conference relations, would be retained. One can go to Denver from the Southwest Missouri Conference, on the Kansas Pacific, for half fare, say $20—not much more than it takes to go to Conference in Mississippi or Louisiana.

The session of the Missouri Conference was a very agreeable one to me. Bishop Marvin was present and aided largely in giving interest to the public services of the occasion. This is a fine, homogeneous body, doing its work well. They cultivate an excellent region for the development of both Conference and membership. Quite a number of stations of equal strength, and a fine list of first-class circuits, with some sterile spots, constitute its territory.

The Southwest Missouri Conference has also a most desirable width of rich bottom and lime mountain lands, dotted over with towns of from three thousand to forty thousand inhabitants. The railroads are frequent and the amount of travel very great all over this spirited, uneasy region. Everybody is wide awake in pursuit of something; far more disposed to combine in associations, corporations and stock companies than are our people. The most desperate adventures at boring or opening mines, starting factories, buying exclusive rights, or monopolizing articles of merchandise are entered into without fear of results. Men do not become discouraged by failure—only take a new departure. One here is in the middle of the current of that stream of population which has for years now been setting westward. The ships which unload their living freights in New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore discharge mainly for this market. That mass of undigested European population which avoided Southern ports has debouched upon this northwestern space, and, like the turbid waters of great rivers, can be recognized far out in the ocean.

The white man is preponderant so overwhelmingly that one scarcely sees the negro. It is a good place to philosophize and argue from in reference to the capabilities and qualities of the black man. And in this respect invites population from the South. But only in this respect. There is nothing else here to attract one from Alabama, Mississippi or Louisiana. The Christian church has not so sensibly and deeply affected the whole population; the ministry does not occupy relatively so good a position, nor is it nearly so well supported. A preacher coming from the South, though among friends, will have to form a reputation and influence, as if starting anew, and will find himself received with brotherly welcome, without enthusiasm. The prospect of usefulness is increased by the more populous character of the country; but, on the other hand, lessened by the prevalence of many forms of heresy and skepticism which have never found their way yet into the South. It therefore becomes preachers who think of leaving Georgia and the Gulf States and the Carolinas, in the hope of finding a riper and fairer field for themselves and for their families, to ponder well what they seek for, and ascertain whether the Northwest offers the advantages they wish to find. Some have done well and are highly esteemed by their brethren here; but so they would have been and were at home. Others have been disappointed, and seek relief by still going West.

I think it high time, in the midst of the "Westward, ho!" enthusiasm, to put in a few plain sentences, at least, for Southern men who are fifty years of age. There are troubles here looming up as well as in the South, and no part of the country is more dependent than this for the very existence of society upon the preserving and heavening influence of the church of Christ.

I send you in this envelope one of the far-famed brown grasshoppers of the West. He has made no small reputation, both in Church and State. On a clear day I looked up toward the sun, when in Kansas City, and saw them far up in the air, shining as snow-flakes, and fully as thick. They rise against the wind and generally go with it, but in the upper currents seem to be moving all abroad. At the first jump they fly some twenty steps, and seem about as heavy as the ordinary insect, but are really capable of sustained flight equal to that of any bird. They pass in clouds, at times, that shade the sun. They can eat with relish almost every green thing, and marvelous things are told of their ravishing successfully at the handles of picks, devouring carpets, clothes, dog-fennel, almost anything that can fill a vacuum. You will observe that this is quite an ordinary-looking individual, and falls considerably short of those glossy, fat fellows, common with you, that display their black bellies, and backs tipped with red, as they feed upon the coffee weed in the early summer-time. His eye is bright, and on his breast there is a very tolerable likeness to the human face, having upon it a rueful expression—pretty much that of one whose collections have come short by reason of the "grasshopper." Bro. Sullivan's little son, Magruder, presented me with a collar-box full of them for the sake of "Auld Lang Syne." He has quite taken to me. The States of Iowa, Minnesota, Kansas, Nebraska and western Missouri have suffered severely from this insect epidemic. In the spring the eggs laid will yield a yet larger crop, unless destroyed by the severity of the winter.

Hoping to see you all speedily, I am truly yours, J. C. KEENER.

From the City of Mexico to Pachuca.

MR. EDITOR: The start, for city life, is an early one, as you go by the 6.45 train. And as it is too early to arouse a good wife to prepare the desayuno—the Mexican's first meal—consisting of a cup of coffee or chocolate and a plate of bread. You must add to this early start time enough to secure this refreshment at the depot, nearly a mile away. This settled, and a ticket for Ometusco secured, you can take your seat in contentment, looking out upon the hurrying, rushing things with quiet complacency.

Our party consists of Dr. Richardson, of your city, dean of the Louisiana Medical University, his amiable wife, the little daughter of our United States minister, Hon. J. W. Foster, and your unworthy scribe. I will be pardoned for making the following note, just here, as the train has not yet started, viz.: that the summer visit of Dr. Richardson and wife has added much to the usual pleasant American society in Mexico. Being from the South, and our own State besides, we (my own household) have felt particularly favored. Their visit is not only pleasant in itself, but we accept it as a good omen for the future—as the beginning of the time when a large part of the usual summer migration will find its way to our beautiful and romantic country. Now the warning note sounds, and we are off for Ometusco. The conductor, a fine specimen of his class, uses words somewhat different from the American article. Instead of "all aboard," short as it is, jerked out in knots, "our man's" sharp, shrill voice, re-echoed by subs., sounds up and down the line: "Vamonos." This cry is followed by the usual American action—a final hand-shaking, kissing and good-bys, and a general rush and settling in the cars. So "Vamonos," succeeded by another short snort from the impatient monster in front, and we move out. This is the Puebla train. The Vera Cruz train left seven hours ago. Starting from the suburbs of our splendid city, we continue in a kind of secondary, diluted suburb, until it is merged into the noted village of "Our Lady of Guadalupe Hidalgo," three miles from the city proper. The train swept through with only a premonitory whistle, as if in contempt of small things. In other days the town drove a lively trade in its miraculous well, sale of relics, stories of most wonderful cures wrought by the virgin, and other foolish things connected with it. Since the introduction of a better way the fortunes of Our Lady have fallen into decay, and her power has waxed faint. On "feast days" (still very frequent,) especially swarms of disgusting lazzaroni come together for a common purpose, and ply their trade right under her shadow. She either cannot or will not cure them, or else they prefer, as a matter of business, to remain uncured, finding a sore leg, a blind eye, a broken limb or a hump back a better investment than physical capacity to work.

The morning opens magnificently. It appears as a full-blown rose adorned with the diamond drops of the night. On the right, reflecting back in myriads of bright sparkles the young sun, lies the famous Lake Tezcoco. Some one of the many writers on Mexico—Willson I believe it is—calls it a salt pond. Because Tezcoco generously yields an abundant supply of salt, and is not so wide or so deep as many others more pretentious, is no reason why its fame and real beauty should be so heavily discounted. Though shallow, it is really beautiful as it calmly rests beneath the morning light, attaining seemingly, in some places, a width of fifteen or twenty miles. In the far distance across the lake, to the southward, rises a splendid mountain range, apparently gathered in irregular groups about, and the willing subjects of the snow-crowned king and queen, Popocatepetl and Ixtaccihuatl. Just now the scene is picturesque indeed. There are regiments of sun-painted clouds move and around the mountain region, gently moved by the light breeze of the early day, apparently burdened with a sense of their own purity and felicity. Here and there are troops, as if wishing to convey some of their own happiness to the less fortunate, sinking low and clinging lovingly to the rugged mountain sides, their gauzy drapery resting upon the unclean earth; and then again, as if coquetting with the king of day, they slip around in the mountain shadows, and hide in the immense gorges and ravines. Again there is change. Yonder are the rough heads of two or three old warriors, rushing out from the veiled embraces of their vapory playmates, and look down upon the fawning, helpless things as if in contempt of such caresses. And then, and beyond all, faintly coming out, as the sun's rays approach their level, are seen the snow-crests of perpetual winter. Take it altogether—the rapidly-moving train, the wide-spreading lake, the intervening green earth, the mountain bases of solid rock, the wavy clouds above and below—no more beautiful, more perfectly picturesque scene can be found out of Mexico. On we roll—twenty miles an hour—due east through this great valley of Mexico. The inevitable church, grand dome and higher tower, rises up here and there, dotting the plain with specks of white. Droves of donkeys, burdened, followed by toiling Indians equally burdened, wend their slow way to our starting-point. We sweep by wagon trains, each wagon drawn by fourteen mules—two at the wheel, the other twelve four abreast—carrying, I am told, only about two thousand pounds. Waving corn, not very large, but green and flourishing, spreads out on either side. Immense fields of cereals, in nearly all its stages, from the bloom to the full ear, adds to the interest of the scene. An hour has passed, and we draw up at our first station, Tepexpan, twenty English miles or thirty-two and one-quarter kilometros from Mexico. An improvised coffee, pulque and bread stand greets pleasantly the unfortunate who was either too late or not inclined to patronize its more opulent neighbor at the starting-point. Fruit venders, perhaps, whose hopes of a day's subsistence depend on their success, lay vigorous siege to the car window, and by words, looks and actions, each separately containing the essence of an earthly prayer, seek to dispose of their wares. Whether you feel like it or not, you cannot well help investing a few cents, which is usually received with "Mil gracias, senor." The principal articles this morning consisted of indifferent figs (blue,) and equally indifferent peaches. So far as this part of Mexico is concerned, it is a noticeable fact that nearly every article of fruit grown to perfection in the United States rarely attains to much here. I have seen no good apples, and but few good peaches.

The five minutes have passed, and we are off again. Without any particular change of scenery, at least to your scribe, the train draws up at the next station—Teotihuacan—it is enough for me to do the spelling; your readers must do their own pronouncing—twenty-seven English miles or forty-three and one-half kilometros "de a que a Mejico." This station is principally noted for two things—the Pyramids, rivals of old Egypt, and its tunas. The story of the Pyramids, with their most wonderful surroundings, landmarks, suggestive of times long, long before Cortez, and the amazing supply of ugly little stone gods, so abundant as to trouble the piously inclined with the thought that the cunning Indian of to-day manufactures them to hand—all this, I say, is too long for me to tell. "But the tunas! Ah! that's my weak point," suggests our good friend, Dr. Richardson. I can tell you something of them. In the first place, it is a most delicious fruit, cooling fever, quenching thirst and satisfying hunger, provided it (hunger) is not of too long standing. The tuna is the fruit of the Opuntia Vulgaras, commonly called Nopal or prickly pear. There are three distinct varieties, distinguished by the color of the fruit—red, green and yellow. Although indigenous to this country, when transplanted, particularly as in southern Europe, it flourishes equally as in its native soil. It grows to great perfection at the base of Mount Etna, and forms a conspicuous object, giving such unmistakable marks of a foreign birth. Here it grows to a large size, and the yield is abundant, forming at this season of the year quite an item in Indian labor and traffic. The Indians bring them from a considerable distance, perhaps realizing $2 or $3 in a trip, to and fro, of fifty miles. Our Texas friends will not perhaps appreciate this long story and my praises of the tuna. But I would remind them that there is nearly the same difference between the Mexican tuna and the Texas article that there is between the russet and crab apple.

And now we must move on with the train. Here to the right is a lovely plain almost literally rock-ribbed on the south. Three or four cathedrals, though miles away and miles apart, seeming near to each other and near to the beholder, relieve the view and give an air of peace and quiet to the scene. Hid away in the trees and shrubs surrounding the churches, and plainly visible at other points, are the little mud and stone houses of different villages. Forgetting pyramids, tunas, stone gods, and wrapped up in the beauty of this valley, its mountain guard, roving flocks, peaceful looking churches, humble, well-disposed peasants, its waving corn and now golden cereals, we have glided over the intervening seven miles, and stop at Otumba, thirty-four miles or fifty-four and three-fourths kilometros from Mexico. Near this place was fought the great battle of the Misous, as well as a disastrous engagement between Cortez and the simple Indians he was seeking to enslave. The villages or haciendas, from which the stations are named, are usually situated some little distance from the road. The village of Otumba is off to the left, and, as "distance lends enchantment," presents a picture-queapporance. The church is conspicuous—generally the first and last thing upon which the eye rests. Only four miles more and we are at "Estacion de Palma"—the Station of Palms. The station is here, but no suspicion whatever of palms. It is evidently a misnomer: but then we are not responsible, and so need have no care about it. With unchanging scenery we move on with quickened speed through one of the prettiest countries in the world. It is full of promise. It is opulent in resources. Under the present wise and liberal government it seems instinct with development. And as this wise policy and liberal spirit can but grow stronger and stronger, what may we not expect from a country as rich in natural possessions as it is opulent in its external beauty? Wherever the eye turns there is something attractive—something wrapped in the vesture of poesy, something that you can look at without a sense of weariness or satiety. We are at Ometusco, the point of departure, due north, for Pachuca. The cars go on due east for "home land," and so must this letter. J. T. DAVES.

SEPTEMBER 15, 1874.

Death of Mrs. F. M. Kennedy.

The editor of the Southern Christian Advocate, Rev. Dr. Kennedy, has met with that greatest of bereavements—the loss of a beloved wife. May God sustain and comfort our brother in his great sorrow. The following notice of the sad event is from the pen of Dr. Myers:

The readers of the Advocate are called upon to sympathize with its editor in a sore bereavement. His beloved wife, Mrs. Mary L. Kennedy, was called home, at early morn, on the twenty-ninth of September, after an illness of three weeks. She was born May 24, 1837—born again in 1856—and she united her fortunes with those of Dr. F. M. Kennedy, then for some years an itinerant preacher, November 21, 1860, since which time she has been the faithful partner of his toils.

Since her residence in Macon, where the writer first knew her, her delicate health has prompted her to lead a quiet, retired life, sedulously ministering to her husband's comfort (they have no children,) and faithfully serving her God. The few persons with whom she came in contact learned to appreciate her gentle, patient spirit, and to feel the force of her devout piety. It is a pleasant memory, left to her husband in his desolation, that nothing which friendship could do was left undone to minister care and comfort to his wife during her wearying and protracted illness. Day by day friends saw her fail under slow fever, marked her patient trust in her Savior, and, while they waited at her bedside, learned from her the wholesome lesson of quiet submission to the divine will.

When the fatal end approached she told her pastor, Bro. Branch, that she had long been preparing for this time, and she expressed adoring wonder at the thought of being soon admitted to the happiness of heaven. Frequently the name of her "precious Savior" was on her lips, as though in silent communion with him. Emphatically "her end was peace." Let his friends bestow on the bereaved the sympathy of prayer.

Dr. Kennedy, accompanied by Bro. Branch, carried the remains of the departed to Rockingham, North Carolina, where they will sleep, by the side of those of parents and other relatives, till the resurrection morn.

Death of Rev. George Bright.

Three letters, says the Southern Christian Advocate, written by Rev. C. A. Fulwood, Key West, September 19, 20 and 21, informing us of the illness, death and burial of this minister of Christ, came to hand by one mail. Combining these facts, we learn that he was attacked by yellow fever on Monday night, September 14, and died on Sunday, the twentieth. "He was rational and fully aware of his condition, expressed no great rapture, but, poised on the great doctrines of the gospel, he realized a profound sense of safety and security, and heavenly peace abounded." He was buried on the twenty-first of September, the Good Templars and Masons assisting at the obsequies. An immense concourse—not more than one-third of the throng finding room in the church—attested the respect in which he was held. "Rock of Ages," which he had requested sung when he was dying, introduced the funeral service, which was then read by Rev. Mr. Vandezee, followed by remarks from Bro. Fulwood, who writes: "My heart was too full to admit of free utterance—our words were few." The remains were then deposited in a spot sacred to Methodism, where sleep Rivers, Sparks and McCook, who had fallen at this outpost of our church.

Bro. Bright entered the Georgia Conference in 1841, and traveled for years—filled important charges, circuits and districts. He was a clear, logical thinker, and was noted some years back as an acute church polemic, sifting closely all doctrines not squaring with Methodist theology, and contributing largely of his thoughts to the Advocate. Shortly after the war he transferred to Missouri, then to Louisiana, and two years since to Florida, preaching in all the Conferences, and in some, at least, aiding his accomplished daughters in teaching. He leaves three children, all daughters—one now at Reidville, South Carolina, the other two at Key West. Let the church, which their father served so many years, care for them. They are worthy, and can amply repay in intellectual service all that may be done in their behalf.

THE grasshopper referred to in Bishop Keener's interesting letter came to hand in good order, and in a state of perfect preservation. It looks very much like any other dried grasshopper, although we feel a certain interest and even respect for him when we remember that he belongs to a most formidable race, and is a representative of an invading host which no human army can successfully resist. As he lies on the table before us we can well imagine him as in the van of the mighty swarms that darkened the sun and desolated the fields. The delicate pink and gray of the limbs and trunk are fresh and lively, the wings are lustrous and unbroken, the eyes glisten like diamonds, and the determined, aggressive-looking head is flecked and mottled with silver and ebony. The body is precisely one inch and a quarter long.

In the Name of Mary.

The Tablet of this city, a Roman Catholic paper that is incessant in its assaults upon the faith of Protestants, in its last issue thus defines the position in which the Church of Rome stands toward Mary, the mother of our Lord:

"In the name of Mary, after the cross of Christ, is our hope, the hope of the church, and together they form her glory, her strength, her pride. They have figured together throughout all the ages of Christian history on the banners alike of warrior princes and of religious corporations. Before that sacred emblem and that holy name the powers of darkness fly now as they have fled in all the Christian past."

The first sentence in this brief paragraph is the condensed confession of the faith of enlightened Romanists in America in the latter half of the nineteenth century. It is very difficult for Protestants, to whom God has given some faculty of perceiving truth which for the present seems to be withheld from Romanists, to believe that such a declaration as we have cited from a living writer in the city of New York can be the veritable faith of millions of human souls! In another part of the same paper the editor admits the Holy Scriptures to be "authority" in matters of faith; for he writes:

"When we consider that to the mind of Tyndall the scientists have swept away the God of revelation with the power of an avalanche, we might, were it not for the authority of Holy Scriptures, hold him excusable in wiping out the God of reason."

Looking, therefore, to the "authority of Holy Scriptures," we respectfully inquire where, in those sacred writings, is found the evidence on which a sane man rests when he affirms that, after the cross of Christ, "in the name of Mary is the hope of the church." All the other declarations in the passage we copy above are equally repugnant to our ideas of Christian history and to the truth of God. But we take this one as a test, and ask for the proof from the Scriptures that God has ever made "the name of Mary" even a part of the foundation of hope for the church on earth. It is not wonderful that the ignorant multitude, deluded by traditions and pictures and miraculous stories, should adore the Virgin as queen of heaven, and pay honor more to her than to the Son of God. But that a man who comes into contact with the mind of the age, and looks at facts with eyes anointed by the "authority of Holy Scriptures," should say that "in the name of Mary" is the hope of the church, is but another proof of that "strong delusion" which no argument is adequate to dispel.—New York Observer.

Letter from Rev. W. E. Doty.

MURFREESBORO, TENN., Sept. 28, 1874.

MR. EDITOR: Middle Tennessee is a great country. Its population is dense and cultivated. The iron heel of political oppression is not upon the necks of the people, as in poor Louisiana. True McKendrean Methodism is in the ascendant everywhere, and the old bee-hive Conference is full to overflowing. Her schools are numerous and prosperous, especially female colleges under church control. I could not number them all; but permit me to say to my Louisiana friends that if they do not send their daughters to Mansfield, send them to Soule College, located at this place, presided over by Rev. J. B. West, D. D. I have never seen a man under whose care I had sooner place a daughter of mine. A splendid corps of teachers, in a fine, cultivated community of about five thousand inhabitants, and a number of large, commodious brick churches. We have all the facilities here for the cultivation of the moral, intellectual and physical nature.

About the Vanderbilt and the Publishing House things look fresh, and buildings and improvements are going up almost as by magic. Dr. R. A. Young is very successful as agent for the former, and Dr. Redford for the latter.

The bad crops have greatly retarded contributions in all church operations. Corn is now worth $1 per bushel, and the cotton-growing counties of middle Tennessee will not more than average two hundred pounds per acre; and then the worms are destroying the grass and hay. But the old country has wonderful recuperative power. Such disaster has never befallen them before, and may never again. For the present the missionary and other church enterprises are bound to suffer.

The Tennessee Conference will soon convene. I trust to be able to go up with the brethren; but, alas! no member of the class of sixteen who joined when I did will meet me there. They have all passed away except one, and he is a member of another Conference. Oh, how kind the good Lord has been to me. I linger in affliction, but hope to be able to attend once more the Louisiana Conference. I love Louisiana, her preachers and people, her mild climate, her magnolias and her flowers. May the Lord interpose in her behalf, that the oppressor's hand may be stayed, and that the sunshine of prosperity may be hers once more. My dearest earthly ties are there. Many of them have been broken. A few yet remain. The dust of my dearest loved ones are resting beneath her soil. But there will be a resurrection, and I am therefore content.

W. E. DOTY.

THE Pacific Methodist of September 25 contains a notice of the session of the California Conference of the Northern Church, and the appointments. The last year has been a prosperous one. "Sister Van Cott came before the Conference for ordination. Bishop Merrill was like adamant, interpreting the Discipline that any Quarterly Conference which gave a license to preach to a woman had performed that which it had no right—its action was null and void. An appeal will be taken to the General Conference." Bishop Merrill is right!—Nashville Christian Advocate.

Books and Periodicals.

LORD OF HIMSELF. A novel. By Francis H. Underwood. Boston: Lee & Shepard; New York: Lee, Shepard & Dillingham, 1874.

This volume is handsomely bound, and contains something over 500 pages of trash. The author refers to his work as "pictures of life" in Kentucky. Very distorted pictures they are, and not fit to be bought or looked at. So large a volume of worthless lumber has not come under our notice for a long time.

THE BIBLE REGAINED, AND THE GOD OF THE BIBLE OURS, OR THE SYSTEM OF RELIGIOUS TRUTH IN OUTLINE. By Samuel Lee. Boston: Lee & Shepard; New York: Lee, Shepard & Dillingham, 1874.

This volume contains 285 duodecimo pages of the most fatal errors in religious doctrine. The divinity of Christ, the trinity, the vicarious atonement, future punishments, and the limitation of human probation to the present life are all set aside as old wives' fables. Instead of the Bible Regained, the title of the book should be the Bible Perverted, Rejected, Lost.

THE COLUMBIAN SPEAKER. Selected and adapted by Loomis J. Campbell and Oren Root, Jr. Boston: Lee & Shepard; New York: Lee, Shepard & Dillingham.

A beautiful little book as to binding and typography, and containing some gems of eloquence. It has, however, many very objectionable selections, characteristic of the section from which it comes. Justice and Liberty, by Wendell Phillips; The Rights of Mankind, by Theodore Parker; Sympathy with the Northern States, by John Bright; Abraham Lincoln, by Henry Ward Beecher; Address to the Army of the Cumberland, by R. W. Johnson, are specimens of the false and fanatical sentiments which we find in these pages, and which are sent here to imbue the minds of our youth with their poison. It may be a good work for Boston, but it is not fit for circulation or use in this latitude. We would advise our book dealers to send it back to New England.

THE READING CLUB AND HANDY SPEAKER. Edited by George M. Baker. Boston: Lee & Shepard; New York: Lee, Shepard & Dillingham.

There are some very amusing and some very choice selections in this volume. Other pieces are slangy and of doubtful utility for the taste of our young people.

The above works have been received from the publishers through R. J. Harp, New Orleans.

A PRACTICAL AND CRITICAL GRAMMAR OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE. By Noble Butler, Louisville, Kentucky: John P. Morton & Co., publishers.

This appears to be a very thorough and complete work. The method and general arrangement are specially good. We are indebted to the publishers for a copy.

OUR Sunday school periodicals for November have been received. The children and teachers will be delighted with them, if we are permitted to judge. Dr. Haygood's other duties do not seem to involve any neglect of the Sunday school interests.

WE ARE indebted to the publishers for the New York Tribune Extra No. 28, containing Bayard Taylor's Africa and Iceland. These extras of the Tribune contain the more important publications on science, art, history, literature and kindred topics, and at a price which places them within the reach of all.

THE American Artisan is one of the most valuable journals of art, science, mechanics and inventions published in the world. Issued monthly, at $2 per annum. Brown & Allen, publishers, New York. We have received the October number.

THE American Agriculturist for October is, as usual, splendidly illustrated, and filled with useful and fresh reading matter.

MORTON'S MONTHLY HOME AND SCHOOL for October has been received.

APPOINTMENTS OF THE COLUMBIA CONFERENCE.—Willamette District. T. B. White, P. E. Corvallis and Benton mission, B. R. Baxter; Dallas, N. M. DEATH OF REV. WILLIAM W. GRIFFIN.—A note from the Rev. F. B. Davies, dated Stone Mountain, Georgia, September 30, informs us that the brother named above died on that day, after a long and painful affliction. "He had been a great sufferer for two years—unable to walk. He bore his afflictions with great patience and resignation, and died in peace."

Bro. Griffin joined the Georgia Conference in 1839, and fell into the Florida Conference at its division in 1845. When southern Georgia was absorbed in the South Georgia Conference he was already superannuated and residing in Georgia. He had been for years a great sufferer, rendered comparatively helpless by rheumatism. We remember him well, in the early days of our ministry, as a faithful, diligent preacher—a valuable co-laborer in the gospel field. He no doubt rests from suffering in the "city out of sight."—Southern Christian Advocate.

Fraternity.

The following is the reply of the British Conference to the address of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South:

WESLEYAN METHODIST CONFERENCE,
Camborne, August 11, 1874.

To the Rev. R. Paine, D. D., Senior Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church South:

DEAR BROTHER: The Conference directs us to acknowledge the address of the Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

In the unity and enlargement with which almighty God continues to favor you, the Conference greatly rejoices, and notes with much satisfaction the large and wise provision you are making for the Christian nurture of the children and youth of your land.

The Conference cordially reciprocates your fraternal greeting, and will ever rejoice to hear of your peace and prosperity.

In behalf of the Conference we are, dear brother,

Yours faithfully,
WM. MORLEY PUNSHON,
President.

GERVASE SMITH, Sec.

THE law and medical departments of the Vanderbilt University, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, opened their sessions, October 5, with encouraging prospects. We accompanied Bishop Marvin to the temporary headquarters of the former, and the Bishop made the acquaintance of the accomplished professors. At the opening of the latter Prof. Menees made an eloquent address, and was followed by wise and witty speeches by Bishop McTyeire, Drs. Kelley and Young. The formal introductories of both schools are postponed. Judge Cooper and Prof. Callender are to deliver them. More medical students, we believe, were in attendance than we have ever known at the opening of the session of the Nashville school.

REVIVAL IN MERIDIAN.—Rev. J. T. Heard, pastor of our church in Meridian, Mississippi, writing October 12, says:

We closed a meeting last night which had been protracted five weeks, resulting in fifty-three accessions and about sixty conversions.

WHEN anything is forbidden to be done, whatever tends or leads to it, as the means of compassing it, is forbidden at the same time.—Latin Law Maxim.

BLYMYER MANUFACTURING COMPANY'S BELLS.—We are in receipt of the catalogue of the Blymyer Manufacturing Company's bells, giving descriptions, prices, and some four hundred testimonials from those using them. The bells are "cast from a composite metal, in part steel, used only by the Blymyer Manufacturing Company, and are entirely different from all other bells." The price is less than one-half that of the copper and tin bells. They are warranted for two years against breakage. It is claimed that they are "fine-toned can be heard as far as the copper and tin bells of the same size, and are more durable." The testimonials—a large proportion of them being from ministers—are from every State and Territory in the Union, and constitute a strong indorsement of the bells. The manufacturers, whose office and extensive works are located at Cincinnati, Ohio—661 to 691 West Eighth street—have been long and favorably known throughout the country.

MUSIC-BOOKS FOR SCHOOLS.

AMERICAN

SCHOOL MUSIC READERS.

IN THREE BOOKS.

BY L. O. EMERSON AND W. S. TILDEN.

In Book I, which is for Primary Schools, we have a three-years' course of study, very plainly laid out, with abundant directions to teachers, and a large number of sweet songs for the little ones to sing by rote and by note. Price, 35 cents.

In Book II the course above indicated is continued, and becomes a little more theoretic. The book is fitted for the use of the younger scholars in Grammar Schools. Price, 50 cents.

In Book III part singing is introduced, and the ear is trained to harmonic singing. For Higher Classes in Grammar Schools. Price, 50 cents.

The music in these charming and useful books was selected and arranged by the practiced hand of Mr. L. O. Emerson, and the theoretic part has been well tested by Mr. Tilden before placing in the Readers.

For High Schools nothing succeeds like the above Readers better than THE HOUR OF SINGING ($1,) already in extensive use. If that has been used, try CHOICE TRIOS ($1,) a collection of the best three-part music.

The new Singing School Book, THE SONG MONARCH (75 cents,) is a trusting general attention as one of the best books ever made for Singing Schools.

MEDICAL.

DR. TUTT'S VEGETABLE LIVER PILLS.

THE STARTLING DRAWBACK ON nearly all medicinal agents has ever been that in their process of purgation and purification they have also debilitated the system. To obviate this difficulty physicians have long sought for an agent that would

PURGE, PURIFY AND STRENGTHEN

AT ONE AND THE SAME TIME.

Their research has at last been rewarded by a discovery which fully realizes the fondest desires of the medical faculty, and which is justly regarded as the most important triumph that Pharmacy has ever achieved. This important desideratum is

Dr. Tutt's Vegetable Liver Pill,

which purifies the blood, and removes all corrupt humors and unhealthy accumulations from the body, and yet produces no weakness or lassitude whatever, but, on the contrary, tones the stomach and invigorates the body during the progress of its operation. It unites the heretofore irreconcilable qualities of a Strengthening Purgative and a Purifying Tonic.

Dr. Tutt's Pills are the most active and searching medicine in existence. They almost attack the very root of diseases, and their action is so prompt that in an hour or two after they are taken the patient is aware of their good effects. They may be taken at any time without restraint of diet or occupation. They produce neither nausea, griping nor debility, and as a family medicine they have no rival.

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT.

THE CRUCIAL TEST of the value of a medicine is time. Does experience confirm the claims set forth in its favor at the outset? is the grand question. Apply this criterion, so simple, yet so searching, to TARRANT'S EFFERVESCENT SELTZER APERIENT. How has it worn? What has been its history? How does it stand to-day?

Tarrant's Seltzer Aperient

is a household name throughout the United States. It is administered as a specific, and with success, in Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Nervous Debility, Liver Complaint, Bilious Remittents, Bowel Complaints (especially Constipation,) Rheumatism, Gout, Gravel, Nausea, the complaints peculiar to the maternal sex, and all types of Inflammation. So mild is it in its operation that it can be given with perfect safety to the feeblest child; and so agreeable is it to the taste, so refreshing to the palate, that children never refuse to take it. TO THE SUFFERERS WITH RHEUMATISM.

In view of the numberless sufferers afflicted with this painful malady, I feel induced to offer to the public my "ANTI-RHEUMATIC MIXTURE," which medicine proves to be the only successful remedy in this line, for it always gives instant relief, and in most cases cures permanently.

During the last fifteen years I have cured thousands of people, in this State and city, of this dreadful disease, with this medicine; and, what astonishes most, the patient recovered by the use of a single bottle of it. This medicine cures nothing but Rheumatism, and should the patient not recover by using the first bottle of it, that patient is not afflicted with Rheumatism at all. This being the first time of making my discovery known to the public after fifteen years of most successful results, I hope the sufferers will take advantage of this rare remedy, and by doing so add their names to the thousands already cured by it.

WHAT THE FROGS SAY.

When the frogs awake in spring,
And the woods and meadows ring,
Johnny wonders what they say,
Peeping, croaking, night and day.

"Oh!" says grandpa, "half asleep,
First they cry: 'How deep? How deep?
Oh, deep,
Ankle-deep,
Deep, deep!'

"By and by they're all awake,
Ponds with voices thrill and quake:
'Oh, deep,
Knee-deep,
Deep, deep!'

"Small ones, looking thin and queer,
Scream out quickly, as in fear:
'Stay here,
Stay here,
Better stay here!'

"Old one cbides with notes profound,
Hoarsely, slowly: 'Go around,
Around,
Around,
Better go round!'"

Go they? stay they? I'll be bound,
Which they do you've never found.

The Nursery.

How God Spoke to Jess.

BY JENNIE HARRISON.

They were so glad to get out of the little school-room that warm, bright summer day—Charlie and Jess—"Jess" the children called her for short. A short name suited her; she was short herself; plump and rosy, and as bright-looking as one of the wild flowers which looked up at her every day as she passed through the meadow with her little bare feet.

It had been so close and warm in the school-house, and the tiny breeze which began to stir among the trees was very pleasant to the children.

"Jess," said Charlie, pulling some blackberries from the bushes by the roadside, "there's lots of 'em down in the hollow!"

"Let's go get 'em!" answered Jess, clapping her two brown little hands together. "Mother likes 'em; and we'll have some for her tea, to s'prise her."

"Jolly!" said Charlie, expressing his agreement in boy fashion.

"Well, you stay here, and I'll slip in and get a pail, and I'll be so sly mother won't guess anything about it."

Charlie put himself astride of the rail-fence, and sat whistling contentedly, while Jessie pattered in and secured the pail.

"Mother was sewing, and I just kissed her, and told her how hot it was, and said I guessed we'd stay out."

"What's them?" asked Charlie, as something rattled in the pail on Jess' arm.

"Cakes. Mother said: 'Are you hungry? there's cakes in the pantry;' so I got some for you and me."

They ate the cakes as they went down toward the hollow.

And the wind in the trees blew more fresh and strong, and the shining blackberries nodded their heads, as if to say: "Come and pick us;" and Charlie and Jess began their work with great zeal.

"It's a pretty big pail," said Charlie, after awhile.

"Yes; but may be if we get it full we'll have a blackberry pudding to-morrow," answered Jess. "Blackberry pudding's good; ain't it, Charlie?"

"I bet you!" Charlie's mouth watered, and he picked faster than ever.

It grew cooler, and a great cloud came up and shut out the sun.

"That's good!" said Charlie, pushing back his straw hat, and letting the cool air fan his face. Jess had long before let her sun-bonnet fall back, and the sun and breeze had both kissed her rosy cheeks.

Far off, over the mountain, the great cloud grew blacker and blacker, and the forked lightning flashed out every few minutes; but the children did not see it, with their heads hidden among the blackberry bushes.

The wind rose higher, and sounded like great voices sighing and moaning among the trees.

"Why, I b'lieve it's going to rain, Jess!"

"It's more'n half full," said Jess, looking into the pail. "We can stay a little longer; 'twon't rain yet."

"It'll be so jolly to have the blackberry pudding!" quoth Charlie, picking away again.

The wind made such a noise in the trees and bushes that the children did not know when the first sprinkle of rain came, and presently the sprinkle changed to a sudden dash, which caused them to look up in despair. Looking up they saw the lightning too, and it was coming nearer and nearer.

"Oh, Charlie, what'll we do?"

"We'll get it worse if we try to go home; let's stay under the trees."

"But the lightning, you know—oh! oh!" It flashed into their faces, and a heavy clap of thunder made Jess almost cry.

"We might get killed!" suggested Charlie, with a very grave face. "How mad the clouds look!—just as if they wanted to hurt a boy and girl!"

Jess' lip quivered, but she did not say anything.

Charlie set the pail of berries carefully under a bush, and then stood close to his sister, trying to talk very bravely, like a boy who wasn't a bit afraid.

"I wish we had gone home, though! it's so mean to be all wet. You'll be sopping, Jess! and catch your death of cold, like enough!"

Jess did not pay much attention to this cheerful remark, but uttered her little "oh" at every clap of thunder, and clung to Charlie's arm.

It was a fierce storm, but nothing did them any harm except the rain, and by and by they had courage enough to go and sit on a broad stone just at the edge of the field. The clouds began to break after awhile, and the rain softened to a gentle patter, and Charlie chatted away quite merrily. But Jess did not speak much, until suddenly, right among the clouds, and just in the midst of the dying storm, a beautiful rainbow appeared.

"Oh, see, Jess! there's a rainbow! ain't it bright?"

Jess' cheeks, that had grown pale, flushed gladly, and she looked steadily at the beautiful bow for a minute without speaking. Then she turned to her brother, with large eyes full of earnest meaning: "There! ain't I 'shamed to be so afraid, when God is up there, putting his rainbow in the clouds!"

"Rainbow don't keep off the hurt," said Charlie, laughing loudly, while a gentleman walking by stopped to look curiously at the two wet children.

Jessie did not notice either one, but stood looking up at the rainbow with a thoughtful face.

"It's just like hearing God speak," she said, "'cause he said he'd put it there. Seems as if he was speaking to me just now, and saying: 'Little girl, what made you so afraid of my storm; didn't I promise you?'"

"Pshaw! that was about the flood," answered Charlie, looking very wise. "You didn't s'pose there was going to be another one, did you?"

Jess looked a little puzzled. And then the strange gentleman spoke:

"No; but she knows that the same God who put the rainbow of promise there, out of love to his people, sees her among them, and loves and cares for her. Isn't that it?"

Jess turned and looked glad at what the stranger said.

"I know he'd take care of me," she said; "I forgot till I saw the rainbow."

"That is just the way we all do, my little girl—we forget, and get frightened, and, after all, there is the good God up there with his rainbow of love."

"I s'pose he cares as much for little boys and girls as he did for Noah and all them people."

"Yes, indeed; and they never need be afraid, no matter how great the storm is."

"But if they should get killed," suggested Charlie.

"I s'pose that wouldn't hurt 'em either, if they was good, and wasn't afraid to see God," replied his sister slowly, as if she were trying to think it out.

"No," said the gentleman; "when people die it is God taking them, you know, and that can't hurt if they love him and are ready to go."

"I'll never, never be so afraid again, even before the rainbow comes," said Jess.

Charlie picked up the pail of blackberries, and proposed that they should go home. The gentleman took Jess under his umbrella, and they talked together, as they walked, of the good God who had put his rainbow in the clouds, so that all people, young and old, might be reminded how much he loved and cared for them.

Jess watched the beautiful colors of the bow that stretched clear across the stormy sky, and the light seemed to shine down into her face, it had such a bright, trustful look, as she thanked the stranger, and went into the house with the blackberries for mother, who sat anxiously watching for her children.—*N. A Market Lesson.

Eddie Tracey was spending a week or two with his uncle in the city. One Saturday evening his uncle proposed they should take a walk after tea. He was tired with his hard work in his study, and it rested him to walk and talk with Eddie, who was always seeing so many wonders in the strange scenes around him.

This evening they turned their steps toward a great market, and Eddie was astonished at the crowds pouring into it from every direction.

"Where do all these people find food to eat?" asked our country boy, his mind overwhelmed with the thought of furnishing them with sufficient supplies.

But when he was fairly in the market, and walked up and down its seemingly endless mazes, when he saw the vast stock of meat and poultry, the mountains of vegetables, and the vast array of fruits, and indeed everything eatable, he wondered still more how all that amount of provisions could ever be disposed of.

When he returned home he spoke of these wonders to his aunt.

"It is a matter of wonder to me still," said his aunt, "as I have seen it. Just imagine one man taking a contract to feed all this city. Think of the number of persons to be fed, and the amount and variety of provisions required. If the most skillful hoard of managers undertook such a work, what a confusion would take place! One day there would be an excess, and perishable articles would be lost in vast quantities. The next day a scarcity of supply might produce great suffering. Then, too, it would be hard to distribute it equally, and, if some remote corner was forgotten, what would become of the poor inhabitants? Yet God has arranged a great net-work of agencies by which even the lowliest is fed. Thousands of people are employed in this great work of his, who are only moved by their self-interest, their desire to gain by trading. Yet they work out his will as unconsciously to themselves as if they were mere wheels of a machine. They work with zeal and cheerfulness, content with the reward he gives to honest labor. I can see God's wonder-working hand as truly in a city market as in the movement of the spheres. How admirably, though blindly, all combine to perform this vast work of feeding so many thousands! One alone would accomplish but little. What infinite wisdom it must take to plan such an enterprise, and what infinite power to bring so many free agents together to work it out!"

That market lesson was one which Eddie long remembered. It gave him a near view of God's overruling providence that he never forgot.—Child's World.

THE persecution of the Christians in the East is not yet finished. In the Ottoman empire the Grand Visier has declared his intention to stop the printing and sale of the Bible in the Turkish within the empire. Converts to Christianity from Mohammedan faith have endured great persecution; some have been loaded with chains, some have been driven into banishment, and other methods of suffering have been inflicted upon others.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Thoughts for the Month.

In our last we discussed at length the handling of cotton, and shall not repeat. It is hardly necessary, at this day, to direct attention to the importance of taking care of the seed as the cotton is ginned. That intended for planting the next crop, after being carefully separated from the rest, should be sunned as soon as ginned, and stored away in a dry place—never directly on the ground.

In response to our inquiry in a former number, how good, well-developed seed might be separated from the faulty and immature, a gentleman writes us that a gin has been invented in Alabama which accomplishes this; the heavy seed are dropped in one place, the light deposited in another. If it works well we should regard it as a very important invention.

That portion of the seed to be used as manure should be placed at once under shelter, and kept there until they are applied to the land or composted. Southern farmers do not begin to appreciate the wealth they have in cotton seed. Its value as a manure for grain has long been acknowledged, but in former years it was regarded as not adapted to cotton. Now it is known that, in connection with dissolved bone, it is unsurpassed as a cotton fertilizer. Its great value consists in the nitrogen it contains. It is essentially an ammoniacal manure; hence its adaptation to corn, wheat and other grains. For cotton the proportion of ammonia is too great. This is corrected by adding dissolved bones, or, as it is generally expressed, "acid phosphate." This year we used such a compound, mixing ten bushels cotton seed with one hundred pounds Etiwan dissolved bones; but we think the proportion of cotton seed too large—too much weed, and too green and luxuriant. Seven or eight bushels to the one hundred pounds would have done better.

Fifteen bushels cotton seed and two hundred pounds dissolved bones per acre would be a heavy manuring for ordinary land. As the cotton seed is raised on the farm, the requisite money outlay would be for the phosphate only, and this, for the best article, ought not to exceed, laid down at the farm, two cents a pound or $4 an acre. Ammonia is the expensive ingredient in fertilizers, and what we wish to impress on the farmer who raises cotton is that he ought never to spend one cent for ammonia after the outlay required for the first crop he raises. His cotton seed, properly taken care of and judiciously used, can and ought to supply all the ammonia he needs, not only for his cotton, but grain crops also. If, however, he allows the seed to be thrown out in the weather and rot, it will lose a great deal of this costly element (nearly double in value that of any other element of the seed,) and be inadequate to supply his wants. If, on the other hand, they are kept under cover till February, then deposited in drill, and phosphate scattered on them, all their virtue is retained, with the least labor or expense of handling incurred.

GATHERING CORN.

For the first time in many years the South has made a crop of corn which will approximately supply its wants. This is a cause for general congratulation and joy, and we trust the feeling of comfort and ease that well-filled cribs inspire will bring about still greater attention to grain crops the ensuing year. It becomes us now to take good care of that which is made, to house it in season and feed it economically. Corn left long in the field after it is ripe loses from depredations of birds and other animals, and many ears rot from water getting in the shuck or from their lying on the ground. While it is very important to pick cotton as fast as it opens, it is poor economy to neglect corn to do so. Ordinarily, however, the two crops can be gathered without interfering with each other, damp, drizzly days, unsuited to cotton-picking, being selected to gather corn. Packing away in the shuck a little damp is regarded by many as the best preventive of the depredation of the weevil. We prefer, anyhow, to put away corn in shuck, it being more convenient to shuck it in winter than at the present busy season. It is good work for cold, rainy days in winter. Don't put off selecting seed corn until spring; if you have not gone over your field and made selections already, have barrels convenient and throw into them the best ears while shucking or feeding out the corn.

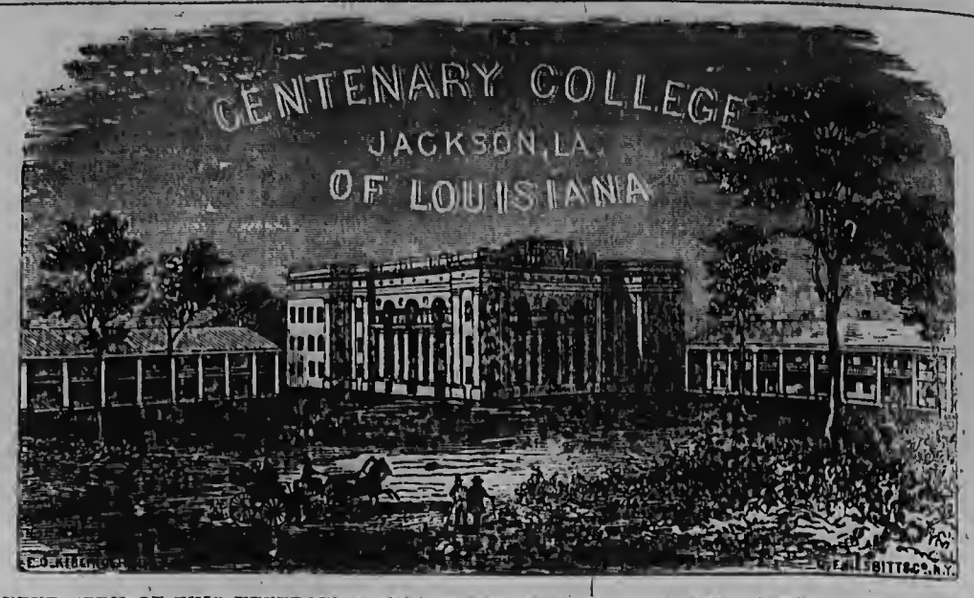
PEAS.

Be sure to pick enough for seed. The quickest mode is to cut down the vines with a scythe, gather up and thresh out. A laborer can thus gather five times as many in a day as he can by hand-picking. Those not needed for seed can be gathered in like manner and stacked like hay, or housed. They make excellent winter feed for mules or milk cows. That part of the crop intended for hay should be cut and cured before the earliest frost, as the leaves drop off very freely after they are touched by it. After the vines have been cut and wilted a little, collect into rolls as large as can be conveniently handled and pile loosely under shelter.

SWEET POTATOES.

Dig just before hard frost—light frosts appear to do no harm. Select a dry time, if possible. Separate the cut from the sound, and put away in the old-fashioned banks or hills. Protect these from rain, but cover the potatoes lightly at first, leaving the top open for the "sweating" to complete itself and the vapor to pass off. As cold weather comes on, stop up the hole and make the dirt on sides of banks ten inches or a foot thick. The potato grows well on the same land every year without rotation. A good plan is to run a large shovel in water-furrow, list down the vines in this, and cover them by running a turn plow on each side. This sides the potatoes and renders them easy to dig.—Southern Cultivator.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.



THE NEXT TERM OF THIS VENERABLE INSTITUTION OPENS ON THE FIRST MONDAY IN OCTOBER, 1874.

Faculty.—REV. C. G. ANDREWS, A. M., President, and Professor of Mental and Moral Science, Political Economy and International Law; REV. A. B. HOLCOMBE, A. M., Professor of Mathematics and Adjunct Professor of Natural Science; G. H. WILEY, A. M., Professor of Ancient and Modern Languages; ——, Professor of Natural Science; THOMAS J. KERNAN, A. M., Principal of the Preparatory Department and Adjunct Professor of Modern Languages.

Charges.—Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in College, $60; Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in Preparatory Department, $40; Contingent expenses, $5. A matriculation fee of $5 must be paid on entering any regular college class. One-half the charges must be paid when the student enters; the other half on the beginning of the second term, March 1.

Board.—Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be had in the best families for $20 per month. Day-boarding with the same families, $15 per month. Rooms provided in the dormitories free of rent. Board to be paid in advance at least one month.

Location.—This institution is located in the lovely village of Jackson, about twelve miles from Bayou Sara, in a grove of pine, magnolia, oak and beech. The location is remarkable for its beautiful woodlands, its bland and delightful atmosphere, its pure water, its unrivaled healthfulness, and its cultivated and refined society.

When Founded.—The college was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and ceded to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845.

Alumni.—Its Alumni numbers two hundred and three, and they are to be found in the most honorable and useful stations in the land.

Apparatus and Cabinet.—The college possesses a valuable set of Philosophical, Astronomical and Chemical Apparatus, and also a well-selected Mineralogical and Geological Cabinet. The apparatus includes a Theodolite, Sextant, Compass, Circumometer, Attwood's Machine, Whirling Tables, Electrical Machine, Air Pump, various combinations of the Mechanical Powers, Batteries, Chemical Tests, etc., sufficient for a thorough and extended course of observations and experiments. Steps have been taken by the Board of Trustees to put these in thorough repair.

Literary Societies.—There are two regular Literary Societies connected with the institution. These are of great utility to young men acquiring a liberal education—improving them in the art of public speaking, making them in some degree familiar with the proceedings of deliberative bodies, and in cultivating systematic business habits. Each Society has a convenient hall and a well-selected Library—about one thousand six hundred volumes each which, added to the College Library of two thousand volumes, makes over five thousand volumes in the college.

Buildings.—The Trustees are determined to continue the repairs on the buildings till completed. The grand Center Building is a noble specimen of architectural beauty and adaptation to the purposes of its erection. The wings, built of solid brick, present each in front of two hundred feet, with upper and lower galleries the entire length, supported by Tuscan columns, and with the center making in the perspective a continuous front of seven hundred feet.

Preparatory Department.—In the Preparatory Department students are fitted for regular college classes, or may obtain a thorough English or commercial education.

The Faculty.—Its Faculty are men of experience and success in teaching.

Scientific.

THE Journal of Chemistry says that a chain of compressed cakes of gun cotton tied around the trunk of a large tree and exploded will cut it down instantly by the violence of its action. The cut through the trunk is as sharp as that done by the keenest ax.

THE germination of seeds can be facilitated by chemical agencies, especially by ammonia and oxalic acid. By placing them in a solution of the latter substance they will begin to germinate within one or two days, even after having been kept for forty years, and are then to be planted in the usual way. Wheat has been raised from seed found in an Egyptian tomb two thousand to two thousand five hundred years old. It was soaked in fatty oil before planting.

PROF. GILL has recently investigated the genus Micropterus, to which belongs the now well-known "black bass." The species are only known from the waters of North America, east of the Rocky mountains. Although several have been described, Prof. Gill finds but two valid ones, viz.: the M. salmoides, or green bass, and M. nigricans, or black bass. The former is found west of the Alleghanies and south of the Potomac river, in the Atlantic States. The Southern people often call it "salmon" or "chub," by a strange perversity. The "black bass" is naturally confined to the waters of the lakes and Mississippi only, but has recently been introduced into various Eastern streams.

M. VORLET D'AOUST says, in La Nature, that in Mexico deposits of atmospheric dust occur in beds of sufficient thickness to stamp them as true geological layers. These strata, which have frequently formed a puzzle to geologists, are composed of a yellowish clayey earth, which not only envelopes isolated mountains, but forms the flanks and bases of some of the most elevated ranges, such as those of Popocatepeti and Orizaba. The revetment extends upward to a height of about 12,000 feet, and in its lower portions varies in thickness from 180 to 320 feet. In the midst of the deposit are found blocks of stone and detached fragments which have rolled down the mountains, and which have become agglomerated by the dust as if by cement. The dust is raised by dust storms which frequently occur on the Mexico plains. These throw up great clouds to heights of 1,500 and 2,000 feet in the air, often obscuring the sky, and changing its hue to a yellowish color. The dust is then blown by wind currents toward the mountains, which act as a barrier, and check its further progress; for once deposited on their slopes it cannot again rise, as the storms take place only on the plains. It is curious to notice that this action of the atmosphere completes a circle begun by the water. The latter carries earth from the hills down to the plains, where it is transported back to the mountains by the winds, and so a continual circulation is maintained.

ON THE SOURCE OF ATMOSPHERIC ELECTRICITY.—In a recent number of the Journal of the Austrian Meteorological Society, Muthry has contributed somewhat to a better understanding of the obscure subject of atmospheric electricity by considering it in reference to its geographical distribution. He maintains that the distribution over the earth's surface of the quantity of electricity is in general parallel with the distribution of temperature; it increases and diminishes with the latter, as well in reference to the earth's surface as in reference to the time of the year and the day. The insolation of the earth is to be considered as the source of the atmospheric electricity; its origin lies in the insulating stratum, and it is in this respect to be considered as terrestrial and not celestial. Atmospheric electricity diminishes as we go from the equator to either pole, and it therefore does not depend on precipitation of vapor, but on temperature. Terrestrial magnetism increases in force as we approach the poles. Electricity is strongest in dry, hot deserts. Contrary to the theories of Delmann and of Peltier, Muthry holds that aqueous vapor is merely the conductor, or rather convector, bearing the electricity into higher regions. He suggests that it is more important to meteorology to observe the quantity than the kind of electricity, and that the simple straw electrometer of volta will suffice, instead of the more delicate and complicated instruments that have been deemed necessary. The most important problems that are now remaining to be solved are, he thinks, the details of the geographical distribution in reference to latitude, longitude, and dry and moist climates.

OUR LIFE is determined for us; and it makes the mind very free when we give up wishing, and only think of bearing what is laid upon us, and doing what is given us to do. George Eliot.

Red river	1,532
Mississippi river and bayous	8,295
Railroads	3,957
Mobile	1,906
Texas	234
Lake	46
Total	15,970

On Saturday the market opened with a good demand and moderate offerings, but with rather less strength, except for staple kinds, and 1,200 bales changed hands during the morning at prices indicating no quotable variation, after which the advantage was more on the side of the buyers, and further sales were effected to the extent of 1,400 bales, showing a total business of 2,600 bales, mostly at a slight falling off. On Monday the sales summed up 1,300 bales. On Tuesday, the receipts of the previous day having been sampled, the supply afforded more scope to buyers, who came forward with increased spirit and took 4,400 bales (precisely 4,405) which is the heaviest business of the season, the largest previously being 4,150 bales on the seventh instant. Prices exhibited no quotable change. Staple kinds continued very firm, while other descriptions showed some irregularity, without any quotable change. Strict good ordinary to low middling sold at 14c., middling at 14⅝c., middling to strict middling at 14⅞c., strict middling at the same, good middling at 15c., and middling fair at 15⅛c. Nineteen brokerage houses participated in the business, one of which took 1,200 bales.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 8,850 bales, against 6,250 for the corresponding time last week and 6,100 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 62,053 bales, against 50,389 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 61,851 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 814 bales to Great Britain and a decrease of 4,881 to France, and 430 to other foreign ports. NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

Religious Notices.

THERE will be a camp meeting at Yellow River church, in Yellow River mission, forty miles northeast of Milton, Florida, and forty miles east of Brewton, Alabama, to commence on Thursday before the first Sunday in November next. It will be self-supporting. Ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church South are respectfully invited, and will be provided for.

S. W. DOUGLAS, P. C.

CAMP MEETING NOTICE.—A camp meeting will be held in McComb City, commencing on Wednesday, October 14, 1874, and will continue one week. The meeting will be self-supporting, and every person will be expected to provide for their own food and lodging. We have some four or five houses within one-fourth of a mile of the ground, of five large rooms each, which can be had for a small rent for the meeting. Each suite of rooms has ample accommodations for a whole society.

Tent-poles can be had on the ground. The DeSoto House, a temperance hotel, the largest and finest hotel in the State, will furnish board and lodging for the week at $1.50 per day; board, without lodging, at $1.25 per day. Fifty cents per meal, and same for lodging, for transient customers.

No pains will be spared to make this a profitable meeting to the people of southern Mississippi.

Half-fare tickets will be furnished by the New Orleans, St. Louis and Chicago railroad, and the railroad company will send extra trains on Sabbath morning to McComb City, from the north and south. If the people on the road generally wish it. The trains leave McComb City every night going north at half-past ten, and south at eleven P. M.

We have secured the promise of several eminent clergymen to attend the meeting and give us their help. Our help is in the name of the Lord.

Further arrangements will be published when made.

If we have a good rally and success we may make a permanent arrangement for a yearly feast of tabernacles for southern Mississippi.

Ministers will be provided for by the meeting.

Any communication desiring information can be addressed to Rev. H. M. Church, McComb City, Mississippi.

The constitution is carried in this county by about 1,900 majority. Information from other counties indicates the constitution is carried by a very large majority.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 14.—Twenty-one foreign governments have already accepted invitations extended them to participate in the Centennial Exhibition: Norway, Sweden, Germany, Belgium, the Netherlands, France, Mexico, Guatemala, San Salvador, Venezuela, Peru, Ecuador, Chili, Brazil, United States of Colombia, Argentine Confederation, Liberia, Hayti, Sandwich Islands and Japan.

Ex-Governor Andrew G. Curtin has arrived in the city. He is giving his time to promoting the success of the Centennial Exposition. Ex-Governor Bigler is working in conjunction with Mr. Curtin in various plans for benefiting the cause.

NEW YORK, Oct. 15.—The Tribune correspondent sent to Alabama to investigate the outrages in that State, in a letter from Livingston, Sumter county, dated the eighth instant, says:

"I must not close this letter without calling attention once more to the fact that the great majority of the reports received by the Attorney General from this State, and given to correspondents at Washington, are an echo wholly without foundation, or monstrously exaggerated."

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15.—The October returns of the Department of Agriculture indicate an average condition of the corn crop of eighty-six per cent., against eighty-three per cent. in September. All the New England States show an improved condition, except Maine and Connecticut. The Middle States declined during the month. The South Atlantic coast States and the Gulf States, as a whole, about hold their own, except Louisiana, where the average sinks from seventy-five to sixty-nine.

MEMPHIS, Oct. 15.—Cotton-stalks, which were brought in and placed on exhibition at the Cotton Exchange to-day, prove conclusively that the frosts of the past few mornings were severe enough to check the growth of the plant, and seriously injure if not entirely destroy all the young bolls. The leaves of the plants on exhibition present a crisped appearance, while the young bolls look considerably blackened.

LITTLE ROCK, Oct. 16.—Returns from fourteen additional counties sustain last night's estimate—75,000 majority for the constitution. The State ticket, headed by Garland for Governor, runs about even with the constitution. So far but three counties have voted against the constitution—Phelps, Jefferson and Lincoln. The Republicans have elected but eight or ten members of the Assembly.

INDIANAPOLIS, Oct. 16.—Fuller and more complete returns from all legislative districts in the State show the following result: Senate—Democrats 23, Republicans 24, Independents 3. House—Democrats 52, Republicans 37, Independents 11. The Democratic majority on the State ticket will probably reach 18,000.

NEW YORK, Oct. 18.—The Herald's Washington special says: "The German government has positively disclaimed any intention of purchasing a naval station in Costa Rica, with additional assurances that the German government not only respects the Monroe doctrine, but most cordially approves it, and, like the United States, whose ships of war traverse every sea, Germany has no need of naval stations in distant countries."

The Herald's New Orleans special correspondent relates an interview to-day with the Conservative leaders, including General Ogden, commander of the Leaguers. All agree that there will be no further bloodshed in the city. They believe many negroes will absent themselves from the polls on election day, and that the State will go Democratic by six thousand to eight thousand majority. No trouble is anticipated by them except in the parishes about Shreveport, Monroe and Baton Rouge. Some of the Republican leaders concede that the State will go Democratic.

The World's special from Tuskaloosa, Alabama, announces the arrival of a company of the Second United States Infantry on Friday. One officer expressed surprise to find the city as quiet as a New England village. The troops met with a hearty welcome.

NEW YORK, Oct. 19.—Buckland, the New York Times' correspondent, has been shot by the Spanish Republicans. He was private secretary of Postmaster Jewell while in Russia, and was placed on the Times' staff upon Mr. Jewell's recommendation. Buckland was seeking the Carlist headquarters when captured, and was shortly after shot.

NEW YORK, Oct. 20.—The Episcopal Congress will not venture to change the phraseology of the creed.

The House of Bishops gives formal consent to the consecration of Wells as Bishop of Minnesota.

The House of Bishops sends a message to the lay delegation, authorizing three bishops to suspend a bishop who abandons communion of the church.

The Seymour question will be voted on to-morrow, and then the session will be open.

CINCINNATI, Oct. 20.—The Gazette's Fort Wayne, Indiana, special says: Considerable uneasiness exists there, occasioned by the unusual drouth and heavy prairie and bush fires in that vicinity. At times the city is filled with almost blinding smoke and falling ashes, which after sundown settle down upon the city so dense as to render breathing and seeing difficult. Considerable damage is reported among farmers, but no authentic statement can be obtained.

FOREIGN.

RIO JANEIRO, Oct. 19.—The news from the Argentine States continues warlike. The insurgent leaders, Rivas, Booger and Arredondo, have joined General Mitre. Several vessels of the navy have gone over to the insurgents. Sarmiento has taken command of the troops defending Buenos Ayres. The Argentine government has requested the authorities at Montevideo to prohibit enlistments and the export of arms for the rebel forces.

The Nation on Louisiana.

The New York Nation—calm and dispassionate in its discussion of public affairs—says of the Louisiana emeute:

The Northern voters can insist on that which violates no political tradition, which involves no concessions or pledges, no expense or trouble, and which religion and humanity and the general safety imperatively call for, and which a roused and indignant public opinion can bring about, viz.: the absolute and immediate withdrawal of Federal countenance and support from the knaves who now have the upper hand in Southern politics, and the filling of Federal offices at the South with a new and better class of men, who will serve as missionaries rather than panderers and conspirators. The success of the thieves in South Carolina and Louisiana, as well as elsewhere, and their hold on the ignorant masses whom we have enfranchised, are mainly due to the fact that our marshals and collectors and surveyors and postmasters are their confederates, and keep them assured of the support of the authorities at Washington in case the worst comes to the worst. This ought to come to an end unless the public takes the matter in hand. There is enough stolid and selfish insensibility at the White House, and enough lazy indifference in Congress, to stand a dozen such broils as this in Louisiana with perfect equanimity. The President is probably glad he has not had to kill the people or bombard an American city in order to reinstate Kellogg, but he is probably not sorry that he put him in power in the beginning, and does not care how long he stays in it.

THE following, from the Times of this city, shows how and after what purpose Southern outrages are manufactured by the radical politicians:

Senator Conkling has a good deal of the sounding brass and tinkling cymbal about him. Just now he is in the "Southern outrage" line, as the following circular, a copy of which was addressed by mistake to an unfriendly newspaper, abundantly attests:

ROOMS REPUBLICAN STATE CENT. COMMITTEE,
Indianapolis, Sept. 3, 1874.

Editor of Union, Rensselaer, Ind.:

Dear Sir: I desire to call your attention to the horrible scenes of violence and bloodshed transpiring throughout the South, and suggest that you give them as great prominence as possible in your paper from this time until after the election.

THOS. J. BRADY, Chairman.

This is said to have been dictated by the senator just after the close of his late "outrage" speech in Indiana.

ADVERTISING.—A number of years ago, when Orange Judd, publisher of the American Agriculturist, and his wife spent their evenings in putting up packages of seeds, and a penny had its full value to them, he sent a boy with a check for $100 to the New York Herald office, with instructions to pay what was due, and leave the rest for advertising. The boy, being dull of comprehension, did not understand him, and told the book-keeper to use $100 for one day. The next morning, what was Mr. Judd's horror to see, on taking up the Herald, "Read the American Agriculturist," repeated for nearly a whole column. He rushed down to the office for an explanation, and found that they had only followed instructions, and there was no help for it. "We are ruined," he said to his wife; "a whole year's advertising gone in one day." But instead of being his ruin it was the beginning of his success. Immediately subscriptions poured in from all over the country. The Agriculturist became an institution, and its proprietor is one of the wealthiest men of New York. Mr. Judd has continued from that day of his lucky mistake to be one of the most extensive and wealthiest advertisers in the country.

THE Rev. L. M. Lewis, who will be remembered by some in the East as a general in the Confederate army, but known principally in the West as a devoted and successful preacher, has been elected president of the new Arkansas Female College.

AN ENGLISH school girl recently wrote a composition on the provisions of Magna Charta, one of which, she said, was that the rights of the church should be preserved. "In violet."

From the Work.

DESOTO CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: We have had a gracious revival of religion at Keachie, Louisiana. A Methodist and Presbyterian union meeting was commenced on the fourth instant, and continued eight days, resulting in thirty-four accessions to the two churches—sixteen to the Methodist and eighteen to the Presbyterian. There were also conversions. We might say much of the preachers and the preaching, with the interest manifested generally; but we will leave all that to be filled out in the reader's imagination. The Lord is slow to anger and plenteous in mercy. J. P.

MANSFIELD, La., October 13, 1874.

SPRINGVILLE CIRCUIT, SHREVEPORT DISTRICT.—Mr. Editor: The work on this circuit being considerably scattered, the preacher in charge could not fill all the appointments. By request of the brother in charge and the presiding elder, the writer was assigned the Coushatta Academy appointment, at which place we have just closed a four days' meeting, and I hasten to inform you and the many readers of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE of the good work. God was mightily with us in convincing and converting power. As the result of this meeting, the church was wonderfully revived, and there were twelve or fifteen conversions and thirteen accessions. Thanks to Bros. Jesse Fulton and G. W. Singleton, who rendered valuable assistance. To God be all the glory.

D. B. CARGILL, Local.

PAULDING CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The camp meeting on the Paulding circuit is over. The first sermon was preached on Friday night, and the exercises closed on the next Thursday morning. There was a very large attendance. On Sunday there must have been two thousand on the encampment. Notwithstanding the magnitude of the crowd, the strictest order and decorum were observed. I cannot tell how many souls professed faith in Christ, but we think that a great number were converted. We had fifty-five accessions to the church and baptized twelve children. All who took part in the services were greatly blessed. The following itinerant ministers were in attendance: W. B. Hines, our presiding elder, L. B. Philips, G. M. Gilmore, A. Y. Armstrong, D. A. Little, J. D. Hays, and G. M. Liverman, from the Louisiana Conference. Local ministers: J. R. Cox, Thomas Linden and A. M. Fikes. I have received, up to date, ninety into the church, and have baptized thirty children.

J. H. HOLLAND, P. C.

PAULDING, October 9, 1874.

CROSS PLAINS CIRCUIT, NORTH ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The Lord has graciously visited Cross Plains circuit. In September we held a protracted meeting of some four or five days at Howell's chapel, which resulted in a gracious revival in the church. Some six or eight were added to our number.

The next was held at Bethel, in the same month, which was greatly blessed of the Lord. The church was powerfully revived, with some fifty-eight or sixty conversions, and some sixty-two or sixty-three added to the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

We also held another meeting at this place, on the first Sabbath in October, which continued about thirteen days. This last was considered to be the best ever held at this point. Some thirty-two or thirty-three converted, and thirty united with our church.

At the three meetings over one hundred connected themselves with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and the church was most powerfully built up. Our young men's associations and prayer meetings have been blessed. We had to our aid Dr. T. G. Slaughter, also Revs. A. Wells and Leak. Each of these aided us much.

T. MOODY, Pastor.

LIND GROVE CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: We have just completed our round of protracted meetings on this circuit; and although some of our meetings were not continued as long as they ought and would have been had we had help, yet we have, in a measure, realized the blessed promise: "Lo, I am with you alway." Notwithstanding this has been a peculiar year in many respects, especially on the money and bread and meat question, God has not forgotten to be gracious and merciful to his people.

Our meeting at Providence—a new place—was the best of the season. Many found peace, and the whole membership was wonderfully revived. Accessions, sixteen. Conversions, twenty-five. Several found peace who will unite with other churches. There was a rare manifestation of the divine glory from time to time as the meeting progressed; and, best of all, not a single mourner was left at the altar, but all were dismissed rejoicing in their first love.

Though we have not had as many accessions this year as last, yet I notice this difference: nearly all added to the church this year have been soundly converted to God. The work is of a deeper type, and the church is in as good condition spiritually as at any other period formerly. The family altars are doubled, and some of our new converts are "taking up this cross daily." I pray God that of all those who have been called unto holiness there may not one be found who will relinquish his hold on eternal life for the alluring vanities of time and sense. May the work still go on till all are saved.

T. H. MCCLENDON, P. C.

PLANTERSVILLE, La., October 3, 1874.

SUMMIT DIST., MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The Summit District Conference convened at Greensburg, Louisiana, October 8, 1874. Rev. A. B. Nicholson, presiding elder, in the chair. C. S. Stewart was elected secretary.

The reports as to the spiritual state, and the attendance upon the ordinances and social meetings of the church, from the various charges, were very good. The Lord has been gracious to his people, and his work has been pushed forward with great success. There have been revivals of religion in many places, and large accessions to the church.

More attention is being paid to Sunday schools, there being one in operation at almost every appointment in the district. There is, however, a lack of regular, faithful religious teachers in many of the schools. The financial systems and contributions to church purposes are not so good, but, considering the depressed state of affairs throughout the country, are as good, perhaps, as could be hoped for. While some of the preachers have had but a meager support, others have been better provided for.

A committee was appointed to locate a district camp ground. A committee was also appointed to select a suitable location for a district school of high grade, and to receive donations for the same.

The following resolution was adopted, viz.:

"Resolved, That in view of our troubles, civil and temporal, we recommend to our people the exercise of moderation and peace, and that in regard to both they implore specially, at the hour of evening twilight each day, the interposition of almighty God in our behalf."

Rev. William Hoover, Dr. George Nicholson, W. D. J. Warner and C. S. Stewart were elected delegates to the Annual Conference. Alternates—Robert Babington and Henry C. Newsom.

The next District Conference will be held at Amite City, Louisiana.

During the session of the Conference promiscuous was given to religious exercises, which were attended by large, attentive and serious congregations, and much good has been the result. C. S. STEWART, Sec.

CALCASIEU CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: No doubt much has been accomplished on this work during this year. Stars have been added to the Savior's crown, and this is all we pray, work and look for. But still the work is not in a wholesome condition. Very much remains to be done; and when men—not one only—filled with the spirit of the Master, are sent here, no doubt the "very much" will be accomplished. What the people here need sorely is a man full of missionary enterprise—another Keener. Such a man, no doubt, we have in our beloved presiding elder, Bro. Cobb. But he cannot support men if he sends them here. The people are too poor to do so, and the preacher cannot do without support. Is it not a matter of astonishment that in this vast parish of Calcasieu, containing over eighteen hundred taxpayers, there are but two Conference preachers? One of the two is our brother, Rev. E. B. Foust, whose only appointment is in Lake Charles, the other portion of his work being in Cameron parish. The present Calcasieu circuit is at least one hundred and twenty miles long, and there are more than two hundred and fifty church members—perhaps as many Baptists. But this is only a portion of the parish. In many parts the people are entirely destitute of preaching, notwithstanding they would be glad enough to have it. They hunger for the word, but cannot hear it. "And how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach unless they be sent?" It is of course impossible to preach at each meeting-house in this circuit on the Sabbath. Many of the appointments have to be filled during the week and at night, and there to meet with men, women and children who have toiled hard during the day, and witness with what eagerness they devour the word, and after service see them congregating into their several companies, headed by one of the party, who holds forth the splinters of blazing pine as they wend their way by its light along the narrow trail, in "Indian file," to their respective homes, perhaps five or six miles distant. One need not be told how they appreciate the gospel.

W. HART.

FARMERVILLE, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: We have had our second camp meeting on the Farmerville circuit, which was an improvement on the first, it being fitted up with a large shed and fifteen good substantial tents. We had the following preachers with us: Bros. S. S. Scott, Flournoy, Upton, J. C. Reed, Parish, Hearn, McKee, and seven local preachers. Father Glu, well known in north Louisiana, was with us. He is ninety years old. His presence and prayers and parting exhortation will be remembered by all present. The good Lord was with us in soul-converting power. Forty souls were converted. Thirty joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South. There have been over one hundred converts on the Farmerville circuit the last quarter, and about one hundred and ten joined the church.

We returned home yesterday, after having been to five camp meetings, all within thirty miles of my circuit, on the Homer district, and having been laboring night and day, with but one night to rest in six weeks. At these camp meetings there were about three hundred souls converted and added to the church; and there were four other camp meetings in this district that we could not attend. We had good order at all of these meetings, and during all the excitement that has been going on our hope has been in the Lord. Our people, both colored and white, are living in peace. While it is a privation in some respects to be without a railroad, we thank the Lord that the peace and quiet of our people is not disturbed with bad men who follow the railroads and stir up political strife among the people, and cause the colored people to get out of order, and thereby bring trouble and disaster upon all. I have been in north Louisiana nearly ever since the war, and if I have ever met a person belonging to what is called the Ku-Klax I do not know it. I am pained to see that our church is looked upon by some Northern correspondents recently in that light. But there is one consolation in the thought that the Lord, who is our Judge, knows that it is not true. All good people can know by our fruits whether it be true or not. Glory be to God for a religion that makes us happy in the presence of the devil and bad men.

R. PARVIN.

CHINA GROVE CAMP MEETING.—Mr. Editor: The seventh camp meeting was held at China Grove, Dale county, Alabama, commencing on Friday night, October 2, and ending on the morning of the seventh. From the first to the last of the meeting the atmosphere was clear and bracing, and the nights were star-lit and charming.

At the first hour the congregation was large and attentive. The first service was conducted by the Rev. M. E. Butt, presiding elder. The preliminary part of this first service was that of thanksgiving to the "God of all grace" for his preserving care over the congregation during the year which had just rolled by. This manner of service gave us a glorious beginning. During all of Saturday multitudes were arriving from near and from far, until the vast assembly represented a section of country three hundred miles in circumference; and in this gathering from different points, ministers of the gospel as well as the people were present. There were twenty-two ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church South present to aid, by preaching, exhortation or prayer, in the great and glorious work for which we were met. The following brethren did the preaching: Messrs E. Butt, W. D. Owens, J. M. Brown, John A. Green, L. C. Calhoun, Elisha Phillips, James Paul, A. Dowling, D. T. Harmer, T. Z. Hildreth, Zecheus Dowling, J. M. Johnston, John Sanders and J. Z. S. Connerly. All the preachers evinced great earnestness and zeal in the work assigned them. The preaching was characterized mainly as scriptural and unctuous. The happy and glorious result of the effort of five nights and four days may be found in the conversion of about fifty whites (besides several among the negroes,) and forty-three applicants for membership, among whom are some of the most prominent and influential citizens of this country. Besides all this, the whole church was powerfully blessed.

The last night of the meeting is worthy of special mention, because on it the faith and prayer of the whole camp, including the preachers, had been centered against the devil and sin. The work was commenced about sunset by a very successful flank movement in the grove, which soon reached some of the tents, the enemy retreating before the advancing, victorious column. About this time the soft, swelling trump at "the stand" summoned all the forces to the final attack. They promptly obeyed. The scene was really exciting. No doubt but that chariots of fire were marshaled all around and under the brilliantly-lighted canvas. Soon the soft, balmy air was bearing aloft and around the accents of sweetest song. Then came the sermon; at the close of which the "last" invitation to sorrowing, trembling sinners was made by the preacher, whose heart was greatly burdened by the issue of the hour. However, in a very little while the altar was well-nigh filled with penitents. Soul-stirring songs were uttered by those whose hearts were filled with the rich melody of music, permeated and sanctified by the grace of God. Heaven-reaching and power-bringing prayers were offered to God in the name of Jesus Christ, fully indorsed by five hundred living sons and daughters of God. The blessings came in copious showers of grace divine. The shouts of victory were heard from column to column, and from center to center, as the mighty hosts of God advanced. Thus the glorious work went bravely on till one o'clock next morning, when the battle ceased because the victory was complete. When the results were looked after it was found that there had been about thirty-five souls happily converted, and twenty-three valuable members added to the church by application during the night.

On Wednesday morning at sunrise the largest congregation we have ever seen at the closing service met under the arbor and worshiped together, and then separated till Friday night before the first Sabbath in October, 1875.

During the seven camp meetings held at this camp ground there have been, according to estimation, seven hundred and sixty-five conversions and four hundred and fifty additions to the Methodist Episcopal Church South. What pastoral charge in the South will surpass this camp ground in such results?

A. DOWLING.

OZARK, ALA., October 9, 1874.

Oregon Correspondence.

CORVALLIS, OREGON, Sept. 26, 1874.

MR. EDITOR: I shall not wittingly make a false statement, or an allusion from which a false conclusion may be had about Oregon.

I am laboring in the interests of no institution or society save the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Believing its theology, and approving its polity and government as the wisest and best that men have adopted, and that each and all accord with divine revelation, I have spent twenty-two of the best years of my life at her altars and in her pastorate, and feel now, at life's zenith, that I have no time or heart for any other work. My lot, in the providence of God, has been cast here in this beautiful and desirable land. I have a mission to fill as an embassador of Jesus that is high and sacred, and I am straightened in myself till it be accomplished.

I would not for any consideration stir up discontent in any heart. No doubt many, many people in the South are doing better there than they could here, and many whose condition would be bettered. Some would live longer and better if they would come here. But every one must be his own judge. I propose to state facts, as near as I can arrive at them, and leave others to their own conclusions.

1. We have a very good system of common schools over the whole State. School-houses are everywhere I have been. These public schools are run about six months in the year, and are free, as I understand it—supported by taxation and interest on a large sum of money invested for that purpose. Colleges are supported by public patronage. The agricultural department of Corvallis College is supported by government aid—over ninety thousand acres of land bequeathed for that purpose—and two students for every county in the State are entitled to tuition free.

2. Taxes are high enough—higher in some counties than in others. Twenty-one mills is the highest I have noticed; that includes all. Some counties sixteen mills.

3. Lands range from $1.25 to $100 per acre. Good lands, well improved, with school and church privileges, water and good society, etc., can be had at $20 to $30 per acre. I speak of good locations in the Willamette valley.

4. Our market facilities are not good. There is a pretty good home market for all family supplies; but our market for wheat, flour, wool, cattle, etc., is not what it will be. Wheat is low now—sixty-two and one-half cents per bushel. Wool sold for twenty-nine cents per pound.

5. Water is plentiful, and of the best kind—wells principally, yet springs are numerous. On many places wells are sunk, and pumps driven by windmills supply the stock with water. I have yet to see a place where water was not abundant, or could not be had with little trouble and expense. Water-power for machinery is wonderful. We have the finest kind of flouring mills all through the country; also saw mills. Lumber is from $8 to $15 per thousand.

6. It rains here a great deal from December to May. Indeed that may be called the rainy season. Much of the time it snows, but the storms are never severe—sometimes snowing and thawing alternately for days. I have never seen it rain hard here, as in Louisiana. Drizzles—Oregon mist is the familiar language of the country.

7. Labor to do farm work seems plentiful. Price, $1 per day and board. It is difficult to get cooks, unless you employ Chinese at high wages. Chinamen are good washers, and cheap enough.

8. Live stock is abundant, and varies in prices. A good horse can be had for from $90 to $125. Milch cows, $20 to $25. Sheep, $2, etc.

9. I have heard it thunder but twice since I have been in the State. I have never seen a lightning-rod. We rarely ever have high winds, though this is a breezy country.

10. There are very few insects. Fleas and flies abound during the summer; other insects are scarce.

11. Health is generally good. Not so much chill and fever or malarious diseases as in Louisiana. Yet we have sickness. People die. Consumption, typhoid fever, pneumonia, etc., are the most common diseases.

12. The professional callings are more crowded than artisans and farmers. Farming and stock-raising is profitable, and there is plenty of room for many more. Sheep business pays from twenty-five to forty per cent., I am told. Cattle and sheep find good grazing generally during the winter, although all good farmers put up hay to help them through. Timothy yields two to four tons.

13. The cost of getting here per capita, as emigrants, from St. Louis, need not exceed $110 in gold. It must be remembered that the prices of articles, as given above, are in gold and silver, as that is our currency.

Lastly, so many friends and strangers have written me about the country that I cannot reply to all their letters. Such may consider their favors answered in this.

My quarterly meeting is being held at this place now. Don't forget us away out here. God bless you.

Affectionately in Christ,

T. B. WHITE.

LEARN TO KEEP HOUSE.

BY MRS. M. A. KIDDER.

Beautiful maidens—aye, Nature's fair queens!—
Some in your twenties, some in your teens,
Seeking accomplishments worthy your aim,
Striving for learning, thirsting for fame,
Taking such pains with the style of your hair,
Keeping your lily complexion so fair,
Miss not this item in all your gay lives:
Learn to keep house—you may one day be wives.
Learn to keep house.

Now your Adonis loves sweet moonlight walks,
Hand-clasps and kisses, and nice little talks;
Then, as plain John with his burden of care,
He must subsist on more nourishing fare:
He will come home at the set of the sun
Heart-sick and weary, his working-day done:
Thence let his slippered feet never wish to roam:
Learn to keep house, that you thus may keep home.
Learn to keep house.

First in his eyes will be children and wife—
Joy of his joy, and the life of his life.
Next his bright dwelling, his table, his meals.
Shrink not at what my pen, trembling, reveals.
Maidens romantic, the truth must be told—
Knowledge is better than silver or gold;
Then "be prepared" in the spring-time of health:
Learn to keep house, though surrounded by wealth.
Learn to keep house.

Opposed to the Change.

MR. EDITOR: I intend to have no controversy with any one on the proposed change of our General Rule on the subject of temperance; but, as an old member and minister of the church, I respectfully ask leave to give my views in opposition to the change.

1. I think the change would do no good. The "making, buying and selling intoxicating liquors" will always be controlled by the demand for the article; and while the demand is great, and the "making, buying and selling" profitable, somebody will keep the market fully supplied; and if we pass the prohibitory rule, persons outside of our church will be glad to have it so, as it will give them just that much more to do in the way of "making, buying and selling," and will in the same ratio increase their profits. And if all the churches in the land were to pass a similar prohibitory law, those outside of any church would rejoice, as it would give them a monopoly of the trade. While the demand is great the supply will be ample, whether church members have anything to do with its manufacture or not. We have very plainly-expressed laws in the Bible against drunkenness, and we have them well condensed in our present General Rule against "drunkenness, or drinking spirituous liquors, unless in cases of necessity;" and, as we have done so well under that rule, I think we had better leave it untouched. It is true we are deeply mortified with a few cases of drunkenness in the church under our present rule, and the same would be the case under the new rule.

2. But my main objection to the change grows out of a well-grounded fear of what might—and I believe would—be the consequences of making a change, of doubtful policy at best, in our General Rules. Just admit the precedent that one of our long-established and sacredly-cherished General Rules can be changed or superseded, and none can tell when or how the evil will end. We can find as plausible a pretext for changing several other rules as has been urged for changing the one under consideration. For illustration, we have a rule, couched in scriptural language, against "the putting on of gold and costly apparel." But many of our people wear those prohibited articles. In order to nip the evil in the bud, how would it do to displace the present rule and supply its place with a new rule forbidding "the making, buying or selling," by the members of our church, of any jewelry or costly apparel? Outsiders would rejoice at the passage of such a rule, because it would give them a greater monopoly in the manufacture and sale of the interdicted articles; for while a lax administration of discipline and a vitiated public taste demanded such articles, they would be manufactured and sold, though not a Methodist in the world should engage in their production or sale. A similar change, with as good reason, can be proposed in regard to several other General Rules. I deprecate the precedent of making the least change in our constitutional code of rules. Have we not all subscribed to the doctrine that "we are taught of God to observe" these rules, even in his written word? If so, why should we attempt to add anything to the word of God? There is a world of safety in that single sentence which says: "Do not mend our rules, but keep them for conscience' sake." So far as moral discipline is concerned, we have rules enough for all practical purposes, if they are only properly enforced; but if there is not moral force enough in the church to enforce our present rule against "drunkenness, or drinking spirituous liquors, unless in cases of necessity," there will not be to enforce the proposed new rule, and so it will be a nullity in our fundamental law. Under the present rule the writer was reformed from an ignorant and dangerous tampering with ardent spirits in his boyhood, and has been a teetotaler for more than fifty-three years; and so he thinks any conscientious Christian would be, who voluntarily continues his allegiance to our rules by continuing his membership in our church.

J. G. JONES.

PORT GIBSON, MISS., Oct. 4, 1874.

To Stewards.

DEAR BRETHREN: Your office is one of the most important in our church. You constitute one of the most important wheels in the machinery of the church. The machine cannot run at all unless this wheel is kept in constant motion. The preacher cannot live and labor without a support, and he cannot get a support without a systematic and earnest effort on the part of the stewards. Permit me to make a few suggestions, both to stimulate and to assist you in your work.

1. Assess your members; or at least suggest to them the amount you think they ought to pay for the support of the preacher. Many persons do not know how much they ought to pay, and would be glad for the steward to suggest the amount. I have frequently had persons to ask me how much they ought to give to the missionary and other causes, and they always gave the amount I suggested. The steward, having canvassed the whole matter, knows better, as a general thing, how much each member ought to pay than the members themselves do. And generally they will cheerfully give the amount suggested, although it may be four or five times as much as they would give if left to determine the amount themselves. This plan, efficiently carried out, is certainly the most successful. But it requires nerve, prudence, patience and much labor.

2. Be sure to see every member, personally or by proxy, once or oftener during the year, specially on this business. Many of our members never pay anything because they are not seen and urged to pay. You must not wait for them to come to you and offer to pay of their own accord. Many of them you will never see unless you go to their houses for this purpose, for they never go to church, and very seldom anywhere else. I would most earnestly insist on this thing. The failure to do it keeps thousands of dollars out of the treasury of the Lord's house. I know it requires time and labor; but, brethren, it is essential to success in your work, and consequently to the success of the ministry in their work.

3. Ask your preacher occasionally whether or not he is in need of money or supplies; and if he is, try at once to get them for him. Don't wait until he is compelled by necessity to go to you, or perhaps to the members, and make known his condition, and ask for supplies. This is too much like begging. It is exceedingly unpleasant to a sensitive mind—it is humiliating. I am satisfied that generally, where the preacher's wants are properly presented to the people, they will supply them somehow, if they can. If they have not money, they will share their own supplies with him. This is my experience. But I don't want to be forced to make known my own wants directly to the people; the stewards should do this.

Your office, brethren, is a very laborious and unpleasant one; it subjects you to toils and trials; but the faithful discharge of your duties will secure the blessing of God, the approbation of your own consciences, and the love and gratitude of the preachers and their families.

Reunion of the Churches.

MR. EDITOR: You know that the Methodist Episcopal Church was once one great family, living North and South. I was a member of the family fifteen years before they separated, and during all that time there was a continual fuss in the family about African slavery. At that time the Discipline of the church, the Constitution of the United States of America and the word of God tolerated slavery. But our Northern brethren held that slavery was a great sin; and believing this, and knowing their settled and fixed purpose to set the negroes free, they commenced running them to the South, and selling them to their Southern brethren for cash, just as they sold their droves of horses and mules, to the highest bidder. Their Southern brethren being very rich, they bought their Northern brethren's slaves, and in this way our Northern brethren rid themselves of the great sin of slavery; they sold it to their Southern brethren for the cash in hand. After they did this they were still dissatisfied, and still kept up a fuss in the family. They were not willing for their Southern brethren to own slaves after they had sold them to them and received the money for them. In proof of this, they were about to expel one of their Southern brethren from the family because he married a Southern lady that owned slaves. To prevent such a great reproach as this on the family, and for the sake of peace in the future, the family publicly agreed, North and South, to separate and divide their property. This they did in the year 1844. But our Northern brethren, after the separation, refused to give their Southern brethren their part of the estate; they wanted it all themselves, and would not divide it at all until their Southern brethren forced them to do it by civil law. To this day these brethren North and South are at law about their property. After this division of the family North and South our Northern brethren, to accomplish their determined and fixed purpose to free the negroes, made it a political question, and succeeded in electing an abolition President; and this caused their Southern brethren to secede from the Federal government in order to protect their property. But, alas! for them, their Northern brethren would not let them go in peace, but waged war against them; and after a bloody war of several years' duration they succeeded in subjugating their Southern brethren, and in freeing all their negroes, and in disfranchising them, and placing them under military law, and compelled them to take the iron-clad oath before they were allowed to vote, and turned all their negroes loose among them free, to steal and murder them, and are now about to confiscate their lands and homes by enormous taxation, which is increasing every year, and are endeavoring to bring them all under negro government, and compel them to equalize themselves and families with negroes, politically, ecclesiastically and socially.

These are some of the things our Northern brethren have done and are still doing to us, and they cannot deny it. And yet, with all these facts staring them in the face, they have the brazen impudence to ask us to unite with them again. Will we do it? No, no, ten thousand times no. We will never do it while we have one thimbleful of brains left. It is gross folly in them to think of such a thing or mention such a thing, for we never intend to unite with them again while the blood is warm in our hearts. We are lawfully divorced from them, and we never intend to marry them again. Here the question arises: Why is it that the Northern Church wants the Southern Church to unite with them again? Is it because they love us as brethren? No; their conduct toward us now and during the past thirty years proves it is not. Well, then, what is the cause? I answer, I believe the cause is that they want the power to control the Methodist Episcopal Church South, just like President Grant has the power to control the Southern States. And if we unite with them they will have the desired power over us, and they will be certain to use it, as their past and present history proves. Now, Mr. Editor, let me tell you how they could do it.

1. If they could get us to go back and unite with them the next step would be to get the Southern African Church to unite with them also. After all were united together they would have full control of all the church property in the South, and then there would be no more law suits about church property; it would all belong to them.

2. Having the majority power in their own hands, they could depose all our white Bishops and preachers in the South for the great sin of seceding from the Methodist Episcopal Church; for they are a class of men, according to their past history, that are neither governed by the law of the church, the law of God nor the law of the land, but by the higher law of selfish ambition. Then, after all our white Southern Bishops and preachers are deposed, there will be negroes aplenty to supply all the Southern States with negro Bishops and negro preachers. Then the Southern Church, as well as the Southern States, would be completely under negro government.

Then what would be the consequences that would follow? 1. Political superiority in favor of the negro, for he will govern the State. 2. Ecclesiastical superiority in favor of the negro, for he will rule the church and all her institutions. 3. Social superiority in favor of the negro, for he will control all our institutions of learning, both in Church and State, Sunday schools and all. Then if we send our children to day schools we will have to send them among negroes, and if we send them to Sunday schools we will have to send them among negroes, and have negroes to rule over them.

You may say, Mr. Editor, that this is a dark picture drawn of our Northern brethren, and is very uncharitable. Truly it is dark, but it is no more dark than the facts; for according to their past and present history there is nothing too mean for some of our Northern brethren to do in order to punish and degrade us. It is high time for us to speak out boldly against uniting with such enemies as they are and have been for the past forty or fifty years.

Faith, Regeneration and Feeling.

MR. EDITOR: Having read articles in the ADVOCATE of the ninth and twenty-third of July, entitled "Christian Faith—What Is It?" and being much entertained thereby, my attention was called to this idea, as set forth in it, that feeling does not, in the majority of cases, attach to conversion. It may be said that the brother is not speaking of regeneration, but of faith. He either includes regeneration or ignores it.—See last paragraph of the article in the ADVOCATE of July 9. My impression is that faith, regeneration and feeling are always concomitant, faith preceding, in point of thought, and feeling following regeneration. By feeling I mean a sense of the change attained to or wrought by the Spirit.

Reflection upon the following facts will help us to a correct opinion on this important subject.

"Regeneration is the work of God in the heart of man." It implies peace growing out of a sense of acceptance with God, as well as a cessation of hostilities. "For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost."—Romans xiv, 17. "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace," etc.—Galatians v, 22. "My peace I give unto you. Not as the world giveth, give I unto you." it implies joy.—See references above. Joy certainly produces feeling. It implies love, yea, this is the principal ingredient. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy soul, and with all thy heart, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength," and "thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. There is none other commandment greater than these."—Mark xii, 30, 31. "Love is the fulfilling of the law." Did ever man love and not feel it? It implies communion with God through his Spirit. "God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your heart, crying, Abba, Father."—Galatians iv, 6. "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirits that we are the children of God."—Romans viii, 16. "That by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature," etc.—Second Peter i, 4. It implies hope—not a hope that we are accepted of God, but the hope of everlasting life after death. "In hope of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, promised before the world began."—Titus i, 2. It implies knowledge, the knowledge of our acceptance with God and the renewal of our heart. Yes, "we know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren."—First John iii, 14. "And hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us."—First John iii, 24. "Hereby know we that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit."—First John iv, 13. Other concomitant blessings might be presented, but these are sufficient to assure all seekers after God that the Christian religion is experimental as well as practical.

No man need be in doubt as to his conversion. Does he trust God? Does he love God? Does he love the brethren? "He that loveth not his brother abideth death." How much more of death is in him who loves not God! Can you trust God in all things, and are all your acts with an eye single to his glory? If so, all is well. If not, thou art yet in death." Seek pardon, seek peace, seize God by faith, and you shall enjoy him in love. He will comfort thee as soon as thou art ready. The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence.

ROBERT RANDLE.

Ludicrous Scene in a Pulpit.

A South German paper relates the following: In a Bavarian town of the most pronounced Catholic orthodoxy the priest preached lately against the Old Catholics, and related such horrible things about them that his pious hearers were literally horror-stricken at Old Catholic impieties. At last the preacher cried out: "The Old Catholics are so vile that they will all be cast into the pit, and if what I tell you is not true may the devil take me now on the spot!" His excitement was terrible, and he so struck the cushion that the book fell from it. Not far from the pulpit there sat an American, who had a negro servant with him, to whom he beckoned to take the book up to the priest, who, perhaps, had never seen one of those sons of Ham in his life. The negro at once obeyed, and as he mounted the lowest of the pulpit steps the clergyman repeated his wish that the devil might come and take him if what he had said against the Old Catholics was not true. Although the negro went softly, the preacher heard his footsteps, and, turning round, saw a black object solemnly, steadily and surely approaching him. He looked at him with terror, and, believing that he would be the next instant collared by his satanic majesty, he cried out, with trembling voice: "It is, after all, possible that there may be good people among the Old Catholics." Turning then round, to see if the object had disappeared, he saw it still steadily approaching. The perspiration burst out on his brow, and full of despair he called out: "There are even many good people among the Old Catholics!" Thinking that this would suffice, he turned round, but what was his horror to find that the object was close at hand. Imagining himself in the very grasp of Beelzebub, turning partly to the negro and partly to the congregation, he cried out: "May the devil come and take me if all the Old Catholics are not better than we are!" The terrified priest fainted from the fright, and it was only after some time that he recovered.

HAIR SNAKES.—We remember to have heard Prof. Eston, of the Rensselaer Institute at Troy, once say in a lecture that a hair snake was no more like a horse-hair than it was like an umbrella—a rather strong statement of a well-known fact. The Turf, Field and Farm says: "The common belief is that these creatures are a transformation of a horse-hair that has remained for some time in the water. 'When a walking-stick,' says Dr. Slack, 'becomes a snake, a horse-hair will become a worm.' As the former miracle has not taken place since the departure of the Israelites from Egypt, it is safe to conclude that the latter transformation has not recently been made. A dry hair placed in water will absorb the moisture, and from the unequal expansion of the exterior and the interior layers will become contorted; so, too, would a piece of two-inch rope, yet we have never heard of the latter having been accused of possessing vitality. The hair snake is a living creature, endowed with organs of locomotion and respiration, and capable of propagating its species. Scientifically it is known as 'Gordius aquaticus,' the generic name being derived from the Gordian knot, in allusion to the tangled appearance often presented by a multitude of these animals. The specific name 'aquaticus' is not so appropriate, for they thrive out of the water. Dr. Slack has taken Gordii six inches in length from the body of a grasshopper. They have also been found in the stomachs of insectivorous birds."

SCOTTISH PIETY.—One day recently the Hutchison's steamer was sailing round Cape Wrath, carrying some five hundred Lewis men from Stornoway to the herring-fishing at Wick. In the evening the captain was "challed" by a tourist about the Scottish strictness of view in relation to the Sabbath—it was Saturday evening—as a really impracticable strictness. The captain said that of the five hundred Lewis men "aft," not one, landing at Thurso late on Saturday night, would take a step toward Wick till Monday morning; that if the weather proved fine they would spend the night in the open air; if it proved bad they would seek shelter in outhouses; and that on the Sabbath day they would worship in groups, led by their headmen. About ten o'clock at night the captain's statement was strikingly illustrated by a solemn act of joint worship—singing, Bible reading and prayer—on the part of the whole five hundred, their grand shaggy heads, surmounting broad shoulders, being laid bare to the pelting wind and rain. Any one seeing those heads and shoulders of men worshiping God would have felt that, so long as men of their class people our country districts, we are not in sight of the poet's

"Woe to that land, to hastening ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates and men decay."

THE City of Peking, the latest built of the Pacific Mail Company's steamers, is regarded as the finest vessel ever built in the United States. She is spoken of as being second in size only to the Great Eastern, being five thousand five hundred tons burden. Her model is of the most graceful. Her sailing qualities have been well tested in trial trips along the coast to Newport and Boston, to the great satisfaction of those who were permitted to participate in them; and she is believed to be in every way a staunch and safe vessel. She is designed for the China and Japan trade.

DR. WAUGH tells us of a converted Hindoo who, when too weak to kneel to prayer, said: "I cannot pray, but I keep up a sweet talking with Jesus in my heart."

Obituaries.

MARY E., infant daughter of J. S. and M. A. Jackson, of Mansfield, Louisiana, died on the fifteenth of September, 1874. The angel band came and bore her away on their "snowy wings" to those unfading shores of Life's eternal river. Rest, sweet little one, in the arms of thy Savior.

J. E. BRADLEY.

DIED, in Bienville parish, Louisiana, September 7, 1874, at the age of four years, five months and three days, MARY WINIFRED, daughter of Ira J. and Amanda Elliott. Little "Pet" was early taught to lisp the name of the Savior in prayer, and seemed to understand and feel its design and importance. This sweet child rose in the morning apparently in perfect health, and before noon was dead. A few hours before she died she sweetly sang that beautiful song, "Don't you feel like going home?" and just afterward said: "Ma, don't you feel like going home?" Though so young, she seemed to have an intelligent idea of heaven and "going home."

J. D. HARPER.

LIZZIE A. GODFREY, daughter of W. W. and E. J. Godfrey, was born February 2, 1858, and died September 13, 1874.

She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Durant, Mississippi, and from the time she stood before the altar and took the solemn vows of baptism and church membership she ever evinced an unwavering determination to be a consistent Christian. Her extraordinary intellectual endowments gave promise of a bright future, while her amiable, social and moral qualities secured the admiration and love of all who knew her. She loved her Bible, and would always read some of its sacred truths before retiring to rest. But Lizzie is gone, and she is sadly missed by her doting parents and many friends. No more will they see the bright and cheerful smile that so often lightened earth's burdens and made home happy. No more will they hear that sweet voice breaking forth in sacred song. The young and happy Christian has exchanged her earthly home for a mansion in her heavenly Father's great house above, where she will forever live with Jesus and with loved ones gone before.

A. M. BARRINGTON.

DIED, near Columbia, Marion county, Mississippi, April 10, 1874, J. M. FAGG, in the fifty-eighth year of his age. Bro. Fagg was born in Murray county, Kentucky, April 12, 1817. He was a child of religious parents, and was early taught the necessity of preparing for the future welfare of the soul. At the age of eighteen he united with the Methodist Episcopal Church. In the year 1862 he came to Mississippi in the Confederate army, and again united with the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1864. The year following he moved to Marion county, where he remained until he was called upon to pay the last debt of nature. He suffered a great deal the last year of his life, and for some time was unable to attend public worship, which he was very fond of participating in. After being confined to his bed he would request nearly all who would call to see him to read some passages from God's holy word, and only a short time before his death requested those present to sing for him. He was fond of talking of the promises of the Bible, and ministers always found a hearty welcome at his house. He said, only a short time before he died, that he was ready and willing to die. His last admonition to his wife was not to mourn for him, to live so as to meet him hereafter, and to raise his children in the fear and love of God. He died as he had lived, with a sure trust and confidence in God's promises.

C. R. BENSON.

AT THE fourth Quarterly Conference for Camden circuit, Jackson district, Mississippi Conference, held October 10, 1874, the following memoir of the late Rev. WHITEFIELD HARRINGTON, who was a member of said Conference, was read and ordered to be spread on the journals of said Conference, and to be forwarded to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication in the same, viz.:

The Rev. Whitefield Harrington was the son of Hezekiah and Martha Harrington, and born in Amite county, Mississippi, December 3, 1829. He received his collegiate education at Oxford, Georgia.

Bro. Harrington was licensed to preach in October, 1854, and in November of the same year was admitted into the Mississippi Annual Conference, and for several years filled some of the principal appointments with great acceptability, being an earnest and able preacher of the gospel. He was a true friend, genial, open, loving and kind. His mind was above ordinary, his imagination brilliant. He was a hard student, and his sermons replete with great thought—instructive and elevating. Many were the seals to his ministry, and the church always grew stronger in deep spiritual life under his ministry.

In his last sickness, when able to speak, his whole conversation was about the church, the late Conference, the preachers and their work, and appeared greatly interested in the cause of Christ.

Bro. Harrington has gone! The church has lost an able preacher, the country has lost a good citizen, Sister Harrington has lost a kind husband, and his children have lost a loving father. But our loss is his everlasting gain. Our brother is not dead, but sleepeth. He shall rise again.

JAMES H. EVANS, Sec.

IN MEMORIAM.

MAGNOLIA GRANGE, No. 57,
Franklin Co., Miss., Sept. 26, 1874.

W. M.: Your committee, appointed to draft a preamble and resolutions touching the demise of one of our order, would beg leave to submit the following:

Whereas, It hath pleased our divine Master to call from our association and labor on earth to his vast reward in heaven, on the twenty-ninth of August last, our worthy brother, DAVID HUGHES, aged about eighty years: Bro. Hughes was a good member of our order, and a valued and orderly member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, having been in uninterrupted communion with said church for about thirty years. His last intelligible words were: "Happy! happy! happy!" During his last days he conversed clearly and satisfactorily in reference to his faith in the world's Redeemer, and requested the hymn beginning with "Jesus, my all, to heaven is gone," with the chorus, "I'm going home to die no more," to be sung, which was done, and he seemed to fully realize its sentiment, and we fully believe that our brother "died right." In view of the general character of our deceased brother, we propose that Magnolia Grange, No. 57, pass the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we deeply deplore the loss of our worthy brother, David Hughes. He was, as a Christian, a shining light; as a citizen he was spirited and energetic in business; as a man he was honest in his transactions with his fellow-men; as a husband and father, kind and affectionate, frugal in his expenditures, but bountiful in his supplies for his family; as a Patron, independent and prompt in all things. His name and character were always a sufficient guarantee to assure him in the mercantile community. He was in every respect worthy of our imitation.

Resolved, That we sincerely condole with his widowed companion, orphaned children and bereaved friends; and as an evidence of our sympathy we order the preamble and resolutions to be spread upon the minutes of this grange, and a copy to be transmitted to his widow and family; also that the editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE be requested to publish the same.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

JOHN SAMPLE,
D. A. BUIE,
J. I. CAIN,
Committee.

DIED, of swamp fever, on the morning of the twenty-eighth of September, Mr. ROBERT B. BAIRD, late of Alabama. Mr. Baird was born and grew up to manhood at Winnsboro, Fairfield district, South Carolina. His birth occurred on the twenty-fourth of January, 1819; he was, therefore, nearly fifty-six years old when he died. He was married, on the twenty-fourth of November, 1840, to Miss Mary C. Allen, of Winnsboro, South Carolina, and soon after emigrated to Pickens county, Alabama, where both he and his wife connected themselves with the Methodist Church, of which he lived a consistent and active member up to his death. He removed from Pickens county to Wilcox county about the year 1850; from thence to Monroe county, of the same State, just before the war; thence to Richland parish, Louisiana, in January, 1873. During the greater part of his life Mr. Baird followed the business of a farmer, though in his youth he was trained to mechanical pursuits, and occasionally followed the trade of a carpenter. This has passed away from our midst a great and good man. His intellect, though of a practical and straightforward cast, was of a high order, and only lacked the advantages of collegiate training in youth to have enabled him to rise to the higher walks of a literary and useful life. The most prominent trait in Mr. Baird's character was honesty, united with an uprightness and integrity that, even amidst the sad defection of the times, never faltered, never varied. Descended, as he was, from those sturdy old veterans for civil and religious freedom, the Scotch-Irish Presbyterians, he carried out in his life the noble religious instincts of that race of martyrs. His forefathers no doubt signed, and perhaps some of them shed their blood, for the "Solemn League and Covenant" that resisted the religious usurpations of Charles the First, and freed the Presbyterians of Scotland from the encroachments of the English episcopacy. The rolls of present and past history place the "Bairds" in the highest posts of honor and responsibility. Among them could once and can now be found divines, statesmen and scholars, of whom earth and posterity will ever be proud. With such a lineage, with such high inspirations derived from the past, Mr. Baird could scarcely have proved other than the man he was—a man of high and noble instincts, of deep religious feeling, of impulses that carried him far above the ignoble and the base. His friendships were of that intimate and lasting kind that knows no change, and that failed not in the days of adversity. He was kind and loving in his family, patriotic to his country, beloved by all wherever he went, and a bright ornament to every society in which he moved. He was a member of the Methodist Church, an upright Mason, a zealous temperance man, and died lamented and honored by all those circles in which he moved so lovingly and harmoniously through life. He has left a loving companion and ten children—five sons and five daughters—to mourn over his untimely end. "He is not dead, but sleepeth," contains the true source of consolation to his beloved family and friends. For several months before his death his health became feeble, and he often expressed his apprehensions to his family that his time was drawing nigh. And judging from his exemplary life, and some occasional expressions that he uttered during the lucid intervals in his short and painful illness, he was ready and prepared to take his place among the ransomed and redeemed around God's throne.

THE ROBIN'S NEST.

BY EMILY C. FORD.

The climbing roses on the porch
Bear the sweet promise of the spring,
And shyly on the passing breeze
The homage of their fragrance ling.

The rivulet has burst its bonds,
And, glorying in its new-found power,
Carols the joy of freedom gained
To springing grass and tender flower.

A robin, twitt'ring on the bough,
Says to his mate: "Love, let us fly
And seek soft lining for our nest,
Where warm our little birds may lie."

The young wife sits upon the porch,
And busily her distaff plies;
The while she thinks upon her babe,
And gently murmurs lullabies.

When through the open cottage-door
A little waif the mother hears;
She hastens to the cradle-side
To soothe and quiet baby's fears.

Unheeded on the mossy step
The well-used distaff lies;
The robins, from the garden-walk
Watch it with longing eyes.

They hop a little nearer now,
Then, listening, raise their heads,
Till, o'er the distaff hovering close,
They snap its fluttering threads.

The housewife, stepping on the porch,
Takes up her work once more,
And little thinks two pretty thieves
Have robbed her thrifty store.

And yet her lullaby to-night
Would be more glad, I ween,
Could she but peep between the boughs,
And see what might be seen.

Hidden by apple-blossoms pink
Is built a robin's nest,
With lining soft of hair and down,
Where birdlings five will rest.

And twisted in with wondrous art,
And tireless, loving toil,
See in the middle of the nest
The distaff's flaxen spoil.

None the less soft for little birds
Will be the pretty bed
Because a human mother's thoughts
Are woven with the thread.

Pleasures of the Grindstone.

On a bright July morning we shouldered our hoe and entered the garden. We expected to make havoc with the weeds, give new inducement for growing to the patch of sweet corn, and stir up cucumbers, watermelons and beans to brisk vegetable rivalry. But the chief work of havoc seemed to be made at our end of the hoe, and the handle was loosening us faster than the edge loosened the ground, and we found ourselves going down more certainly than the weeds, and all in consequence of a dull hoe.

That is what is the matter with most of us, ministers and laymen, half the time. We have work to do and disposition to do it, and we sweat and dig and plunge and exhaust ourselves, and wonder what is the matter, not knowing that our chief trouble is a dull hoe. If a mower, striking his scythe into the grass, find it needs sharpening, he resorts to whetstone or riffle until the implement gets to a keen edge. If a barber find that his razor mauls the beard under execution, he straps it on the hone till it can dissever a hair held only at one end. If a carver find that his knife haggles the roast beef, he runs it across the sharpening instrument. But many of us, when there are a thousand ways of putting an edge on our blunt faculties, spend a life-time worrying along with dull hoes.

That July morning, with a boy, we sought an old grindstone at the end of a neighbor's corn-field. The revolutionary instrument was very old, lacking in equipoise, and of poor endowments—the worst grindstone we ever saw. First pouring on the stone a cup of water, the necessary and usual oblation to the Demiurge who presides over grindstones, the boy began to turn, and we brought the hoe down on the surface with great emphasis, so that the inequalities of the instrument violently threw the garden implement toward the head of the operating boy, who dodged just in time to escape decapitation. But, nothing dismayed, we began again, the boy standing off as far as possible, and turning the crank at arm's length. At our next attempt the grindstone made more impression on our knuckles than on the hoe. But, invoking all our energies, we declared that we would not leave the field till we could carry off a keen garden instrument. We soon found that, in consequence of the irregular surface, we were getting a hoe sharp only in one place, and the rest seemed to be getting obtuser. This would be a very awkward instrument, like a man with one-sided development—only his wit or his will or his sarcasm or his fancy brought up to acuteness, while all the rest of him is dull as the left side of the aforesaid hoe. Men and garden implements need to be ground sharp equally all along the edges of their entire structure.

But persist we did, until the boy looked up beseechingly in our face and asked when it would be through. The fact was that the hilarity with which we had begun our work had gradually subsided, and all our physical faculties were under full strain. The hardest work in the world is that of sharpening dull hoes. That is what kills the teachers of schools and wears out professors of colleges before their time. Yale and Rutgers and Princeton and Harvard are only costly and elaborate grindstones, where skillful men stand from September to June attempting to sharpen and scour and sharpen one or two hundred dull tools. Their work is quietly done, and almost in solitariness, and the only way we know they have been busy is in the improved sickles that cut the grain, and the improved forks that toss the hay, and the improved plowshares that turn the glebe, and the improved hoes that evoke the vegetables.

We shall never again be so ignorant about sharpening a hoe as we were that morning. Before we left the grindstone we had learned the art. Indeed it is always so—that we sharpen ourselves while we sharpen others. The hoe was not more improved than were we. We once heard it said, by ourselves or some one else (we are not certain which,) that no man ever knows a thing till he has taught it to others. At the moment you are grinding up some one else's edge you are grinding up your own. Make others better, and you make yourself better. While at one end of the handle the hoe is sharpened, at the other end of the handle the man is brought to a point. Good to others is good to yourself. Instead of sneaking to the field as we did that morning, fearful lest some one would see us in our amateur experiences with the grindstone, we came away ready to challenge the world to hoe-grinding. The rest of that day the garden was an exhilaration; the quick spoliation of the weeds, the corn-silk rustling like a bride's rich poplin, the bees banqueting on the blossoms of the potato top, the curious reticulation of cucumber vines, and the sky itself bending over like an arbor covered with columbine of cloudy beauty, seemed to turn the lowland of earth and the uplands of heaven into one palace, the first the tessellated floor fit for kings to walk on, the other the ribbed roof bright enough for angels to sing in; and all because we had got our hoe sharpened.—Christian at Work.

The Pastoral Gimlet.

Once a city pastor was absent from home for a week. During his absence the son of a member who lived several miles out of town died. He did not hear of the young man's death until he returned. Then he was taken sick, and it was a week or ten days before he could safely drive out and visit his afflicted parishioner. The first words which greeted his ears were: "Well, I thought you'd forgotten us;" and then the good woman sat complacently down to be consoled.

That is what I mean by the pastoral gimlet, and it is astonishing how proficient certain church members become in its use. The delicacy in insinuating, the deftness and grace in twisting, can only have been acquired by assiduous practice. They know just where it will go in most easily, just how many turns to give it before it gets down to the quick.

There are various scientific twists of the gimlet known to adepts and to victims.

There is the sarcastic twist.—Hostess enters the parlor, and greets pastor thus: "Good afternoon, Dr. A.; really the sight of you is refreshing. Have you found out at last where we live?"

There is the business twist: "Do you know that you haven't been inside our house for six months?" Parsons, as well as mathematicians, are painfully aware that figures can't lie; so that this twist is a peculiarly effective one, usually transfixing the victim, and reducing him at once to a condition of silent helplessness.

Then there is the reproachful twist, also very effective—tremendously so if the twister can manage to start a "silent tear:" "Really, we began to doubt whether we had any pastor."

And once in awhile we are treated to the spiteful twist, in administering which the operator, or more commonly the operatrix, is at no pains to conceal her fell intent, but drives the unoiled gimlet in with a steady hand; or, in other words, gives the parson a sharp "setting down" on his shortcomings.

The men who writhe under this instrument are the conscientious pastors, who are forever haunted by the vague sense of work in arrears, and constantly tormented with self-reproach because they do not bring it up. The gimlet is a terrible thing to such a one. He knows the gimlet-houses as well as a doctor knows where smallpox is. He braces himself to visit them once or twice a year. He says jocosely to a friend at the gate: "I know there is a rod in pickle for me here." He sits down to his work very much as if he were going to have a tooth filled, meets the twist of the gimlet without betraying his inward writhings, kneels down and prays with the gimlet-twisters, and rises from his knees to meet a parting thrust, as thus: "Now that you've found the way here, I hope we shall see you often." And as he goes down the steps he looks into his book, and seeing that the next place on the list is also a gimlet-house, he says to himself: "Not to-day; one a day is all I can stand." You cheerful, sunny, sympathizing souls, God bless you, who perhaps excite the jealousy of your neighbors because the minister "drops in" at your houses so much oftener than at theirs, does it never occur to you that he comes almost as much for his own sake as for yours, because he knows you always have oil and wine in your casks for the wounds of the gimlet?

Now, ye gimlet-twisters, ye pastor-perforators, lift up your voices and answer: What do you want a pastoral visit for? Do you want to talk with your pastor about your temptations and trials? Do you want instruction on some question of Christian experience? Do you want to discuss some scheme of Christian enterprise? Not you! No lawyer is more adroit in turning the conversation the moment it takes any such direction. Let the pastor take up the gimlet in his turn, and probe your heart, and lay bare your poor, starved, stunted religious life; let him tax you rigorously with your absence from prayer meetings or Sabbath worship, and you will not complain of the scarcity of pastoral visits. The truth is, you do not desire counsel, nor comfort, nor Christian communion, but attention. Your pastor's absence wounds your pride. You care little about his doing the work he was especially called to do for you, but you are vexed because he does not concede more to your importance. You are not thirsting for living water, but for the tacit flattery of attention, thus seeking to convert the messenger whom Christ sends with living bread to your home and heart into a minister to your vanity. The people whose hands are idle, whose purses are shut, whose voices are against every enterprise which involves sacrifice and labor, are the people who are masters of the gimlet.—Dr. Martin R. Vincent.

A MAN who is always well satisfied with himself is seldom so with others, and others are as little pleased with him.

Remarkable Marriage Ceremony.

AN ILLUSTRATION OF ISAIAH LI, 23.

It was promised to God's ancient people that no more should victorious foes say to her: "Bow down, that we may go over;" no more should the chosen race lay down their bodies "as the ground, and as the street, to them that went over."

This humiliating custom was practiced on Mangaia, Polynesia, formerly, but with a different signification. It was performed in families of distinction on the occasion of the marriage of the first-born. For example, a pet girl had recently been wedded, and something must be done to render the occasion memorable. To this end large quantities of native cloth are prepared, etc. On the day appointed, at early dawn, nearly the entire population of the island assemble, some as relatives or friends, the rest as spectators. The feast, which had been got ready the day before, is now divided out, and the cloth piled up in a single heap. The son-in-law is now formally sent for. Gayly dressed in the fantastic trappings of heathenism, he makes his appearance outside his dwelling, where he sees a continuous pathway of human bodies leading from his own doorway to the house of his father-in-law. The entire tribe, men, women and children, assemble to honor their dusky kinswoman by permitting her recently married husband to walk over their backs as they lie prostrate on the ground. As lightly as possible does this distinguished individual step over "ara tangata," or "street of human bodies." Should the numbers of the tribe be insufficient to reach quite to the dwelling of the father-in-law, those first trodden on rise up quickly and run through the admiring crowd, again to take their places in front. Meanwhile the near relatives of the bridegroom accompany him in his progress, of course walking on the ground, clapping their hands, and chanting songs in his praise, or reciting the deeds of his ancestors.

On reaching the goal three elderly females, enveloped in the finest cloth, so prostrate themselves as to form a living seat for the bridegroom. A fish is now brought forward, and, with the aid of a bit of sharp bamboo, cut up into dice upon a human body. It is presented to the bridegroom, who eats it raw. The piles of native cloth and food, already prepared, are now formally presented to the happy man. All parties now partake of the feast, and then the road of living bodies is again formed for this honored son-in-law to go back as he came to his home.

This grand display on the part of the wife's friends necessitates a corresponding one on the side of the husband. If possible, this second exhibition must surpass the first. Occasionally it would be deferred until the birth of the first child; usually it would come off as soon as practicable. In a precisely similar way to the first "manuiuitori," the entire tribe of the husband would prostrate themselves on the ground until the young wife had passed over their backs, and in that way had reached the dwelling of her father-in-law. There she would sit on a couch of living bodies, hidden in thick folds of cloth, while she ate part of the feast, finally returning in the same dignified way to her home. Songs in praise of her beauty, etc., would, as a matter of course, be chanted all the time.

This singular custom is said to have been handed down from time immemorial. The natives can give no account whatever of its origin. Christianity is unfavorable to the continuance of such customs, although never expressly forbidden.

Ten years ago I started off to church to marry a young couple, and to my surprise found the road filled with a row of living bodies extending from my own gate to the entrance of the sanctuary, a distance of one hundred yards. The intended bride tripped merrily over the backs of the bridegroom's clan, not a little proud of the distinction conferred upon her. The mother of the bride followed, vociferating the praises of her daughter. Grieved at the revival of a heathen custom, I remonstrated with the parties chiefly concerned, and deferred the marriage until the day following.—Rev. W. W. Gill.

The Length of Sermons.

After the Reformation long sermons came into fashion. The mediæval and pre-Reformation divines contented themselves with homilies varying from ten to thirty minutes in length, but the Huguenots, Waldenses, Puritans, Covenanters, Independents and other protesting bodies, conceiving it their duty to assert and maintain these relating to doctrine and discipline, made their sermons argumentative, and sometimes spun out the argument to an inordinate length. The hour-glass literally corresponded with its name, for it ran for one hour before the sand had all passed through, and the preacher claimed his full sixty minutes. Sometimes he was provided with a half-hour glass, which he used when a shorter sermon was to be preached. It was about the middle of the seventeenth century, when the Puritan sermon occasionally reached the enormous length of two hours, when the hour-glass limit was applied. Many pulpits were furnished with iron stands for the reception of the hour-glass. One such is still existing at Compton Basset church, Wilts, with a fleur de lis handle for turning the glass when the sand had run out. Another at Aurst, in Berkshire, has a fanciful wrought-iron frame, with foliages of oak and ivy, and an inscription: "As this glass runneth, so man's life passeth."

At Clift, in Kent, is a stand for an hour-glass on a bracket affixed to the pulpit. The parish accounts of St. Catherine Aldgate contain an entry: "Paid for an hour-glass, that hangeth by the pulpit where the preacher doth make a sermon, that he may know how the hour passeth away, one shilling;" and another relates to a bequest of "an hour-glass, with a frame to stand on." One preacher had exhausted his sand-glass, turned it, and gone through three-fourths of another running, the congregation had nearly all retired, and the clerk, tired out, audibly asked his reverend superior to lock up the church and put the key under the door when the sermon was done, as he and the few remaining auditors were going away. Hugh Peters, after preaching an hour, turned his hour-glass and said: "I know you are good fellows; so let's have another glass." Daniel Burgess, an eloquent Nonconformist divine in the early part of the last century, let his hour-glass run out while preaching vehemently against the sin of drunkenness. He reversed it, and exclaimed, "Brethren, I have something more to say to you on the nature and consequence of drunkenness; so let's have another glass, and then"—— which was a regular toper's phrase. A rector of Bilbury used to preach two hours with two turns of the glass; after the giving out of the text the squire of the parish withdrew, smoked his pipe, and returned to the blessing.—All the Year Round.

A Lumberman's Camp on the North Pacific.

In the gorge of the Sylopish we visited a lumberman's camp. All around huge trunks of trees stood like towers and rustic monuments, while the bruised and broken underbrush marked where fell the forest monarchs. Throughout all the sound region the trees are cut at a considerable height—eight, ten, fifteen or even twenty feet. The huge ills have churn-shaped trunks, which are exceedingly tough near the ground. A tree that is five feet in diameter at a height of eight feet, at three feet is probably eight feet through. To cut through this mass of tough wood is the labor of hours; but if one can by any means get high enough to cut above the "churn," three-fourths of the work is avoided. To build a scaffold for general use would be no saving of labor, for no two trees would be likely to require cutting at the same height. An extension ladder would be an awkward and inconvenient thing, not answering the purpose at all. The choppers have invented a process that is both cheap and convenient. A narrow deep notch is cut in the tree at a suitable height, and into this is driven one end of a stout springy board five or six feet long. On this the axman stands. Sometimes it is necessary to insert two or three such boards before the required height is reached. To one who has never witnessed this method of tree-felling it looks both curious and dangerous. But the men are strong of limb, firm-nerved, with muscles like steel. Accidents are rare. The camp was a low, roughly-built cabin, with an ox-stable near, as comfortable a building in appearance as that in which the men lived. A team of oxen heavily laden came toiling down to the landing. No trucks or sledges are used in transporting the logs. The road is carefully laid out to obtain the best grade possible, and then "skidded." The skids consist of small logs, from which the bark has been removed, six or eight inches in diameter and eight feet in length. These, firmly imbedded in the earth from five to six feet apart, are laid across the road. The logs, from which the bark has also been removed, are drawn over this skidded road with more facility than they could be were the trucks used which are usually adopted by lumbermen in regions where there is no snow.—Overland Monthly.

THE CHILD IN CHRISTIANITY.—I find a child in no religion but in the religion of Jesus. Mohammed seemed to know nothing about children in their mythology. Their gods were not born as children. They were never clothed with the sympathies of children. They were never endowed with the attributes of children, and hence they make no provision for children. But the great eternal fact of Christianity is the holy child Jesus. The religion of Jesus is the only religion that dares to put its sacred books into the hands of a child. No other religion ever conceived of such a thing. No other religion dare venture its existence on such a venture as that. Sacred books of Hindooism, sacred books of Mohammedanism, put into the hands of children would shock its authors and its votaries. But the Christian religion brings its sacred books to the child. It says to the little ones: "They are able to make thee wise unto salvation, through faith that is in the Lord Jesus;" and although the child cannot master their mysteries, he can believe their mysteries, he can obey their mysteries, he can elucidate their mysteries.—Dr. Armitage.

WHAT are you doing for the souls of your careless friends? Will you allow day after day to pass, witness their certain drifting toward a time of inevitable hopelessness, comprehend perfectly their despairing end if not sustained by Christ, feel assured that the Redeemer's blood cries out for their souls—will you, can you sit inactive and let the days go by? You advise with them on other subjects, and feel quite guilty if you hold back, even for a short time, what would be to their advantage to know, or to be counseled upon! How about their salvation? Is it true that they must be saved or suffer eternal loss? Do you, in your soul, believe it? What a tremendous contradiction, then, your life is! Why, either your love is not what you pretend, or you are unpardonably indifferent! Which? God teach us all in this: to love our neighbor as we do ourselves.—Methodist Recorder.

THE deepest and most desirable and most permanent joy is not where the laughter and song are the loudest. These are superficial and temporary. They are ripples, eddies, on the surface of joy, showing its shallowness, not its depth. We are always pensive and thoughtful when we are most happy.

Religious Intelligence.

A MISSIONARY in Turkey is translating into the Turkish language Nelson's "Cause and Cure of Infidelity."

FIRES, financial revolutions and the withdrawal of the Presbyterians have brought the American Board to a serious financial condition. The debt, June 1, was $82,753.

THE Moravian Church has one out of every fifty of its communicants engaged in the mission service, and for every member at home nearly three members in the mission-field.

EIGHT HUNDRED Congregational ministers in England signed the total abstinence pledge, but at the meeting of the Cheshire Baptist Association a similar pledge received only seventeen names.

THE Northwestern Advocate says: "Our Swedo brother Methodists are growing in numbers rather more rapidly than the records indicate. The Minutes of the Central Illinois Conference last year give the Swede mission district but 1,655 full members. The correct addition of the column will make it 2 135."

ENGLISH METHODISM pushes its way along at every point. It is now organizing a connectional Sunday school union, with a branch in each circuit. One hundred and thirty circuits have already joined in the movement, and a new interest in the Sunday school cause appears to be growing up in the denomination in consequence.

IN Zacatecas, Mexico, a Presbyterian mission was commenced December 14, 1873, and now it contains ninety-one adult members and twenty-nine children. The congregation has outgrown the hall in which it has been worshiping. Fifty miles north is the town of Cos, in which there is a church of two hundred members and a large Sabbath school.

THE mission among the Santhals, in southern India, is supported entirely by the Christian community in that country. Most of the converts deem it a duty and a delight to seek the evangelization of their own people, male and female. Most of the recent converts are the fruit of these efforts, and in a single year two hundred and twenty have been added to the church.

ON March 28, 1874, the fourth Martyrs' Memorial church was dedicated in Madagascar. The church is built on the rock Ampamarinana, from which fourteen confessors were thrown, while four were being burnt to death elsewhere, on that very day twenty-five years before. About two thousand persons, among them some who had suffered in the persecution, united in this dedication.

AT a recent confirmation by the American Bishop Williams, at Yeddo, in Japan, the hymns "Rock of Ages" and "When I survey the wondrous cross" were sung in Japanese to the familiar tunes. A Maori version of the latter hymn was sung at the consecration of the Church of the Good Shepherd (so named by the native Christians,) at Waiwawa, New Zealand, by Bishop Cowie, on March 1.

A NEW ZEALAND correspondent writes, May 1: "A very interesting ceremony was performed at Auckland two Sundays ago in the launch of the new schooner for the Melanesian mission. It is named the Southern Cross, and now that the new vessel has taken its duty as well as its name, the old Southern Cross has been purchased by the government as a training ship for boys."

THE Missionary Herald reports the receipt of a catalogue of the Scriptures and other books on sale at the Bible House, Constantinople. The Scriptures are in Armenian, Ararat Dialect, Koordish, Turkish (in Armenian, Arabic and Greek characters,) Greek, Bulgarian, Slavic, Hebrew, Hebrew and Hebrew-Spanish, Arabic, Persian, Albanian, Servian, Russian, Wallachian, Italian, German, French, Swedish, English, Syriac, and for the blind in Turkish.

THE Jews are strangely crowded in Rome. They have five synagogues in that city, all in one building, with separate entrances from different streets. This is owing to the fact that the Inquisition would allow only one synagogue, and when, by much expenditure of labor and money, permission was obtained for the others, it was granted only on condition that all should be under one roof. The Talmud was on the Index Expurgatorius, and so not a single copy of it was allowed to be in the possession of the Jews.

THE OLDEST MISSIONARY SOCIETY IN THIS COUNTRY.—The Moravian Church claims the oldest missionary society in this country, which was established in 1786, called "The Society for Propagating the Gospel Among the Heathen," and has just celebrated its eighty-eighth anniversary at Bethlehem, Pennsylvania. The society, though financially strong, is at present doing little to accomplish its original object. The Moravian, the spirited organ of the Moravian Church, calls upon the society to increased efforts in reaching and saving those destitute of the gospel.

A PORTION of the members of the Church of England are now protesting that their church is not a Protestant Church at all, but is and always has been a Catholic Church, while a still larger section of the members of the establishment are protesting against the absurdity involved in this declaration. The latter have the best of the argument. Their chief spokesman is Sir W. V. Harcourt, who, in a series of long letters to the Times, has been demonstrating that the Anglican Church had its first birth in the time of Henry the Eighth, and that ever since its prevailing characteristic has been an earnest protest against the faith of the Church of Rome.

THE Berlin statistical bureau has lately instituted an inquiry into the state of Catholicism in Prussia which has brought some curious facts to light. It has been proved, for instance, that Protestantism is on the increase in all parts of the kingdom. During the last nine years the number of Catholics in Pomerania and the Saxon Provinces has positively decreased, and there is not a single district in which their increase is proportionate to the growth of the population. Nor is this all. It appears that this change is not the result of accident or of a strong momentary impulse, but continuous and general, and that the Protestant Church is everywhere slowly but surely gaining ground.

A TABLE showing the religious condition of Scotland, lately prepared with great care by a Glasgow minister, gives the Presbyterians (Established, Free and United) 2,362,000 church-goers; other evangelical denominations, 262,000; Roman Catholics, 290,000; Socinians, etc., 10,000. It appears that about 500,000 of the population of Scotland attend no church, which, however, can hardly be above the proportion in our own country. Are not more than one out of every seven non-church-goers here?

THIS does not read much as if the American missionary at Yeddo was overstocked with creature comforts. According to the Colonial Church Chronicle the American missionary, Bishop Williams, was recently found in a Japanese boarding-house in Yeddo, in a room nine feet square, without any furniture except a pail with ashes and a little coal. In one corner were two blankets, with one of which the Bishop wrapped himself, while he slept upon the other. There the Bishop was found, sitting upon the floor, engaged in the work of translation.

THE Presbyterian says: "The best-worn map in the Vatican is that of the United States. The best points in the West are better known by the cardinals at Rome than by the home missions of Protestant churches. At a recent interview with Father Dealy, the chaplain of the pilgrims to Lourdes Grotto, the pontiff expressed his great hopes for the church in America. He took the American flag in his hands, unfurled it and blessed it. It was borne open from the Vatican chamber through the Swiss Guards, who, by order of the commander, 'presented arms' in honor partly of the flag and partly of the blessing."

IT WILL be remembered that Prof. Max Muller, by invitation of Dean Stanley, in the beginning of this year, lectured on missions in Westminster Abbey. He spoke of Christianity, Mohammedanism and Buddhism as the three missionary religions—the only systems which had so much life in them as to be proselyting. One result of the professor's comparison is the stirring up of the Parsis, in India. One of their organs calls upon them to assume a missionary character, and thus to do away with the reproach cast upon them. Muller is certainly right in this: a system that has not enough life in it to be aggressive is dead or dying.

BAPTIST MISSION IN INDIA.—The first native Baptist church in northern India was established at Johnnugur, Serampore, and has fifty-five members. Eight were added to the church last year. The largest number of Christians in India connected with the Baptist Missionary Society live in Backergunga. They number in all three thousand five hundred, of whom nine hundred and fifty are members of the church. The people are showing great readiness to help themselves—self-support is their motto—and last year they contributed four hundred and ten rupees in aid of the missionary work. The Baptist mission in India is one of the most successful known in the Christian church.

THE church of the parish of All-hallows, Bread street, London, in which John Milton was baptized, as the register shows, December 28, 1608, is likely to be removed. The resident parishioners consist of only fifty souls, and the average Sunday congregation numbers but nine. A Mr. Elyott left the church a legacy in 1609 providing for the preaching of a sermon on every Thursday in the year; but the service has been for some time discontinued, owing to the impossibility of procuring a listener. Should the removal be decided on, the register, monuments, mural tablets, etc., will be removed to the Church of St. Mary-le-Bow, to which the parish of All-hallows will be annexed.

A PRESBYTERIAN church has been organized in San Saba county, about one hundred and twenty miles north-east of San Antonio, in western Texas, upon the extreme frontier of the presbytery. A correspondent of the Southwestern Presbyterian says: "It is in one of the most delightful regions in all the frontier country, healthy, prosperous, rapidly settling up. In this delightful valley we have laid the foundation for a large and prosperous Presbyterianism. Our presbytery has no opening field in her bounds that promises so rich a yield. The seeker of a Texas home will perhaps find no portion of our broad State offering him stronger inducements. Only one serious obstacle is in the way of this fine frontier country. The settler is in little danger comparatively of being attacked by the Indians, but occasionally will lose his horses unless carefully watched during the light of the moon."

THE Old Catholic movement is at length extending to southern Germany. In Bavaria, where the government has adopted a neutral attitude, neither offering the Old Catholics any facilities nor placing any obstacles in their way, Bishop Reinkens has just consecrated a new church, the first building which the Old Catholics have erected in Germany, existing churches having in other parts been placed at their disposal. Many Bavarian churches are still jointly used by Protestants and Catholics, though the Ultramontanes have of late years endeavored to supersede this arrangement by the erection of additional edifices; but legal difficulties prevent the Old Catholics from sharing in this ecclesiastical partnership. At Lhubach they have accordingly built a church of their own, and the Emperor William has presented them with a quantity of metal from French guns, captured in the late war, to be cast into a bell.

Christian Influence.

The influence which Christians exert upon the world through the power of right living is the greatest of all. To this sort the Savior probably referred when he told his disciples that they were the salt of the earth and the light of the world. Paul surely had this mainly in view when he declares that believers shine as lights in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, and that thus shining, blameless and harmless as the sons of God without rebuke, they were to hold forth the word of life. Every Christian is as a light on a dangerous coast, to guide and to warn those who are in peril and liable to make shipwreck of their immortal interests. There are, of course, many active ways of doing good, many forms of beneficence and many phases of religious utterance. But we take it that the base of all is the life and experience, and that these are the reserve from which all true power for good proceeds.

The lighthouse does not move, it has no voice or sound; it only stands on its rocky foundation and shines. Its office is of the passive character, while its light is bound to a single spot, and chained to one lofty pillar, the rays are ever going forth, piercing the profoundest gloom, and doing their work and fulfilling their mission well, because they are stationary. The salt works silently and by actual contact with surrounding substances, penetrating most deeply and thoroughly, and diffusing its conservative properties without demonstration or confusion. A true Christian life, so long as it is true, cannot be divested of these qualities and effects. It may be comparatively obscure, the range of immediate contact may not be wide, but virtue goes out from it. It is being felt by somebody, and the gracious effects are quietly spreading farther and farther from their source.

The life is the best of preaching, as it illustrates and enforces the sermon, and is the most convincing evidence of the truth of the gospel. If the gospel makes men good, benevolent, charitable and pure, if it makes them honest and proof against bribery and illicit gain, if it makes them true and honorable amidst general corruption and strong temptations to unfair and wrong dealing, it has wrought the greatest of all miracles. The fruits of a tree do not more certainly tell its nature than do the lives of Christians show the character of their religion. It must be a good tree—a tree planted of God and rooted in divine truth—that produces upright examples and spotless characters amidst general corruption and estrangement from God. Those men and women who are living right, who keep themselves unspotted from the world, and who walk with God amidst the scenes of wickedness which surround them, are doing an incalculable service to society. These are quiet and unobtrusive forces, and at the same time the mightiest that are acting upon the welfare of the earth.

Opinions, doctrines, creeds, professions are doubtless important, as they may be related to the practice, but they are dead and inoperative when separated from the daily life. Large evangelical enterprises, and brilliant and powerful individual ministries are to be supported and honored as means of extending and conserving the cause of Christ, but they are of small moment in comparison with the homely but holy lives of the millions of God's children. As every tiny star in the firmament is felt throughout the wide expanse of the heavens, and even beyond the reach of its light, so is it with the humblest Christian example. Each man in the great throng of believers, though unknown to the most of his fellows, and never heard of at all beyond the neighborhood in which he moves, is, notwithstanding, contributing to the general result. The salt that he is is doing its work; the light that he is shines somewhere; the leaven that is in him is surely and powerfully working.

Beyond other plans and utterances for usefulness, Christians should not lose sight of this most simple means. The first and the last thing should be this: to live their religion, to be Christians at home, to let the light of right living shine in their places of business, and in all their daily intercourse with the world. The means and capacity of great usefulness in many special directions may have been denied to the most, but it is the privilege of all to be holy, and to thus deliver the most powerful testimony for Christ and their religion.

Perhaps it will be found in the end that every Christian's greatest influence has been exerted through the Christ-like character and life which he had, and which wrought most silently but most effectively. Famous preachers, where they have been permanently and lastingly useful, have owed more to their saintly lives than to their eloquent words. Men who are blessed with money to give, and do give munificently to endow colleges, to support missions and to build churches, will be surprised to find at last that their highest usefulness was achieved by pure and spiritual lives at home. As between what mere talent and wealth, without deep and practical piety, can accomplish, and the power of a devoted and blameless example, there is no ground of comparison. As charity is the greatest, and the essential in our personal experience, so is it the most potent to effect, to bless and to save the world. Neither wealth nor tongues, divorced from love, can do what love alone can achieve.

"The Church."

MR. EDITOR: The present attitude of the Protestant Episcopal Church before the country and the world is at once sad and ludicrous—sad in that it started out some ninety years since with the gospel, mixed up with remnants of popery, and in that comparatively brief period in the history of a church has nearly lost it in the slough of Romanism; ludicrous in that its proselyting clergy move around serenely, urging people to leave the churches of Christ, and enter and find repose in that communion, rotten with heresy, torn by factions, and engaged in a life-and-death struggle for existence as a church of God, with the probabilities decidedly in favor of death. How two of these men can meet anywhere without bursting into a broad laugh at the gullability of many people, and the character of their pretensions, is difficult to understand. That this is not too strong a view of the case will be seen by the following, from the Southern Churchman:

"If the approaching General Convention does not positively, by canon, forbid the puerile ritualism and semi-popery now corrupting the doctrine and introducing a sensual popish worship into the Protestant Episcopal Church, and by stringent canon forbid it, our grand old church is destroyed."

Then read the following from the same paper. The "end" will be popery with the most of the church. The convention will make no real change. J. H.

The communication referred to by J. H. is too long for insertion at this time. Besides, the convention is now in session, and we shall know in a few days what it has done. We give the article from the Southern Churchman, by "Presbyter," in part. After noticing the favor shown by the Bishops to ritualism, he further says:

As to the efforts to prevent any decided legislation against the disturbers of our peace, many are already well apprised. The probability waxes stronger, as the time draws near, that the well-concerted schemes of the Romanizers will avail, and that they will have another triumph in persuading the General Convention to do nothing except to let ritualists do as they please.

A deplorable fact in connection with the history of these times is the comparative indifference of many of our laity. Some of them surely cannot be informed as to the actual state of things—of the steady encroachments of Romanism upon our heritage. They see things going on well in their own communities, and give themselves little or no concern because of the fact that gradually but certainly is the work of the Reformation being undone.

Then how discouraging it is to observe how any warning voice is answered. When a man like Latane, worn out with hoping against hope, departs from a church torn and distracted with controversy, he is reproached for cowardly leaving us to fight without his aid against false doctrine. Yet how certain is it that if men like Latane give expression to their honest convictions they will be denounced as "radicals."

I referred to the change in the tone in our church press. Not to speak at any length upon the subject, I shall refer to one instance.

When it has been alleged in days past that a certain class of churchmen taught "sacramental justification" the accusation has been indignantly spurned. Facts prove, however, that only time was wanted to let the seed of their false doctrine germinate and bear fruit. I have just read in a church paper—par excellence—the organ of true churchmanship (!) an elaborate, calmly-written treatise in which sacramental justification is asserted and maintained with as much tranquility and positiveness as Bishop McIlvaine would assert the inspiration of God's word. The article is long and ably written. The two kinds of justification, viz., by Christ and by the sacraments, are pronounced divine, and it claims that what God hath joined together no man should put asunder. I shall quote briefly from it:

"It has then been shown that justification by baptism and justification by faith are, in the case of those who are capable of exercising faith, co-ordinate. * * * Baptism being, as it were, the strong hand of help extended to us from heaven, and faith the feeble earthly hand stretched forth to grasp it." (Italics mine.)

If that is not Romanism it is only because it is worse—it is blasphemy. "Baptism * * * the strong hand of help extended from heaven."(?)

As to the Lord's Supper, he says that "through it we are permitted to obtain remission of our sins and all other benefits of his passion."

What a shameful misrepresentation of the language of our liturgy. Not content with parading his own unscriptural ideas, he would have it believed that our church teaches the same false doctrine in her communion office.

What is the language that he has so perverted. It is: "Most humbly beseeching thee to grant that by the merits and death of thy Son Jesus Christ, and through faith in his blood, we, and all thy whole church may obtain remission of our sins and all other benefits of his passion."

Our eleventh article gives the doctrine of our church. There it is affirmed that we are "justified by faith only." Little, however, do ritualists or Romanizers care for articles when they have "liberty" to teach by symbol all the heresies of the apostate church they so manifestly prefer. That, however, is not the point to which I now refer. I ask all to notice the daring with which the very fundamentals of Rome are insisted upon as part of our creed, and the Jesuitism with which our prayer-book is used to bolster up such false assertions. What will the end be?

May God the Holy Ghost be with our General Convention and direct all its counsels to the maintenance of God's precious truth.

From Mexico to Pachuca.—No. II.

We parted company this morning at this station—Ometusco. Pachuca lies nearly due north, about thirty miles distant. The mountains overshadowing the town, and lying between it and Real del Monte, are plainly visible. So clear is the atmosphere that they seem but a short walk away. This being the starting-point for another considerable town—Tulanzingo—usually quite a number assemble in the breakfast-house every morning. This house boasts the name of a hotel. What its sleeping accommodations are I did not investigate. I tried the eating part, however, with no particularly satisfactory result. Having secured tickets before leaving Mexico, our little party were not troubled about their places being taken in the diligence. Everything in readiness, the boy holding the leaders jumped to one side, and our team of eight mules started off at a killing pace. There is much in a good start. Soon our fiery "mulas" came to a slow walk. The average speed, I believe, is about four miles an hour. The system of diligences, however, in Mexico is very good. It is evidently in the hands of promptness and energy. Having, with Dr. Richardson, secured seats outside, we were mounted above the drivers, our feet resting a little below their heads. I say drivers, for each diligence is supplied with two drivers, four whips, and a box full of small rocks. I at first supposed the rocks were either taken on as ballast or as weapons of defense. In this I was undeceived, finding they were for offensive warfare, the unfortunate "leaders" being the subjects of attack. The second driver acts as a kind of skirmisher, bringing on the fight for greater speed. He uses first the long whip, and then the short one, and between times throws rocks at the "leaders" as gentle reminders of the immensely heavy long whip to follow.

We soon enter immense pulque plantations, where the plant, Agave Americano, is seen in all its stages, from the tender plant just putting forth its tiny leaves to the fullness and perfection of its growth. Although, as the doctor gravely remarked, "there is nothing poetical about the Maguey," yet these vast fields, stretching out for miles and miles, the rows laid off by the line crossing each other at right angles, some of them three and four miles in length, makes no bad picture. The agave, though not poetical, is a noble-looking plant; not only noble-looking, but, bating its pulque producing qualities, is one of the noblest and most useful productions in Mexico.

There is a gradual ascent to Pachuca. I do not remember the exact measurement, but believe it is one thousand feet higher than Mexico—between nine and ten thousand feet above the sea.

Many attractive points come out, one after another, like an unfolding picture, as the tired mules are urged on.

Apparently clinging to the mountain-sides, many miles in the distance, are plainly seen small farms, lines of the Maguey doing duty as fences, furnishing at the same time a clearer outline to the beholder. These little patches seem more like hanging gardens than rough, stony farms. "Haciendas de pulque," walled in with stone and lime, droves of browsing cattle, flocks of nervously peaceful sheep, improvised and natural ponds, the golden grain falling before the reap-hook, wagon trains coming and going, the passing caballero followed by the inevitable lackey, the humble, subdued peasant, burdened with produce for the market—all form a picture as delightful and attractive to the stranger as it is dull and stupid to the average denizen of this lovely valley.

Rattling over rough stone pavement with something of the speed with which we started, the diligence rushes down the narrow streets of Pachuca, followed by crowds of Mexican boys, anxious to help you down and relieve you of baggage for a small consideration. Pachuca is a mining town of twelve or fourteen thousand inhabitants. It is situated in the forks (I don't know better how to express it) of the silver mountains. To ascend one of these mountains and look down upon it from a height of fifteen hundred or two thousand feet, you lose sight of everything ugly, and see only the beautiful and poetical. Houses are built far up the mountain-sides—I suppose anchored with chains or stones to the solid rock, or else the rushing torrents from above would wash them away. From two mountain gorges to the north, together with the perpetual stream thrown out of an immense mining shaft, nine hundred feet deep, forms a little river, that serves the double purpose of cleaning and beautifying the city. It runs at a rapid pace, almost centrally through the town, crossed at intervals by arched stone bridges.

We found comfortable quarters at the Shorter House, kept now by the Rule Brothers, enterprising, clever Englishmen. There are about one hundred Englishmen and Americans, in and near Pachuca, engaged in the mines. They are always glad to see visitors, and you are soon made to feel at home. Mr. Petherie, a good old-fashioned Wesleyan, called at our rooms, and kindly became our conductor for a few hours. We visited the principal shaft of the Real del Monte Company, alluded to above, known as the San Juan (St. John) mine. It being one of the many feast-days, but little work was doing. The work of pumping, however, must go on night and day, Sunday and feast-day. This shaft, as I have already said, is about nine hundred feet. The engine used is four hundred and fifty horse-power, of English make. A very considerable fortune was expended on its transportation from Vera Cruz alone, to say nothing of its original cost and transportation across the sea. This Pachuca district is the oldest mining district in the republic, and was at one time the richest. From accounts, it is not producing well now. The company still use the old method of extracting the silver. After the ore is reduced to an impalpable dust, it is thrown into what are called "toriss" (circles) large enough for fifteen or twenty horses to walk around, three or four abreast, the whole mass, I suppose, four or six inches thick; and then commences the process of amalgamation by the use of quicksilver, salt, etc. It requires from three to four weeks' steady tramping before it is ready to separate the amalgam from dirt and baser metals. It seems strange that, with the introduction of such perfect machinery for pumping the shafts and lifting the ore, no attempt has been made by this company to improve the old torta and barrel system, which, in addition to its crudeness and slowness, seems cruel to men and animals. We were informed that a horse or mule would last at this work only about twelve months, and that it required men of the strongest constitution, for, with the work of horses, the tortas require a great deal of handling, turning, etc. When the animals die and are dragged off they quickly fall a prey to Indians, who skin them and break the bones of their legs for the quicksilver found therein. Not unfrequently, while at work, they eat of the torta for the salt, and by this means take quicksilver into their stomachs. At one of the refining mills of this company the barrel process referred to above is used, which, if in no other particular, has an advantage over the torta, in that there is no cruelty to dumb animals. In this barrel process, after calcination—that is, the ground ore subjected to a great heat, thereby consuming a great deal of base metal—it is conveyed through canvas sacks into large barrels or hogsheads, and they are set to rolling by an immense water-wheel, the quicksilver and other materials added, and thus they roll day and night until amalgamation is completed. Barron, Forbes & Co. have inaugurated a new era in mining just at this point. At an expense of about $150,000 they have imported and have now in successful operation American machinery and the American process. I have not the space nor the ability to describe it. Two enterprising Nevada men, Messrs. Fountain and Curley, have carried the construction through to a perfect success. Mr. Lanegan, an elegant English gentleman, is the representative of the company. He manifested great kindness and attention to our party. In addition to showing us everything, from the rough ore to the silver bricks so long concealed therein, gave to each of us a miniature brick of pure silver, of $4 or $5 value. As an evidence of the superiority and perfection of this machinery, it is enough to say that, besides a saving of from fifteen to twenty per cent. in wastage, it will do the work of grinding, calcining, amalgamating, refining, etc., in about one-tenth of the time.

Strange as it may appear, this new enterprise has met with much opposition, and on all sides one may hear predictions of failure. It is no particular reflection on the Mexican character, loving his country and the ways of his father, to say that he is jealous and suspicious of innovations, and especially of Yankee enterprise.

In all I saw and heard—the expensive and intricate machinery, the fabulous sums expended, and the hard work, risk and loss of life in getting the precious metal in the shape of a dollar—I was deeply impressed with the universal law of labor: "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread." The tree grows in the forest; it is not made into boards ready to hand. The gold and silver are planted deep down in the earth in small particles, and not scattered in lumps over the hills. It would appear, from accounts given, that about as much money is thrown back into the shafts as is ever taken out. I would rather be an humble farmer, with a small patch of maize, than a worker in silver mines.

JOEL T. DAVES.

SEPTEMBER 15, 1874.

Bayonets as Peacemakers.

The Christian Union, discoursing under this head, takes a very sensible view of military intervention in the South. It says:

Here we are, almost ten years after the restoration of the Union. Are we still to go on attempting to secure order in half the country by marching United States troops to the scene of every robbery or murder? Must the citizen of South Carolina or Louisiana rely for his personal safety upon the Attorney General's office at Washington and the military posse? If such a necessity existed, the achievement of which we have boasted would be half a failure. But the necessity does not exist. The time has come when the Southern communities should be left to take care of themselves, after the fashion of Anglo-Saxon communities. The day for bayonets and martial law has gone by. And when we have to fall back on them, as at New Orleans the other day, it is a confession that government had previously blundered. It had, in fact, grossly blundered in upholding Kellogg's usurpation at the start; and the military demonstration that repressed the armed revolt of a wronged people was a painful and mortifying necessity. It was a necessity, but it is the business of Congress and the executive that such necessities do not occur again.

There would be the gravest objections to relying on the Federal military to repress local disturbances, if the military were always used in perfect good faith for the preservation of order. But it is notorious that in some cases they have been employed for a very different end. By the use of United States troops worthless political gamesters have more than once restored their waning fortunes. We believe that this abuse has been exceptional, but a single instance, or even a reasonable suspicion of it, inflicts the deepest injury on the cause of free government.

The duty of the national government toward the South is largely one of passiveness. The first thing is to forbear from needless and irritating interference. Let there be no useless exasperation of the whites, and no blow at the public school system, by the passage of the civil rights bill. Then each State should be left to take care of its own affairs. Not that this or any other policy will instantly or speedily cure all trouble. The South must at best have a long time for recuperation and readjustment. But the Southern communities are to-day as capable of managing their own affairs as they were before the war, or as the pioneer Western communities are now. The one conspicuous occasion for Congressional action is in the case of Louisiana. That State was subjected by Federal intervention to rulers never chosen by the people, and a part of whom, including the Governor, have a two years' longer tenure of office. The first atonement for the first mischievous interference would be to so far undo it as to secure to the State a fair election. The government cannot afford to stop short with the forcible maintenance in office of a set of usurpers; and having meddled once for mischief, and a second time for order, it ought to interfere once more for justice. But with this as perhaps the solitary exception, the let-alone policy is the true one for Congress to pursue toward the South.

The Church North in New Orleans.

Our Northern brethren have but one white church in this city—Ames chapel—and we believe this is their only white American church in Louisiana. The pastor, Rev. Mr. Morrow, speaking in the preachers' meeting in Boston, gives this account of his work:

Last Monday, September 14, the preachers' meeting resumed its weekly sessions, which had been suspended during the heated term. An unusually large number of ministers were in attendance. The morning was occupied by devotional exercises and by reports on the state of the church by sundry brethren laboring in the Southern field. Rev. Mr. Morrow, of New Orleans, formerly of the Irish Wesleyan Conference, but now pastor of the Ames Methodist Episcopal Church in New Orleans, was the first speaker. In fluent, forcible, candid style he stated that he had not found one of the finest churches, largest congregations and wealthiest of memberships, as he had been led to expect; but, on the contrary, an ordinary church, in which the average congregation numbered about forty, and whose membership was and is absolutely poor; that he had utterly failed to reach Southern families of Methodistic proclivities; that many Northern Methodists in the city retained their certificates of membership, instead of handing them to him, being actuated in this non-committal course by the fear of losing business, social ostracism, and other evils; that the political carpet-baggers spent their Sabbaths in holding political conventions, or in other pursuits, but rarely, if ever, at church; that neither from the party of theft on the one hand, nor the party of murder on the other, had his church anything to hope.

TEMPTATION resisted is as much rewarded as a good deed that is performed.

A Compromise.

Rev. Dr. Myers, writing in the Southern Christian Advocate, closes a very able discussion of the new temperance rule by the following recommendation:

In this view of the subject, is it not better to postpone for another quadrennium final action on this question, meanwhile guarding the church from intemperance by confirming the rulings on the law we now have? And I know of no better way to do this, to remain harmonious, and to prepare for future enlightened and prudent action, than to adopt, in the coming Conferences, some such resolutions as I find suggested in the Nashville Advocate, which, slightly altered, I give here:

Whereas, The proposed substitute is believed by many warm advocates of temperance to be vague in its meaning, and liable to diverse constructions in its execution; And whereas, As a provision against drunkenness and dram-drinking, it is doubted by them whether the new rule is safer or more efficacious than the old rule which is to be struck out to make place for it; And whereas, It has been decided by our General Conference and by the College of Bishops that our existing law already makes provision against the other evils mentioned in the substitute; therefore,

Resolved, That we do not concur in the action of the General Conference in changing the General Rules.

Resolved, That we are utterly opposed to drunkenness, dram-drinking, and intemperance in all its forms, and to the making and vending of spirituous liquors, except for medicinal and mechanical purposes, and we warn our people to abstain from these evils; and we exhort our pastors to a faithful testimony of the truth and the execution of the law as it now is, believing that therein may be found a remedy for the evils complained of, so far as they can be reached by church discipline.

If more is possible, without doing as much harm as good, let the future reveal it.

Going to Oregon.

Our esteemed brethren of the Louisiana Conference, Rev. N. M. Skipworth and Rev. James E. Bradley, have received appointments in the Oregon Conference. These brethren are highly esteemed in their old Conference, they are able ministers and faithful, and we much regret to lose them from this field of labor. The prayers of our preachers and people will follow them, and we trust that God's gracious presence and providence may attend them. These brethren may need help to meet the expenses of the long journey to Oregon. Let the liberal-minded not forget them in their time of need.

In a letter to us, October 6, Bro. Bradley says:

I am as yet without the means of going to my new work in that distant field. It will cost not less than $500. My work will, no doubt, do all they can for me, but still there will be perhaps a large sum lacking.

I would feel so thankful if my friends would help me, or if any friend of the pulpit would assist me on my way.

I propose (D. V.) to start not later than the fifteenth of next month—that is, November—that I may reach my new field before the winter rains set in.

THE Christian Age, conducted by Dr. Deems, has been consolidated with the Church Union. The publishers, in making the announcement, say:

This arrangement, while it relieves Dr. Deems of editorial responsibility, retains him on the paper, and his many friends will continue to be edified and instructed by his pen in the weekly visits of the Union and Age; and the undersigned desire here to express to their late editor-in-chief their unqualified satisfaction in the editorial conduct of the Christian Age, and their regrets that the new business arrangement deprives them of his companionship, feeling that very much of their success in establishing the Age is due to his acknowledged ability and extending popularity.

WE ARE PLEASED to learn that our brother, Rev. J. B. A. Ahrens, has received his degree of master of arts in course from the Texas University. He is a graduate of the Soule University, and his name has been enrolled as an alumnus of the Texas University of the class of 1863. We hope the university may turn out a great many graduates as useful and learned as Bro. Ahrens.

A SOCIABLE and concert, for the benefit of the Felicity Street Methodist Church, will be given in the basement of the church on Wednesday and Thursday next, October 28 and 29, at half-past seven P. M. All are invited to attend, and by so doing will help a good cause. We are obliged to the ladies having charge for complimentary tickets.

THE Rev. Dr. Schaff expressed the fear, at a meeting some years ago in New York, that the Sabbath may yet be crucified between two thieves—"Irish whisky and German lager beer."

WHAT if the parent bird should sit, nervous and fluttering, upon the bough, when the young ones were hatching, and mourn because its beautiful egg-shells were being broken?

Methodist Conference in Italy.

We copy the following from the Central Christian Advocate:

The first annual meeting of the Italian mission convened September 10, in the city of Bologna. Bishop Harris was present and presided. Teofilo Gay wae chosen secretary. All laborers in the mission were present, and as most of them hitherto were personally unknown to each other they greatly enjoyed the opportunity of conversing, elnging and praying togcther. Bros. Borelli and Capellini were ordaiued to both deacon's and eldor'e orders under the missionary rule. Duriug the session two sermons were preached and the Lord's Supper was administered.

The Bishop faithfully and judiciously addressed the incoting on the spiritual aims of our work, and the responsibility of the Christian ministry, and especially upon its peculiarities and obligations in our own church, and his address was translated by Bro. Mili. The visit and eervices of Bishop Harris made a fine impression upon all parties, ahd he also seemed eurprised and gratified with the mission's growth. The members and probationers reported aggregate about six hundred. After due consultation with home authorities and their concurrence, Rome was made the headquarters of the mission, instead of Bologna, and the superintendent was instructed to transfer his residence thither as soon as convenient.

The session closed with appropriate remarks from the Bishop, and the reading of the following appointments:

Superintendent, Leroy M. Vernon; Rome, Church of the Roman Forum, Teofilo Gay; Rome, Church of Piazzo Trevi, Alceste Lanna; Rome, Military Church, Luigi Capellini, Orismane Ottonelli; Florence, Antonio Arrighi; Prato, Cesare Agostini; Bologna, Eurico Borelli; Milan, Julius C. Mili; Forli, Amedeo Gnigou; Ravenna, Danielo Lantaret; Faenza, Bartolome Gordino; Brescello, Bartolome Malan.

Conference Items.

TENNESSEE CONFERENCE.

This Conference met on the seventh instant. The editor of the Western Methodist, writing before adjournment, gives the following items:

The business of the session so fir has been dispatched with rapidity, but in excellent order and with care. Eighteen preachers have been admitted on trial—a most promising class of young men, several of them sons of preachers. Eleven remaiu on trial—one discontinued on account of ill health, a son of the late Dr. Baldwin, and going soon to join his father in heaven. Nine have been admitted into full connection—the services on the occasion unusually solemn and impressive. Two have been readmitted, and two received by transfer—Dr. Wilkes from the Texas Conference, and Dr. Rivers from the Louisville Conference. The characters of the preachers have all been examined and passed. The number of members of the church in the Conference is 41,004—increase during the year, 1,359. The amount collected for missions is about $7,000, nearly $2,000 in excess of last year's report. Conference collections not yet reported, but believed to be nearly equal to last year's, and so of the support of the preachers. In fact there is thought to be a healthy financial condition in nearly every respect—a remarkable state of things in view of the failure of crops and the general depression of the money market. The institutions of learning, male and female, are in a flourishing condition—would doubtless be more successful than they are if it were not for the hard times.

The vote on the new rule on temperance stood: Yeas, 45; nays, 107.

SOUTHWEST MISSOURI CONFERENCE.

The Southwest Missouri Conference held its session in Lexington, Missouri, September 30 to October 6. Bishop Keener presided; Rev. W. M. Prottsman, secretary. D. T. Starkey, formerly a local deacon in the Methodist Protestant Church, was, on the recommendation of the Quarterly Conference of LaMont circuit, recognized in orders. W. A. Langhon, formerly an elder in the Methodist Protestant Church, on the recommendation of the Pleasant Hill Quarterly Conference, was recognized in orders. R. A. Bathurst, a traveling elder of the Methodist Church, was received into the Conference, and recognized in elder's orders.

The vote on the change of the General Rule was taken without debate, and resulted in yeas, 23; nays, 46.

REV. THOMAS M. EDDY, one of the secretaries of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, died at his residence, 316 West Twenty-Eighth street, New York, at half-past five on Wednesday morning, October 7. Overtaxed in body and mind, he had just returned from his tour of the Western Conferences, Minnesota being among the last visited, and was (October 1) immediately prostrated with a bilious attack, complicated with a painful organic ailment of long standing. On Saturday, the third, he began to change rapidly for the worse, and on Sabbath, the fourth, the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered by Dr. Chapman, pastor of St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church. On Monday there was no improvement in his symptoms, and, as stated, early on Wednesday morning death sueued.

An Abolitionist on Civic Rights.

The following extract from a private letter to the Tribune, says the Christian Age, gives the views on the civil rights bill of a resident of North Carolina, who was formerly a Northern man, and is vouched for as an old-time Abolitionist:

"The civil rights bill is an insult to the South, and a lasting shame to the North. The negroes here are in the possession of every right before the law that white men have; they can voto aud hold office, can sue and be sued, may sit on our juries, and are eligible even to the judge's bench; nay, more, as the law now stands, they may make a contract with a white person for labor, or to perform any service, break it with impunity, and enjoy perfect immunity from punishment, because, having no property, they cannot be made to pay damages, while I can be made to pay aud suffer for even the slightest breach of contract. My store is a public place; to-day, if any low, degraded, and perhaps half-drunken white man enters, I have the right to refuse to allow him to stay, and, if necessary, even to eject him by force. Let this bill become law, and I have still the same right to turn out the white man; but should a filthy, half-naked, drunken negro come in, I must be dumb. Because he is black he can enforce his presence, and because I am white I must be compelled to endure his presence. I can neither refuse him entrance, nor, having entered, show him the door, without rendering myself liable to pay a fine of $500, the whole of which shall be paid to the negro aggrieved thereby (!) and shall also for every such offense be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $1,000, or be imprisoned not more than one year.

"The same law applies to the forcing of negroes into the white public schools. We have here a system of public schools just about as it is at the North. The public money is divided pro rata, according to the numbers of white and colored children as shown by the school census of every two years. The whites have their share for their schools, and have their own teachers; the blacks have their share of the public money for their schools, and also have their own teachers (white or black, as they may choose.) The whole system has been harmoniously working, and gradually growing into better schools and more of them. Let this civil rights bill pass, and what will be the result? I believe the whole fabric of our common school system here will be doomed, and swept to swift destruction. Back of this civil rights bill, too, comes the 'compulsory education' measure, which Congress has not yet voted upon, I believe, though it has been somewhat agitated. Let this, too, pass, and you can have perhaps an idea of the anarchy and confusion, the insecurity of life and property, that would at once ensue; for such laws cannot be executed or enforced here, except at the bayonet's point. I have dealings in these parts with all classes of both races, and I know that all will suffer, and none more than the negro, if such legislation continues."

THE Louisville Conference closed its session at Princetoti, October 5.

PRESIDENT WHEELER, of Iowa Wesleyan University, says in the College Courant: "Look, if you please, at the lists of colleges reported by the Commissioner of Education in 1870, and of three hundred and thirty-seven you will find that some two hundred and seventy-two, with their millions of money and tens of thousands of students, are under the patronage of the denominations of the land. Lately a single bequest, made to a denominational university, will, according to the conditions, in one decade enrich the corporation to the amount of some three millions of dollars. Other denominational enterprises are reaching forward to the millions, and others to the hundreds of thousands. Money is drawn into their treasuries by unseen power, such as some who oppose them can not appreciate, and evidently do not understand.

DEATH OF A VETERAN.—Just as we go to press, says the Southern Christian Advocate of October 14, the mail brings us intelligence of the death of Rev. Henry Asbury, which took place at his home in Lincoln county, North Carolina, on the first of this month. Bro. Asbury was in many respects a most remarkable man, inheriting largely the intellectual power and spiritual excellencies of his father, Rev. Daniel Asbury, one of the illustrious pioneers of Carolina Methodism. In due time a suitable notice of his life and service will appear in these columns. The lateness of the hour at which we received the intelligence prevents us from indulging the extended remarks to which we feel prompted.

HE WHO prefers one state to another, who loves abundance more than scarcity, when God orders otherwise, loves the gifts of God more than God himself.

Periodicals.

THE Methodist Quarterly Review for October has been received. Contents: The Approaching Centennial of American Independence; Dr. Bender on the New Testament Idea of Miracles; Cheap Transportation; Withrow on the Catacombs; John Murray, the Father of American Universalism. The editorial department is, as usual, able and voluminous, containing Synopsis of the Quarterlies, Foreign Religious Intelligence, Quarterly Book-Table. D. D. Whedon, LL. D., editor. Nelson & Phillips, New York, publishers. Cincinnati: Hitchcock & Walden.

GOOD WORDS and the Sunday Magazine for October are both excellent. In many respects these are the very best magazines which come to us from abroad. J. B. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia, are the agents and publishers for America.

THE noted Georgian, Mr. G. B. Lamar, whose death we recently announced, left by his will $100,000 for the establishment of an asylum for indigent negroes. The Boston Post, commenting on this noble act of Mr. Lamar, says:

"This is a substantial evidence in favor of the notion that the real friends of the black man are to be found among those who were born and raised with him, and not among the canting philanthropists who have been misleading him in order to use him for political and revengeful purposes. Mr. Lamar was an original secessionist. After the war he was pursued with unusual severity. Abused and plundered, he has only come by a part of his rights to die and make a handsome divide with his dusky old friends of the cotton-patch."

A YOUNG CLERGYMAN, small of stature, preaching as a candidate in a certain place, one Sabbath, peering over the pulpit Bible, announced as his text: "It is I. Be not afraid."

The Cough Melange, for the cure of consumption and kindred diseases; the Analectic Oil, for cholera, cramps, etc., and the Renovating Bitters, for purifying the blood, are all highly spoken of by those competent to judge. C. B. Warrington, M. D., sole manufacturer, Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. The New Orleans agents are Messrs. E. J. Hart & Co.

ANY ONE wishing to buy one or more barrels of oranges cheap is referred to the advertisement of Mr. J. Wiese, in another column. Orders can be sent to Mr. Wiese, at Point-a-La-Hache, or to Joseph David, 127 Old Levee street, New Orleans.

WE WOULD refer all lovers of a real good cigar to the advertisement of Louis Tiemann, No. 9 Camp street. Mr. Tiemann warrants all goods from his store. Orders from the country receive prompt attention.

THE LEE MEMORIAL MONUMENT. The latest news from the Lee Memorial Association is that Prof. Edward V. Valentine, the sculptor, has procured from Vermont a block of pure white marble, from which he is now fashioning a recumbent figure of General Lee, to be placed on the grand monument that is now being erected at his tomb, at the Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Virginia. The figure represents General Lee reposing in an easy position upon a couch, his head and shoulders slightly raised above the body, his left arm outstretched by the side of his sword, his right arm laid across his breast. He wears a full Confederate uniform, including boots and gauntlets, and a light drapery covers nearly the whole form. The appearance is natural and graceful, indicating peaceful slumber rather than death.

This monument, when surmounted with such a fine work of art, will be a lasting memorial to one of Virginia's noblest sons and patriots. The members of this association are gentlemen well and favorably known by the entire community, who will see that nothing is left undone that will add to the beauty and finish of this great work. We are advised by the secretary, Mr. Charles A. Davidson, of Lexington, Virginia, that not sufficient funds have yet been subscribed to fully complete the monument. In order to further this object they have issued a life-size steel-engraved portrait of General Lee, to be sold only by subscription through authorized agents; the proceeds of such sales to be applied toward the completion of the work. They and we feel that this is an opportunity for all not only to procure a superb, life-like portrait of the great general at a very reasonable price, but also enables every person to aid in the erection of a lasting monument to his memory. Each subscriber will receive a certificate signed by the secretary and chairman of the Lee Memorial Association.

We commend this valuable portrait to the public, and predict for it an immense sale. Some energetic person should secure the agency in this section to assist in this noble work. W. W. Bostwick & Co., Nos. 177 and 179 West Fourth street, Cincinnati, Ohio, have been appointed general managers of all agencies in the United States. All communications addressed to the above firm for circulars certificates and terms to agents will receive their immediate attention.

ON THIS PAGE will be found the advertisement of B. T. Walshe, 110 Canal street. Captain Walshe's assortment of boys' and children's clothing and gentlemen's underwear cannot be surpassed by any house in the city. We would recommend any of our friends wishing articles in his line to give him a call.

They feel languid, devoid of energy, extremely nervous, and have no appetite. To this class the Renovating Bitters are especially recommended. Such patients should resort to the use of these Bitters, the invariable result of which will be a strong and healthy constitution, a disappearance of all nervousness, a good appetite and a perfect restoration to health.

Thousands have testified to the merits of these Bitters. I would strongly advise all suffering with the above-named complaints to try them and be convinced.

MEDICAL.

DR. TUTTS VEGETABLE LIVER PILLS.

THE STARTLING DRAWBACK ON nearly all medicinal agents has ever been that in their process of purgation and purification they have also debilitated the system. To obviate this difficulty physicians have long sought for an agent that would

PURGE, PURIFY AND STRENGTHEN

AT ONE AND THE SAME TIME.

Their research has at last been rewarded by a discovery which fully realizes the fondest desires of the medical faculty, and which is justly regarded as the most important triumph that Pharmacy has ever achieved. This important desideratum is

Dr. Tutt's Vegetable Liver Pill,

which purifies the blood, and removes all corrupt humors and unhealthy accumulations from the body, and yet produces no weakness or lassitude whatever, but, on the contrary, tones the stomach and invigorates the body during the progress of its operation. It unites the heretofore irreconcilable qualities of a Strengthening Purgative and a Purifying Tonic.

Dr. Tutt's Pills are the most active and searching medicine in existence. They at once attack the very root of diseases, and their action is so prompt that in an hour or two after they are taken the patient is aware of their good effects. They may be taken at any time without restraint of diet or occupation. They produce neither nausea, griping nor debility, and as a family medicine they have no rival.

TO THE SUFFERERS WITH RHEUMATISM.

In view of the numberless sufferers afflicted with this painful malady, I feel induced to offer to the public my "ANTI-RHEUMATIC MIXTURE," which medicine proves to be the only successful remedy in this line, for it always gives instant relief, and in most cases cures permanently.

During the last fifteen years I have cured thousands of people, in this State and city, of this dreadful disease, with this medicine; and, what astonishes most, the patient recovered by the use of a single bottle of it. This medicine cures nothing but Rheumatism, and should the patient not recover by using the first bottle of it, that patient is not afflicted with Rheumatism at all. This being the first time of making my discovery known to the public after fifteen years of most successful results, I hope the sufferers will take advantage of this rare remedy, and by doing so add their names to the thousands already cured by it.

MUSIC-BOOKS FOR SCHOOLS.

AMERICAN

SCHOOL MUSIC READERS.

IN THREE BOOKS.

BY L. O. EMERSON AND W. S. TILDEN.

In Book I, which is for Primary Schools, we have a three-years' course of study, very plainly laid out, with abundant directions to teachers, and a large number of sweet songs for the little ones to sing by rote and by note. Price, 35 cents.

In Book II the course above indicated is continued, and becomes a little more theoretic. The book is fitted for the use of the younger scholars in Grammar Schools. Price, 50 cents.

In Book III part singing is introduced, and the ear is trained to harmonic singing. For Higher Classes in Grammar Schools. Price, 50 cents.

...The music in these charming and useful books was selected and arranged by the practiced hand of Mr. L. O. Emerson, and the theoretic part has been well tested by Mr. Tilden before placing in the Readers.

For High Schools nothing succeeds the above Readers better than THE HOUR OF SINGING ($1,) already in extensive use. If that has been used, try CHOICE TRIOS ($1,) a collection of the best three-part music.

The new Singing School Book, THE SONG MONARCH (75 cents,) is attracting general attention as one of the best books ever made for Singing Schools.

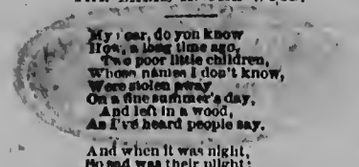
The Child's Corner.

THE BABES IN THE WOOD.



My dear, do you know
How, a long time ago,
Two poor little children,
Whose names I don't know,
Were stolen away
On a fine summer's day,
And left in a wood,
As I've heard people say.

And when it was night,
So sad was their plight;
The sun it went down,
And the moon gave no light!
They sobb'd and they sigh'd,
And they bitterly cried,
And the poor little things
They laid down and died.

And when they were dead
The robins so red
Brought strawberry-leaves,
And over them spread;
And all the day long
They sang them this song:
Poor babes in the wood!
Poor babes in the wood!
And don't you remember
The babes in the wood?

The Tenth Commandment.

"Just guess what Susan Shaley has got in her barn!" said Bella Stevens, fanning herself with her pink gingham sun-bonnet, and running into the house all in a flutter.

"Why, pigeons, I suppose; or—deary me, let me think—I don't believe I can guess."

"Pigeous! Now, Julie Stevens, you don't guess a bit right; I knew you could never guess. Why, it's two real, live kittens. I don't believe anybody ever had such ones before—cute little pink noses, and white feet and eyes!—O just bine"—and she fanned away with her sun-bonnet, and walked up and down in the greatest fluster, sitting here and there and everywhere, and not being quiet a minute.

"Kittens? two of them? I don't believe she wants so many; may be she will give us one, and we can get Jamie to fix it in the coach for a horse, and all the dolls can go riding, and Minnie can hold it in her arms."

"She just won't give anybody one, and I pretty nearly cried about it, and I said: 'Susan Shaley, you are just as mean as ever you can be.' O I wish I could get one! What in the world does Susan Shaley want with two? And here are you and I with none. I mean to go right straight to her mamma and beg for it while Susan is at her grandmamma's, for I never, never shall be happy again until I get it"—and she nodded her little head with all the earaestness in the world, and fanned with her sun-bonnet, and stamped her foot on the floor, and altogether was not a very good or mild-looking little girl; and it was fortunate she did not always appear to such disadvantage, for in such case she would not have been loved very much; but this morning something was wrong with her somewhere, as it was very easy to see.

"May be some other kitten would do," suggested Julie.

"No, I won't have none but Susan Shaley's, and I just mean to have it now. I will have it, you see if I don't, Julie Stevens."

"But," said Julie, "I have been thinking about what mamma told us yesterday. Don't you know she said to wish for other people's things was coveting and breaking the tenth commandment, and"—

"Yes, but then I don't believe she means cats and such things; it would be such fun to see kitty's little white feet playing with strings, and to see her rolling all about the floor, and she has just no nails at all to scratch with, because she is so little. I am going to tease somebody till I get her."

"Yes, but about the commandment; I 'most know mamma would say you ought not to try to get Susan's kitty against her will, and make her cry."

"I cannot help it; I must have her, and Susan won't mind it much after it is over. She has a rabbit and three dolls, and don't need her half as much as I do, because, you see, I only have Eliza Jane—and her nose is broken—and Josephine, with not a hit of anything alive to play with."

"But if it is wrong to get it?"

"Of course, Julie Stevens, you know I would not get it if I thought it was wrong. The commandment don't mean cats, and mamma never in the world thought of them either."

"Well, I want a kitty; but I do not want it so very much as to covet Susan Shaley's."

Bella looked serious, and seemed to be thinking a great deal, as she said: "I'm sure it is no harm only to want the kitty, and get some one to give her to me. To be sure, Susan would cry; but then I'll cry if I don't get her. The commandment don't say a scrap of a word about kitteus or eats. It says: 'Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's house, nor his maid, nor his ox, uor his ass'"—

"Nor anything that is his," chimed in a soft little voice from up in the corner of the shop window, where five-year-old Minnie was nestled, hard at work making odd figures intended to form a sample.

"Sure enough!" exclaimed Bella, holding her sun-bonnet suddenly still, and standing with her finger pressed to her lip for an instant; and then, reaching up into the shop window to give Minnie a kiss—"sure enough; I'll not go to Susan Shaley's; I'll try very hard uot to wish. I see 'anything that is his' means cats!"—New York Observer.

The Golden Opportunity.

Jean Ingelow has a sweet little story about opportunity—the golden, the silver and the copper—as they came to a child. I have a few words to say about the golden opportunities that come to us all.

A man rose in a prayer meeting one night and told how for long years he had never bent his knee in supplication, when the question of a little Sunday school scholar, his daughter, made him think and turn to God. "Papa, do you pray?" the darling had said, her blue eyes looking straight into his own. It was her golden opportunity, and God blessed it to her father, and to many more, for he is now an active worker for the Master, and a teacher whose efforts have been crowned with success.

"I want to speak to you about your soul," said a student to his classmate, putting his arm through his, as they sauntered over the campus. He had been days gathering courage to speak in just that frank, cordial way to his friend, whose brilliant talents were not consecrated. "I have been wishing you would; and, wondering why you did not," was the reply. "I am in trouble about my soul."

Here was a golden opportunity that had not even been suspected. Servant of Christ, there may be some one near you in trouble, longing for you to say a word, amazed that you are silent. Be up and doing! "The King's business requireth haste."

"Won't you say a word to my husband about Jesus?" said a wife to the lady who had come in a friendly way to look after the little son, a Sunday school boy. "How can I?" thought the lady, dreading to intrude upon a stranger, uncertain of the treatment she might receive. She prayed over it, and then saying earnestly, after a few words about the children: "Don't think I am taking too much upon myself, but I want to know why you don't follow the dear Savior?" She was surprised to see the horny hand dash away the tears, while the man with a faltering voice replied: "It is over twenty years since I've entered a church, till last Sunday, and then my boy took me to yours. I thank you for coming to talk to me."

Friends, we are not doing all we might for Christ. The harvest is plenteous. The laborers are few. Opportunities are around us all the time. Do we seize the golden ones? Mrs. M. E. Sangster, in Sunday School Times.

How to Escape the Trap.

I saw a good story lately that was headed: "How to Escape the Trap." It is a sort of fable. The story says that a company of rats once met in the cellar of a house to consult together about their safety. A large steel trap had been set in that cellar. It was baited with a good big piece of cheese, which smelled very nice, and which they wanted very much to get at. But they had seen a number of their friends killed and wounded by this trap. In this way they had learned that it was a dangerous thing to meddle with. And now they had met together to see if they could not find out some way of getting that nice cheese out of the trap without any injury to themselves. Many long speeches were made, and many plans suggested, but none of them seemed to answer. At last one of them got up and said: "I move that a committee of two of the strongest among us be appointed to attend to this business. And I think if one of the committee will put his paws upon the spring and keep it down, then the other can take away the cheese with safety." This seemed to meet with great favor. They agreed that this was the best plan that had been suggested, and they uttered a loud squeal in favor of it.

But just then they were startled by a faint voice, and a poor lame rat, with only three legs, came limping into the meeting. He stood up to speak, and said:

"My friends, I have tried the plan that has just been proposed, and you see the result. I lost my leg by it; that is what it cost me. Now let me give you my advice. If you want to escape the dangers of that trap, the best way is to let it alone. Don't touch it. Don't go near it."

And this is one of the ways in which Jesus, our guiding star, keeps us out of danger. Every sin is like a trap. We cannot go near it without danger. And the advice which Jesus gives us, when we are tempted to any kind of sin, is always the same. He says: Let it alone. Flee from it. Have nothing to do with it. The best way to escape the trap is not to go near it.—Rev. Dr. Newton.

THE GREAT MASTER.—"I am my own master!" cried a young man proudly, when a friend tried to persuade him from an enterprise which he had on hand; "I am my own master!"

"Did you ever consider what a responsible post that is?" asked his friend.

"Responsible? Is it?"

"A master must lay out the work which he wants done, and see that it is done right. He should try to secure the best ends by the best means. He must keep on the lookout against obstacles and accidents, and watch that everything goes straight, else he must fail."

"Well."

"To be master of yourself you have your conscience to keep clear, your heart to cultivate, your temper to govern, your will to direct, and your judgment to instruct. You are master over a hard lot, and if you don't master them they will master you."

"That is so," said the young man. "Now I could undertake no such thing," said his friend. "I should fail sure if I did. Saul wanted to be his own master and failed. Herod did. Judas did. No man is fit for it. 'One is my Master, even Christ.' I work under his direction. He is regulator, and where he is Master all goes right." "One is my Master, even Christ," repeated the young man slowly and seriously; "everybody who puts himself sincerely under his leadership wins at last."

HOW HE GOT A GREEK TESTAMENT.—The Rev. John Brown, when a poor shepherd boy, conceived the idea of learning Latin and Greek, and, having procured a few old books, actually accomplished the task while tending his cattle on the hills. On one occasion he went to Edinburg, plaided and barefoot, walked into a bookseller's store and asked for a Greek Testament. "What are you going to do with a Greek Testament?" said the bookseller. "Read it," was the prompt reply. "Read it!" exclaimed the bookseller with a smile; "ye may have it for nothing if ye'll read it." Taking the book, he quietly read off a few verses, and gave the translation, on which he was permitted to carry off the Greek Testament in triumph.

Farm, Garden and Household.

About Mulching Fruit-Trees.

All successful and intelligent pomologists recommend the practice of covering the ground round about fruit-trees with straw, coarse manure, sedge, tan-bark, sawdust or any sort of material that will smother every weed and grass, and keep the soil moist and mellow. It requires only a thin layer of straw to accomplish the desired purpose. Still, if one has only a few hundred fruit-trees to be mulched, it will take such a large quantity of mulching material that few persons are willing to incur the expense incident to collecting and spreading the needed supply. A farmer in New Jersey, who has a large pear orchard in full bearing, keeps all the ground about the trees covered so completely with sedge that not a weed nor any grass appears. When pears fall from the trees they are received without being bruised on this soft bed. He likes the practice of mulching fruit-trees, but says it costs a great deal to collect sedge and spread it.

I have a few hundred fruit-trees of the more desirable varieties, the ground around which is mulched as fast as suitable material can be collected. When all kinds of mulching in my neighborhood may be sold for ten to twenty dollars per ton, trees are not apt to be mulched. Knowing how highly I value weeds, a near neighbor, having four or five acres of bog-mead, on which he dreaded to mow with his own manual force, proposed to give me the entire growth of that ground if I would cut weeds and all neatly, and remove the burden from the ground.

The growth of vegetation on such ground must be removed every season, or the old and dry stems will render it almost impossible to mow the succeeding crop. There are thousands of acres of such grass and weeds about the country which go to seed undisturbed, simply because the proprietors have not sufficient pluck to cut the heavy growth, cure and remove the burden, all of which would make excellent mulching.—New York Observer.

NEW METHOD OF PLANTING STRAWBERRY-BEDS.—Having heard of a new method for forming strawberry-beds, I thought I would try it, and it proved a great success. In previous years our crops have been very poor, considering the attention they have had; but this year, with the new method, we had abundance of fruit. The way in which I planted my bed is as follows: I did not cut any runners off the old bed, but allowed them to run into a mass. In the autumn I lined strips about nine inches wide and two apart through its length, and put them in squares of nine inches. These I took up with a spade at three inches deep. In the bed prepared for them I had trenches dug two feet apart, and placed the squares of strawberry-roots in them, at a distance of eighteen inches from each other. The roots were not injured in the least, and the crop was excellent. I had the trenches that were made in the old bed filled with one part well-rotted manure and two parts stiff loam, and the bed was soon covered with plants. Thus, by degrees, you can renew the old bed, as well as form new ones. Certainly with the old plan of only single roots we obtained finer specimens of fruit; but, unless fruit for show is required, I advise every one to try the above plan for quantity, and they will not be disappointed. A market gardener near here, who grows large quantities of strawberries for sale, mows the tops off as soon as they have done fruiting, covers them up with long-ish manure, and rakes it off in the spring. This is rather rough treatment, but he always has an immense quantity of fruit.—Correspondent of the Garden.

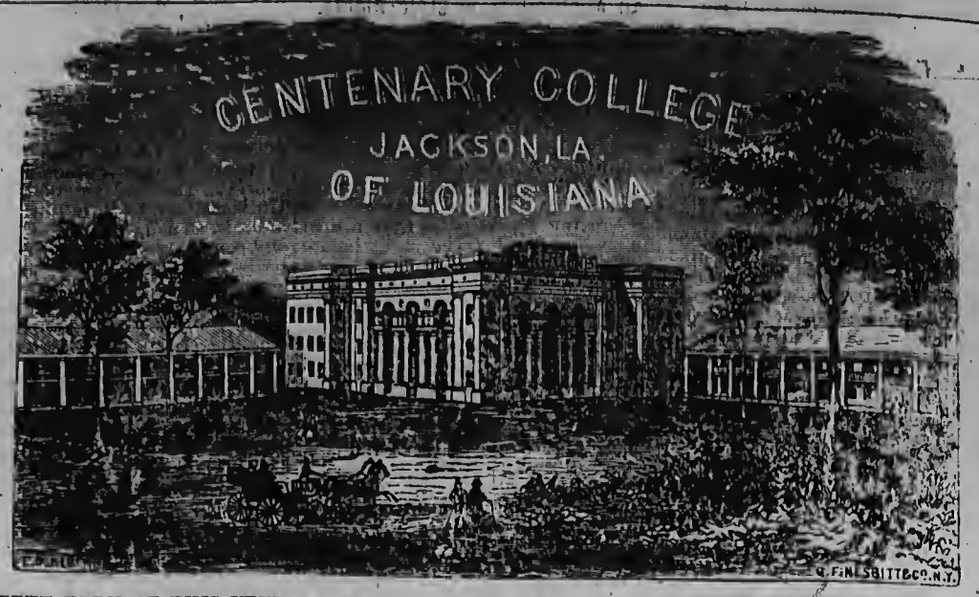
HOW TO MAKE A MUSTARD PLASTER.—The ordinary way is to mix the mustard with water, tempering it with a little flour; but such a plaster as that makes is simply abominable. Before it has half done its work it begins to blister its patient, and leaves him finally with a painful flayed spot, after having far less effect in a beneficial way than was intended. Now a mustard plaster should never make a blister at all. When you make a mustard plaster, then, use no water whatever, but mix the mustard with the white of an egg, and the result will be a plaster which will "draw" perfectly, but will not produce a blister even upon the skin of an infant, no matter how long it is allowed to remain upon the part.

GUANO AS A FERTILIZER FOR FLOWERS.—To make guano-water, a good plan is to have a barrel in some secluded place, throw in a pint of guano and fill up with water. After standing a day, use the water as wanted, and as it gets low fill up with water, occasionally throwing in a handful of guano. Guano dissolves slowly, and by this plan none will be wasted. Those who keep fowls or pigeons can make a good liquid manure by putting a shovelful of the bird manure in the barrel, instead of the guano. If you use guano-water fresh, never put more than a small tablespoonful of guano in a gallon of water.—Practical Farmer.

FELONS AND RUSTY NAILS.—Elder Evans, the Shaker, says: "For the past ten years we have treated felons with hot water, and with unerring success. No cutting, no blistering, no anything, but immersing the finger, hand, or even the whole arm, if necessary, in water as hot as can be borne, until the pain is gone and the core is loosened and drawn from the bone. When rusty nails have produced wounds, the same course has been pursued. If on the hand or foot, keep it in hot water."

COFFEE CAKES.—Take a piece of bread dough after it has risen and roll thin without molding; cut and fry in hot lard the same as doughnuts. They should be eaten warm, and are nice and convenient for breakfast with coffee.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.



THE NEXT TERM OF THIS VENERABLE INSTITUTION OPENS ON THE FIRST MONDAY IN OCTOBER, 1874.

Faculty.—REV. C. G. ANDREWS, A. M., President, and Professor of Mental and Moral Science, Political Economy and International Law; REV A. R. HOLCOMBE, A. M., Professor of Mathematics and Adjunct Professor of Natural Science; G. H. WILEY, A. M., Professor of Ancient and Modern Languages; ——— ———, Professor of Natural Science; THOMAS J. KERNAN, A. M., Principal of the Preparatory Department and Adjunct Professor of Modern Languages.

Charges.—Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in College, $60; Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in Preparatory Department, $40; Contingent expenses, $5. A matriculation fee of $5 must be paid on entering any regular college class. One-half the charges must be paid when the student enters; the other half on the beginning of the second term, March 1.

Board.—Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be had in the best families for $20 per month. Day-boarding with the same families, $10 per month. Rooms provided in the dormitories free of rent. Board to be paid in advance at least one month.

Location.—This institution is located in the lovely village of Jackson, about twelve miles from Bayou Sara, in a grove of pine, magnolia, oak and beech. The location is remarkable for its beautiful woodlands, its bland and delightful atmosphere, its pure water, its unrivaled healthfulness, and its cultivated and refined society.

When Founded.—The college was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and ceded to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845.

Alumni.—Its Alumni numbers two hundred and three, and they are to be found in the most honorable and useful stations in the land.

Apparatus and Cabinet.—The college possesses a valuable set of Philosophical, Astronomical and Chemical Apparatus, and also a well-selected Mineralogical and Geological Cabinet. The apparatus includes a Theodolite, Sextant, Compass, Chronometer, Atwood's Machine, Whirling Tables, Electrical Machine, Air Pump, various combinations of the Mechanical Powers, Batteries, Chemical Tests, etc., sufficient for a thorough and extended course of observations and experiments. Steps have been taken by the Board of Trustees to put these in thorough repair.

Literary Societies.—There are two regular Literary Societies connected with the Institution. These are of great utility to young men acquiring a liberal education—improving them in the art of public speaking, making them in some degree familiar with the proceedings of deliberative bodies, and in cultivating systematic business habits. Each Society has a convenient hall and a well-selected Library—about one thousand six hundred volumes each, which, added to the College Library of two thousand volumes, makes over five thousand volumes in the college.

Buildings.—The Trustees are determined to continue the repairs on the buildings till completed. The grand Center Building is a noble specimen of architectural beauty and adaptation to the purposes of its erection. The wings, built of solid brick, present each a front of two hundred feet, with upper and lower galleries the entire length, supported by Tuscan columns, and with the center making in the perspective a continuous front of seven hundred feet.

Preparatory Department.—In the Preparatory Department students are fitted for regular college classes, or may obtain a thorough English or commercial education.

The Faculty.—Its Faculty are men of experience and success in teaching.

Scientific.

THE experiments made by Prof. Binz, of Bonn, with reference to the effect of alcohol on animals, are regarded as of much importance, inasmuch as he seems to have discovered the reasons why alcoholic stimulants are so useful in cases of snake poisoning. He found that when decomposed blood was introduced into the veins of the living animal, all the symptoms of putrid fever were shown, the temperature increasing until death ensued. Alcohol, it is stated, reduced the heat and retarded the putrid process, increasing the action of the heart—precisely the effect of alcoholic stimulants, it is said, when administered in case of rattlesnake poisonlug.

MANY of the plants used in medicine are brought from the interior of countries not easily accessible to Europeans; and hence their true character is often unknown. The Jalap plant is one of these. It belongs to a class of plants of which our common sweet potato and the convolvulus, or "morning glory," are good representatives. Nuttall first named it Exogonium Jalappa; but it has been ever since called E. purga, from its peculiar properties, though the previous name is the correct one. Another plant was thought to yield the true jalap at one time, and was called on that account Convolvulus Jalappa. This false jalap produces a root very similar to an overgrown sweet potato. The real jalap has a root like a medium-sized turnip. According to the Revue Scientifique, a plant has flowered recently in France for the first time since it has been under culture.

WE BELIEVE that it has already been announced to our readers, in a former number of the Journal, that a dredging party, while off the coast of Florida, secured an old anchor-chain, to the sides of which were attached specimens of coral of such a size as would seem to have justified the conclusion that they were the result of the growth of many centuries, and yet the conditions of the discovery were such as to provo beyond all apparent doubt that they were of very recent formation. The significance of this discovery, in modifying certain theories regarding the rate at which coral deposits are formed, is evident. Another argument advanced by geologists as a conclusive proof that certain fossils found in the caves and caverns of England were of enormous antiquity, was based on the fact that the remains obtained from these caverns were found beneath stalagmitic layers of so great depth that their age was beyond calculation; or, in a word, were "prehistoric." It now appears, however, that nature has been more active in its work than was supposed possible, and Mr. Boyd Dawkins, as the result of observations in the Ingleboro cave, known as the Jockey's Cap, Yorkshire, England, reaches the conclusion that, so far as the recent stalagmitic deposits are concerned they must have been growing at the rate of 0.2946 of an inch per annum—a rate which, if constant from the first, would make the stalagmites and stalactites in this cavern no older than the time of Edward the Third A. D. 1327. Should subsequent observation confirm these calculations, it is evident that these deposits, like the coral growths, must be used with caution as evidences of the actual age of fossils, or so-called prehistoric remains which may be found beneath them, or to which they may be attached.—Appleton's Journal.

UPHEAVAL OF AUSTRALIA.—An Australian journal publishes the following at Melbourne: "The gradual upheaval of portions of the coast of Australia was first remarked by the late Mr. John Keat, who was the commissariat officer in charge, in the early days of the penal settlement of Moreton Bay. Mr. S. H. Wintle, of Hobart Town, has sent an interesting communication on the subject, which is thus referred to by the Sydney Empire. He contends that the shells found in heaps in Tasmania must have been left where they are found by the aborigines, because the heaps contain the remains of testaceous mollusks, too minute to have been of any service to the blacks, and attributes the presence of bits of charcoal in such heaps to drift agency. His description of one of these shell deposits is interesting. This deposit is situated at Sandy Bay, an indent in the estuary of the River Derwent, distant from Hobart Town about two miles. In a bank formed by a roadcutting, distance sixty yards inland and forty feet above high-water mark, exists a shell-bed three feet in thickness. The shells have a matrix of dark argillo-arenaceous soils, and beyond, being more or less commingled, especially the bivalves, exhibit few traces of geological age. Above the shell-bed reposes a stratum of vegetable soil a few inches thick. The shells rest upon a stratum of brown clay, having no traces of organisms, and that, in turn, reposes on coarse-grained yellow sandstone, traversed by veins of marl near its surface. The shells are all of genera and species now found living in the water only sixty yards in front and below the deposit. In this bed a cockle-bowl-shaped fossil bone was found by a laborer employed in making the road, five years ago. * * * We have little doubt it is the bone of the pyoidal process of some cetaceam. It is two and a half inches in length by two and a half inches in breadth, and presents no further signs of detail than the associated shells do. Mr. Wintle describes similar shells to those which he has examined in Tasmania, and affirms that the annexes of these beds exist in Victoria and New South Wales. He considers that these analogous facts prove that there is an oscillation of the land around the Polar regions, and that the coast of Australia is slowly rising at no less than sixteen feet in a century, while during the dawn of the Pleistocene epochs a wide tract of land sunk down, whereby New Holland became separated from the mainland of Australia."

IT WAS SAID of the ancient Spartans "that they never inquired after the number of their enemies, but where they were."

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the sixteenth instant:

Mississippi river and bayous	7,263
Red river	533
Railroads	4,173
Lake	4
Mobile	1,596
Texas	276
Total	13,850

On Saturday the market opened with a fair inquiry, but mostly from buyers who claimed concessions, which factors would not admit, and the sales during the early part of the morning were of limited extent, and mostly at prices showing no quotable variation, after which sellers met the demand more freely, in many cases accepting or being willing to accept offers which they had previously refused. The movement consequently became more animated, and resulted in sales to the amount of 2,300 bales. On Monday the movement commenced with a fair inquiry, but was checked by factors holding rather above the views of buyers, and the sales during the morning were confined to 801 bales at about previous rates, after which sellers met the demand more freely, and the additional business embraced 2,500 bales, making, with 1,200 bales sold late, a total of 4,500 bales. Strict good ordinary to low middling sold at 13½c., and low middling at 14c. On Tuesday the market was rather quiet at the opening, but the inquiry soon became more general, and up to noon 1,500 bales changed hands at prices showing no quotable variation, although the advantage, if any, was on the side of the factors, after which the latter met the demand more freely, and the entire business of the day summed up 5,000 bales.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 11,850 bales, against 8,850 for the corresponding time last week and 6,250 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 85,365 bales, against 69,985 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 102,218 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 36,749 bales to Great Britain, of 1,579 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 7,789 to France. We quote:

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, Oct. 21.—At a meeting of the Long Island Baptist Association the Lee Avenue church difficulty was called up. The committee which had the case in hand made a report, declaring the Lee Avenue church an open-communion church, and recommending that that church be dropped from the list of the association. The report was adopted—ayes, 174; nays, 24. Rev. J. Hyatt Smith, pastor of the church, made a short speech, stating that Lee Avenue church would continue in its present attitude, and on behalf of himself and church bade the association a brief farewell.

HOLLY SPRINGS, Oct. 21.—The coroner's jury, inquiring into the death of the two negroes, Perkins and Ravenwood, who were taken from the jail in this place, on the seventh instant, by an armed mob of negroes and foully murdered, adjourned on Monday last. It rendered a verdict that they came to their death at the hands of an armed mob of negroes, four of whom are named and others unknown.

The four negroes charged with this fearful crime were brought, immediately after their arrest, before Chancellor Abbott on habeas corpus, and after a prolonged examination were all discharged this evening. Taking Perkins and Ravenwood from jail and murdering them, as it was done, even though the deed was committed by negro Ku-Klux, is a crime that surpasses in horror the Gibson county affair, yet no rewards are offered by the Governor and no arrests by the United States marshal.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., Oct. 21.—Thomas Henderson, of Lee county, a farmer, has been arrested by the United States marshal for intimidation of a negro. His offense was discharging the negro from his employ on account of laziness.

A letter to the Advertiser, from one of the most prominent citizens of Alabama, says martial law prevails in Sumter in point of fact. Hester and Beach, United States detectives, command the military and arrest without warrant.

They are men of mean, malicious, tyrannical dispositions, with much cunning in preparing affidavits, and inducing or compelling negroes to swear to them. Thomas Cobb, one of the sheriff's posse arrested a few days ago, was unconditionally released by the commissioner. The testimony in his case is the same as in the others. Hays is filling a list of appointments in his district and is unmolested.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 21.—The steamer Japan brings Yokohama dates of September 29. The French government at present takes the lead in pushing the demand for the opening of the entire empire. The correspondence shows a vehement opposition to wrest this concession from Japan, in spite of all remonstrances.

The Mikado gave a breakfast, on the twenty-second instant, to all foreign diplomats at his own residence. This was the first entertainment at which the sovereign has freely mingled with foreign guests and received them at his table.

NEW YORK, Oct. 22.—Mail advices from Mexico state that Germany is intriguing to obtain a foothold on Mexican soil. A colony of Germans are offered the loan of money, with conditions to obtain a colonial treaty.

The contest between Lerdo and Mejia for the presidency is spirited, and there is already much excitement on the subject.

An effort is being made by Lerdo to have Oaxaca carried in his interest at a preceding election, and thus strengthen his candidacy in the remainder of the country. In a test vote in the Federal Congress, on a question in which the strength of Lerdo was involved, he was in the minority.

OMAHA, Oct. 22.—E. B. Chandler, the secretary of the State Aid Society, states that there are from seven hundred to one thousand people who will need to be fed during the coming winter. The citizens of this State are doing all they can, but will be unable to supply all the demands upon them.

LITTLE ROCK, Oct. 23.—Ex-Governor Harris Flanigan died, at his home in Arkadelphia, this morning. He was Governor of this State during the war, and one of the most prominent members of the Constitutional Convention.

SHREVEPORT, Oct. 24.—The following gentlemen were arrested this morning by the United States marshal charged with violating the enforcement act: George A. Pike, banker; E. Jacobs, of the firm of E. & B. Jacobs, the wealthiest firm in the city; John J. Horan, of the firm of Horan & Looney, dealers in wool and hides; W. P. Ford, of Boisseau & Ford, cotton factors; R. H. Lindsay, of Steers & Lindsay, cotton brokers; and J. G. McWilliams, a heavy real estate owner and operator.

Other arrests are threatened. The warrants were served by one O'Neal, the Radical candidate for sheriff in Bossier parish, and were based upon the affidavits of General Lewis Merrill, United States army, commanding the district. No resistance was offered, and no one attempted to escape. The examinations are to take place on Monday morning.

GALVESTON, Oct. 24.—A special to the Associated Press from San Antonio, dated to-day, says Colonel Buell struck the hostile Indians on the ninth of October, on the salt fork of Red river, destroyed four hundred and seventy-five lodges, and is still in pursuit, driving the Indians toward the edge of the staked plains.

Colonel Davidson moved from Fort Sill with a strong column on the twenty-first, going west.

CHICAGO, October 24.—The synod, without pronouncing definite sentence, disposes of Swing by requiring the Presbytery of Chicago to erase his name from the roll of ministers. This ends the Swing matter for the present, at least.

NEW YORK, Oct. 26.—A special dispatch from Shreveport says that in Homer, Claiborne parish, N. J. Scott, parish judge; J. A. Ramsey, recorder; and L. R. Richardson, mayor, were arrested there on Saturday night by one Selye and Deputy Marshal Maxey, assisted by cavalry. Cause of arrest unknown.

No citizens are aware of any act to justify or suspicion an offense. The arrests were made in the most violent manner. The parties are not allowed to communicate with their families. The prisoners are cursed and abused. Ramsey is the most popular man in the parish. Judge Scott is a candidate for re-election.

MEMPHIS, Oct. 26.—A mass meeting of citizens is called to meet at the Grand Opera House to-morrow evening, to take action in regard to the presence of the national soldiers in the city on the eve of the election, and to petition President Grant to remove them.

OMAHA, Oct. 27.—Information received from southwestern Nebraska shows that thousands of people are in a starving condition. Our informant saw many who for weeks had nothing to eat but baked squash, pumpkin and salt; others who had lived on baked flour and water, one meal a day, for weeks. Ten thousand people in this State will need aid sufficient to keep them from starvation and being frozen to death this winter. Hundreds of people are naked and on the verge of starvation, and without means to leave the State.

Snow fell at Lsrnale and Cheyenne to-day. A heavy rain fell here.

FOREIGN.

BOMBAY, Oct. 25.—Two thousand persons perished by a recent cyclone. The steamer Mary foundered, and ten on board went down. The remainder took to boats; one of them was lost, and another picked up, containing two living and three dead persons.

Father Theiner on the Jesuits.

Prof. Friedrich has communicated to the Cologne Gazette a series of letters by the late Father Theiner, of the Vatican Library. The first series, it will be remembered, contained such vehement denunciations of the Jesuits, apropos of the Ecumenical Council, that the Ultramontane papers affected at first to doubt their genuineness, but ultimately contented themselves with disparaging the writer of them. The second series, which are of a more recent date, are of a similar character. In a letter dated September 24, 1870, Father Theiner attributes the supremacy gained by the Jesuits—which has been so injurious to the church—to their having to deal with an inconceivably ignorant episcopate, with a Pope ignorant of or only superficially acquainted with history, sacred or profane, theology, and canon law. The Pope, he says, distinguishes himself and often makes himself ridiculous through his old wives' credulity, and none of his predecessors were such willing instruments of the Jesuits. Describing the latter as boasters and charlatans, he deplores the revival of the order as disastrous both for Church and State. Formerly they sought to win over princes, in order, with their aid, to suppress all free movement in society and science, thereby preparing the fall of the princes themselves; and they now ingratiate themselves with the bishops for the purpose of domineering over the clergy and professors, and of ultimately overturning the bishops. To check their deadly influence, governments, he says, ought to allow no Jesuits to remain in the country, and no priests trained by them to hold any appointment or benefice. The order once expelled from Germany, there would again be learned and patriotic bishops, and a worthy priesthood, and Rome would recover from its infatuation.

REV. DR. NEWMAN, ex-chaplain of the Senate, and inspector of consuls in all quarters of the globe, says the Congregationalist, having discovered the Garden of Eden, and the tower of Babel, and, for aught we know, the language which the bricklayers spoke before their speech was so broken up as to confound not only themselves but all philologists, writes that he expects to remain six months in London, inspecting "the libraries and museums of that great city," in order to gather that which "will abide in writing up what I have seen and thought and felt during my tour around the world." The reverend "inspector" is a little hazy in his English; we don't see how a library, or even a museum, is to help him to put into glowing rhetoric what he has "thought and felt;" but we hope that he is not equally obscure in the perception of his duty to relieve the people of the United States from his support while he is "writing up" his emotions. Inspecting the British Museum is not exactly in the line of duty of an inspector of consuls.

SOME philosopher observed, upon remarking the great appetite and the general inutility of the Newfoundland dog, that to make that animal profitable it was necessary to have a pond near by with children perpetually falling in.

A HYMN FOR THE SOUTH.

DEDICATED TO THE PEOPLE OF NEW ORLEANS.

TUNE—"BETHANY."

Nearer the victory—
Nearer it comes!
Hope spreads its shining wings
Over our homes.
Lift thou the tyrant's heel;
We make our last appeal,
Great God, to thee!

Crime it is to be right—
Crime to be true!
Oh, God, shame this dark night—
Pour thy light through!
Say again: "Let light be!"
Light is a part of thee.
Say: "Let light be."

Still our crushed hearts shall send Fragrance to thee.
The wings of Prayer, oh, God,
Are all that's free.
Bound are the old and young,
Bound is each hand and tongue.
Prayer flies to thee.

True men, oh, Lord, unite!
Give them one heart.
Inspire us all and each
To do his part!
Far scattered now and long,
Our foes make us their scorn.
Lord, make us one!

One refuge only left—
That up on high.
Speak, and we suffer still,
Or gladly die.
Oh, let the Branch and Dove
Announce the reign of Love—
Our victory.

From the Work.

TAYLOR'S CREEK, WHITE RIVER CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: I think we Arkansans can and do sympathize with our afflicted brethren of Louisiana, and though we are not of the patronizing Conferences, yet we learn through your excellent ADVOCATE of the spiritual prosperity of our common Zion in the regions beyond, and rejoice; and perhaps an item from this field of labor may be interesting to the brethren in the uttermost ends of the earth.

I am now closing up my fourth year in the White River Conference, and my second on this (the Taylor's Creek) circuit. It has been a year of great hardship and privation temporally, but spiritually it has been one of great prosperity. God forbid that we boast save in our infirmity; but the great Head of the church has wrought mightily in the building up of his kingdom through us. The membership has doubled itself during the two years. There have been one hundred and forty odd conversions and one hundred and twenty-six accessions during the present year. Class meetings, prayer meetings and the Sunday schools are all better attended than ever before. But financially we are in a deplorable condition—bankrupt. Owing to the almost entire failure in both the corn and cotton crop, our people are left without the staff of life—bread—or the means with which to purchase. Many must suffer.

Yours in Christ,

J. J. PRATHER.

PLEASANT HILL CIRCUIT, CAMDEN DISTRICT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: This is a new circuit, composed of five appointments, all of which are little towns near the Selma and Gulf railroad, with one exception, which is in the country, about fourteen miles from the same. It embraces a portion of Dallas, Lowndes and Wilcox counties. When I came to the circuit I found ninety-six names enrolled on the church-books.

I commenced a protracted meeting at Four Oaks on the fifth Sabbath in August, which lasted six days, and resulted in nine conversions and eight accessions to the church—one by letter—and a great revival among the membership of the church.

On the second Sabbath in September I commenced another meeting at Pleasant Hill, which resulted, after continuing ten days, in at least five conversions, three of whom joined our church and two the Baptist. The membership was revived, and we had a good meeting.

On the fourth Sabbath in September I commenced a meeting at Snow Hill, which lasted four days. No visible effect. At this place there are seventeen members of the Methodist church, and I think about seventy-five or eighty, or perhaps more, members of the Baptist church. Our congregation here is made up mostly of Baptists.

On Saturday before the first Sabbath in October I commenced another meeting at Farmersville, which was continued six days. I do not know how many were converted. Three joined the church, and the power of God was felt and seen during its progress. The church was greatly revived, and lasting impressions were made upon many minds, we hope. It was a good meeting.

The church on this circuit is in a better condition now than at any previous time during this year. There are now fifteen heads of families who hold family prayer, and several others who have promised to take it up. For three years past this country has suffered greatly because of the failures in crops. This year, however, a good corn crop is made, and a tolerably fair cotton crop. Financially the prospect is not as good as it ought to be. However, we thank God that it is as good as it is.

E. W. SOLOMON.

SNOW HILL, ALA., Oct. 19, 1874.

ANNEVILLE, HENRY CT., ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: Up to the present date I have held three protracted meetings on this circuit, with glorious results. At Liberty we had sixteen additions and several conversions, with the church greatly revived. The work was deep and genuine.

At Clopton we protracted from our third quarterly meeting, Rev. Dr. Ellison, our much-beloved and venerable presiding elder, remaining with us and doing good service until Tuesday morning. Bro. Phillips, of the Ozark High School, was also with us until Monday, and preached with power and in demonstration of the Spirit. We continued the meeting several days, and the result was sixteen additions and several conversions, the church strengthened and going forth in the discharge of its duty.

On Saturday, the twenty-sixth of September, we commenced a meeting at Lawreneeville, the morning service of that day being the funeral of our venerable Bro. Whitehurst, whose obituary we forward by this mail. At this place we had no help—pulpit help, we mean—and were somewhat discouraged at the outset; but it was here that the Lord shone forth in all his power. The Spirit of the Lord was with us all the time, and the result was that conversions took place at almost every service, whether prayer meeting or preaching. Wives prayed in faith for their unconverted husbands, and they were converted and joined the church. Fathers and mothers agonized for their children, and the Lord gave them (to them to go with them to heaven; and the shouts of new-born souls and rejoicing Christians on earth, mingled with the shouts and songs of angels and the redeemed in heaven, rent the air, as Jesus saw of the "travail of his soul and was satisfied." In all there were thirty conversions and twenty-seven additions to the church, three of those converted being members of the church previous to the meeting. One circumstance I must not fail to mention. On the second Sabbath after we had commenced the meeting, at the night service, we witnessed a sight which had never before been seen in that church. From the ranks of the Sabbath school eleven children, varying in age from ten to sixteen, united themselves to the church, and professed to find peace and pardon through faith in Christ. They were led by a little boy (Albert Bowen, grandson of our lamented Bro. Whitehurst,) a boy not more than ten years of age, but a Christian; and, as he gave himself away to Christ, no one doubted the genuineness of the child's faith, as he led that youthful band, and entreated them, like himself, to dedicate themselves to the service of that God who loved little children, and to love that Savior who took them in his arms and blessed them when on earth, and said: "Suffer the little ones to come unto me."

PACIFIC CONFERENCE.

The twenty-fourth session of the Pacific Annual Conference, which met at Stockton on the seventh and closed on the twelfth, says the Pacific Methodist, was full of unusual interest, and reasonably harmonious in its action. We have never known a Conference held under brighter auspices. A large number of visitors from a distance evinced an interest in the deliberations of the body which was encouraging. The fact that the visitors were not present for the purpose of influencing the appointments of their favorite preachers was established by the assertion of Bishop Pierce that he had met with less annoyance in that direction than usual, on which account he was grateful.

Almost every preacher of the Conference was present, and a large lay representation. The year closed without a death in the ranks of the itinerancy. Prosperity has attended the work of the past year in every direction. The permanence and effectiveness of Southern Methodism on this coast was never more clearly demonstrated. The statistical report shows the following satisfactory condition of affairs: There are now under appointment 53 itinerant preachers; 52 local preachers; 3,359 members. The property of the Conference foots up as follows: 39½ houses of worship, valued at $98,581,-40; 28 parsonages, valued at $29,150; other property, valued at $25,800; college, valued at $33,000. This exhibit is not entirely full, but the showing is sufficient to inspirit every friend of our cause. The spirituality of the church is a more difficult matter to determine. Personal piety and devotion to the cause of Christ have their tangible results, but they are not always to be exhibited by statistics. The reports of the preachers show that vital godliness is a characteristic of our congregations. Care for the religious condition of the young is increasing all over the land. The "Macedonian grace" is in the hearts of our people—they give more gladly and more liberally. Altogether there is a reason for thanksgiving.

The resolution of the General Conference, on the change of the General Rules in regard to the use of intoxicating liquors, was referred to the Conference by Bishop Pierce. The vote was taken without debate, with the following result: For the change, clerical, 15; lay, 3. Against, clerical, 22; lay, 6. Majority against change, 10.

Alexandria District, Louisiana Conference.

MR. EDITOR: The estimated increase of membership for this Conference year, on the Alexandria district, is six hundred.

Our camp meetings have just closed—one on Spring Creek circuit, Rev. Fred. White, preacher in charge; the other on Big Creek, Rapides circuit, Grant parish, Rev. John F. Wynn, preacher in charge. The result of these two meetings is forty-seven members and fifty conversions. The gospel was preached to two thousand people for seven days and seven nights. The church was revived, and Methodism has become a fixed fact on Spring Creek and Big Creek, in Rapides and Grant parishes. The significance of this statement will be better understood when it is known that these two creeks never dry up, but yield a plentiful supply of water for the immersion of every woman, man and child in this district; and to carry on two camp meetings successfully in these regions of pools, graves and Grant, argues something in the way of progress. We sometimes have to resort to muscular Christianity, when in the absence of all civil law these people will not be constrained by the love of Christ.

Worthy of mention is the fact that nearly all of the conversions were young men, and we are not hoping without reason that the Lord will call some of them to the great work of winning souls to Christ.

The most religious part of our services at these camp meetings was the lifting of the collection, wherein was given opportunity to the new converts of setting to their seal that God is rich in mercy for his great love wherewith he loved them.

At the close of the meeting came that most solemn service—the baptism of the new converts before their admission into the church of Christ. The Holy Spirit honored the occasion by coming in person to preside over this solemn dedication. The water was poured upon them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Then the Spirit himself descended upon the whole congregation, and with one accord they all praised God as they entered into the kingdom, born of water and of the Spirit. This wondrous scene was enacted at both camps, and in our feasts of tabernacles the Lord of hosts was with us, owning and accepting. This mode must be God's way, for he does honor it by sending the Holy Spirit.

We are getting ready for Conference, and look forward to its session as a time of revival and refreshing from the presence of the Lord; and to that end we are repenting and being converted. The preacher in charge of the Alexandria station reports the church there ready for the Conference. He has already secured a magnificent room for the Conference, and many cheerful homes for the preachers. He does not expect more than some five or six of the newly-married preachers to bring their wives with them; and he does expect every preacher bringing his wife to give him notice as soon as he reads this letter, in order that suitable homes may be ready for them.

A TENTER.

DO NOT conclude the Lord is not with you because things go very contrary, and he does not appear for you; he was in the ship, notwithstanding the storm.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1874.

AUTUMN.

BY F. W. FABER, D. D.

Autumn once more begins to teach;
Here leaves their annual sermon preach;
And with the southward-slipping sun
Another stage of life is done.
The day is of a paler hue,
The night is of a darker blue—
Just as it was a year ago;
For time runs fast, but grace is slow!

Life glides away in many a bend,
In chapters which begin and end;
Each has its trial, each its grace,
Each in life's whole its proper place.
Life has its joinings and its breaks,
But each transition swiftly takes Us nearer to, or farther from,
The threshold of our heavenly home.

Years pass away; new crosses come;
Past sorrow is a sort of home.
An exile's home, and only lent
For needful rest in banishment.
It narrows life, and walls it in,
And shuts the door on many a sin;
'Tis almost like a calm fireside,
Where humbled hearts are fain to hide.

Thou comest, autumn, to unlade
Thy wealthy freight of summer shade,
Still sorrowful as in past years,
Still streaked with shadows hinting fears,
Ripening and hardening all thy growth
Of solid wood, yet nothing loth
To waste upon the frolic breeze
Thy leaves, like flights of golden bees.

Have I laid by from summer hours
Ripe fruits, as well as leaves and flowers?
Hath my past year a growth to harden,
As well as fewer sins to pardon?
Is God in all things more and more
A king within me than before?
I know not; yet one change hath come—
The world feels less and less at home.

My soul appears, as I get old,
More prompt in act, in prayer less cold;
Crosses, from use, more lightly press;
Mirth is more purely weariness;
With less to quarrel with in life,
I grow less patient with its strife;
I wish more simply, Lord, to be,
Ailing or well, always with thee!

Was Adam Created Holy?

MR. EDITOR: I see that Bro. S. P. Richardson answers this question in the negative in one or two articles recently published in the ADVOCATE. In doing this he is following in the footsteps of Dr. Bledsoe, who advances the same idea in his Theodicy, and frequently in his Quarterly Review, and especially in the first article in the January number for this year. I do not say that he has simply adopted this view from Dr. Bledsoe, but it is precisely the same theory, and I think he is a pretty close reader of the doctor. The idea advanced by both of them is that Adam, at his creation, was free from sin, was innocent, pure, upright; but not holy in the sense of being actually inclined to virtue. If I understand them, they would have us believe that Adam was neither good nor bad—that he was placed, as it were, in equipoise between good and evil; inclined to neither, but endowed with the power to choose either, thus determining his moral state, in its incipiency, as well as his matured moral character. They seem to think that the only holiness Adam had or could have, before the fall, was that which consists of right habits of the will and right practice, or actual obedience to the law of God; and as this kind of holiness cannot be conferred by any extrinsic power, and requires time and opportunity for the exercise of right volitions, and the gradual development of a virtuous character, therefore Adam could not, at his creation, be "holy in the high, true or moral sense of the term." They ignore the inward principle of holiness, wrought in the heart by the Holy Ghost, without which there can be no right volitions and no outward holiness. They do this, at least, in reference to Adam before his fall. Dr. Bledsoe, in speaking of the condition of man under the provisions of the atonement, does seem to recognize this inward principle, and the fact that it may be imparted to us by the Spirit. His language on this point, in the January number of the Quarterly Review for this year, page 16, is as follows: "Here, then, is another perfection and glory by which the second creation is distinguished from the first; it is endowed with true holiness, or moral likeness to God. The first man was made in the image of God; the new man is created in his likeness. The first consisted of natural endowments only; the last consists of moral attributes. By these endowments man possessed the capacity to become holy; in these attributes man possesses holiness itself." It is true that in order to man's obtaining this holiness now he must consent to have it, must desire it, and seek for it with all the heart. He must, in a word, perform certain conditions. But in admitting that, upon the voluntary performance of these conditions by man, this inward principle of holiness may now be conferred by God upon man, it seems to me that Dr. Bledsoe grants what he has all along before denied, namely: that holiness may be conferred by an extrinsic power, and that it consists of something besides a virtuous habit of the will and external obedience to the law. If God can confer holiness upon man now, he could do so when he first created man. The only difference is: man must now will to be holy before he can become holy; while a holy nature was imparted to Adam, at his creation, before he had time to exercise his will. But man cannot now will to be holy or to do right without the gracious assistance of the Holy Spirit, or of what we call "preventing grace;" so that in either case—Adam's or ours—holiness is the gift of God.

But let us see what others say of this matter. The brethren I have mentioned are not the first who have advanced the idea that Adam was not truly holy at his creation. Mr. Watson, in his Institutes, page 368, says that Dr. Taylor, of Norwich, advocated the same theory. In reply he says: "The fallacy is easily detected. It lies in confounding 'habits of holiness' with the principle of holiness. * * * Now in Adam that rectitude of principle, from which a right choice and right acts flowed, was either created with him or formed by his own volitions. If the latter be affirmed, then he must have willed right before he had a principle of rectitude, which is absurd; if the former, then his creation in a state of moral rectitude, with an aptitude and disposition to good, is established."

Hear Mr. Wesley on the same point, as quoted by Mr. Watson: "What is holiness? Is it not essentially love? * * * Love is holiness wherever it exists. And God could create either men or angels, endued from the very first moment of their existence with whatsoever degree of love he pleased. You think, on the contrary, 'It is demonstration—that we cannot be righteous or holy, we cannot observe what is right, without our own free and explicit choice.' I suppose you mean practice what is right. But a man may be righteous before he does what is right; holy in heart before he is holy in life. Righteousness" is not simply "the right use and application of our powers. It is the right state of our powers. It is the right disposition of our soul, the right temper of our mind. Take this with you, and you will no more dream that 'God could not create man in righteousness and true holiness.'"

President Edwards, also quoted by Watson, says: "The antecedent disposition, temper or affection of mind from whence a good choice proceede is virtuous. Actions derive their goodness from the principles whence they proceed; so that the act of choosing what is good is no further virtuous than it proceeds from a good principle or virtuous disposition of mind. Therefore a virtuous temper of mind may be before a good act of choice, as a tree may be before the fruit, and the fountain before the stream which proceeds from it."

This is sufficient authority upon this point.

Bro. Richardson presents the following argument to prove his position: "If Adam had been created holy he would have remained so, from the fact that he could not uncreate himself;" as if holiness were an essential element of human nature. There is no necessity for this supposition. The holiness of Adam was no more an essential element of his nature than the holiness we possess is an essential, inseparable part of our nature. It was in his case, as in ours, an endowment, superadded to these elements which were essential to his nature, and which constituted him man. It was that state of his moral faculties which gave him a bias toward virtue. But I have here also the authority of Mr. Watson: "It is in vain to say that this 'image' must be something essential to human nature, something only which cannot be lost." He then goes on to say that it comprehends some things essential to human nature, but claims that it also comprises what is not essential—something that may be lost and regained.

But "to the law and the testimony." Several passages of Scripture are understood by the learned divines whom I have already quoted so extensively as teaching most clearly that Adam was made holy at his creation. Watson so understands the passages in Genesis, first chapter: "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness;" and "So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him." And in the course of his exposition of these texts, and as a part of his exposition, he quotes Ecclesiastes vii, 29: "Lo, this only have I found: that God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions." On this passage he quotes from President Edwards, who tells us that the word here translated "upright" occurs in Scripture about one hundred and ten times, and in about one hundred of these it signifies virtue, or moral rectitude; and, for the most part, it means "true virtue." He claims that it has this meaning "in at least eighty places," and that, "beyond all controversy," Solomon uses it in this place to signify "a character of real virtue or integrity." On the passages, Colossians iii, 10, "And have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him;" and Ephesians iv, 24: "Put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness," he remarks: "In these passages the apostle represents the change produced in true Christians by the gospel as a 'renewal' of the image of God in man—as a new or second creation in that image; and he explicitly declares that that image consists in 'knowledge,' in 'righteousness' and in 'true holiness.'" And in reference to the terms "righteousness and true holiness," he says they are "terms which express not merely freedom from sin, but positive and active virtues." Dr. Watts is then quoted as entertaining the same views. If, now, I am in error, I am certainly in good company.

Bro. Richardson, of course, knows what Watson, Wesley and others have written on this subject; but many who read his articles in the ADVOCATE do not know, and I have made the above quotations for their sakes. I am a great admirer of Dr. Bledsoe; but some of his views, I think, should be taken with allowance.

W. A. MONTGOMERY.

J. W. on Temperance.

MR. EDITOR: I was rather pleased at first that J. W. had taken up his pen on this subject, believing that he would present it in its true light. But I am disappointed. He has dealt unfairly with the subject, as I believe. I am in favor of temperance, but opposed to claiming authority for any peculiar view of it where none can be found. For this reason I attempt this criticism.

I do not propose to enter into an investigation of the soundness or unsoundness of J. W.'s scientific speculations. His theory is too hair-splitting to be of any practical importance. It is enough to say that "doctors differ" here. He has given only one side. His poison, too, is greatly increased under the magnifying power of those scientific terms. Persons who have drank ardent spirits habitually to old age cannot see it in that light. It has saved many lives, and we ought to respect it for this reason. And it might be said that many other things are poisonous, whose use cannot be dispensed with; in fact everything, used intemperately, is poisonous. And this reminds me of J. W.'s definition of temperance. It is not moderation, he says. It is evident he was in a state of supreme subjectivity when he devised this. The fact is, he had his theory, and he had to have something to base it on. But he ought to have consulted Paul and Webster before he went to press.

But J. W.'s Scripture proofs are what I am particularly concerned about. He finds a very positive argument against the use of ardent spirits in the text: "Look not upon the wine when it is red," etc. But Solomon just as positively commends it elsewhere, as: "Give wine to those that be of heavy hearts." J. W. explains that the latter is unfermented. But his "sweet wine" theory will not do, for it is at variance with the general testimony of Scripture. Admit, then, that some Greek lexicographers say that glenkes means sweet juice, must; if the Scriptures nowhere corroborate this definition, we are not to accept the evidence as conclusive. Not a single text of Scripture can be produced to show that any kind of wine was in use that was not intoxicating. We have such expressions as these in the Scriptures: "Drunken with their blood, as with new wine;" "Wine and new wine take away the heart;" "New wine shall make the maids cheerful;" "These men are full (drunken) of new wine." And, what makes it all the more conclusive, the lexicons themselves refer to the last quotation above (Acts ii, 13) as an example of glenkos, by which they testify against themselves; for it is evident that here is positive testimony that new wine may intoxicate. J. W.'s explanation to the contrary notwithstanding. But let us examine that explanation. It is truly original. He says that the mocking mob were speaking ironically when they charged Peter's associates with being drunken. How could this be? There was no occasion for irony here, as in the case of his water-drinking Freuchmau, for the reason that the mob were not "mocking" their denial of the use of any other than unintoxicating liquor, but their pretensions to supernatural influences. Hence Peter treats the accusation with all seriousness, saying: "Ye men of Judea, and all ye that dwell at Jerusalem, be this known unto you, * * * for these are not drunken, as ye suppose, seeing it is but the third hour of the day." Can any one with common sense fail to see that this is the only meaning of this passage? J. W. seems to have suspected the faultiness of his interpretation, and therefore adds: "This is the more evident from the fact that the proper translation of the Greek word glenkos, used by the mockers in this case, is not 'new wine,' but 'sweet wine.'" But this assertion is without authority, and contradicts what he had just said above.

J. W. is horrified at the idea of Jesus making intoxicating wine at the wedding in Cana. To carry his point here, he resorts to a trick. He says that if the wine was intoxicating, Jesus did a thing some barroom keepers would not do—offer it to the guests when they were already "well drunk." Were they already drunk? No; they had not touched a drop. Dr. Summers says: "He (the governor of the feast) expresses what is customary. When men have some wine choicer than other, they set it before their guests while their taste is most discriminating, before it is dulled by drinking. The language is not necessarily applicable to this feast." He says "well drunk" does not mean "gotten drunk," but "drunk largely." "But," says he, "If the word were used in the sense of intoxication, it does not imply that the guests were in this state: as the architriklinos only refers to what usually obtained in such cases." To see the correctness of this criticism, consult the context, where it will be seen that Mary did not ask Jesus to make more wine, but only said: "They have no wine." And the reason may have been, as Dr. Deems suggests, that they were poor people.

J. W. has an ingenious and no doubt original explanation of the new wine in old bottles. But it will not do. He says the "yeasty" matter in the old bottles would cause the new wine to ferment! That idea was evidently very foreign to the Savior's mind; for it was not what was in the bottles—they could be washed for that matter—but the bottles themselves, that would not do. On this fact depends the appositeness of the illustration. And this is the more reasonable when we reflect that the unfermented wine was not bottled. Wine was bottled after fermentation for preservation; and then the lees or dregs would not be objectionable, for they served to give it body (Isaiah xxv, 6;) but the old bottles were worthless because they were rotted out.

No less gratuitous is his assumption of the non-use of fermented wine in religious offerings. If he will show one instance of such prohibition, I will give up the point. But the proof is all on the other side, as witnessed by the facts that the same term is employed here as elsewhere, and the priests, during service, were prohibited from drinking it, and the Nazarite while under vow—all showing its intoxicating quality. If it was not used in the Lord's Supper, how did some of the Corinthians get drunk with it?—First Corinthians xi, 21. In Lange's Commentary on this place I find the following: "Is not this a valid argument in proof of the fact that the wine used at the Lord's Supper, in the primitive church, was such as could intoxicate?"

Now, Mr. Editor, I believe I have answered all of J. W.'s arguments that deserve any notice. If you had space, I would add some further views of my own. With your permission, I may do this in a future number of the ADVOCATE. I say this because I would not be regarded as an advocate of intemperance. While I do not think it right to pervert Scripture to maintain even a good cause, I yet believe that there is a principle of temperance, and even of total abstinence, which the Scriptures recognize, and which we may safely advocate upon a scriptural basis.

Yours truly, M.

IN ALL THE LAND.

BY J. W. M.

In all this land there is no spot,
These weary feet have trod,
That keen-eyed memory treasures not
Some sorrow from my God.

But who dare say that in the end,
Which hastens swift apace,
Each tear and blow shall not commend
Some wonder of his grace.

The sky of earth is not so blue,
Nor birds nor sun so sweet,
As in the halcyon days of youth,
Where hope and pleasure meet.

But O! the enchanting hills that shine,
In bright and endless day,
Grow brighter, 'mid these tears of mine,
As on I press my way.

The New Rule.—A Suggestion.

MR. EDITOR: It appears from all our church papers that the great battle on temperance goes bravely on. Many noble knights of the order of Pen, Ink and Paper feel themselves called to the front of newspaper controversy, and are in the thickest and hottest of the fight. They ask no quarter and give none. Their blows fall thick and fast on every side. Some have been pretty badly handled, and borne off the field. Some have run away, doubtless expecting to fight another day (the Conference occasion, for instance.) Some persist in fighting on both sides. Some use pop-guns, while others use heavy field-pieces, etc. There is advancing and retreating amid dust and smoke, and the shock and roar of blazing arms are heard afar.

As yet we cannot tell which party has the worse or better of the fight—whether the old-lawites or the new-lawites are pressing the battle to the gates, and promise to possess themselves of the coveted prize. The final charge will be made on the Annual Conference floor ere long. And then the result will be telegraphed to the four corners of Christendom. But before this last grand, decisive charge is made, the whole army should be brought into the field of action. Every division, regiment, company, and, if possible, every member should be there to discharge duty.

But, to be plain, this very grave matter of a change of church law on the subject of temperance should be decided by a vote of the church in her Church Conferences, and not by the preachers alone. They ought to refuse to bear this weighty responsibility, unaided by the majority of the church whom they represent. What I mean is simply this: this question (whether the old law on the subject of temperance shall remain as it is, or whether the substitute adopted by the last General Conference shall take its place) should be brought before each church, and by their vote they should instruct their preacher and lay delegates how to vote in the Annual Conference on that matter. If there should be a three-fourths vote for the change in the church, or on the whole circuit, of those voting, then the preacher and lay delegates should vote for it; if less, then they should cast their votes against the change.

This is my unworthy opinion, which may not be worth the dust of the balance. I was conversing, a few days ago, with one of our oldest and most influential preachers of this (Louisiana) Conference, and he expressed himself on this point, and said he thought it was the duty of every preacher to hear the church, and vote accordingly, on this matter.

Admission to the Communion.

MR. EDITOR: Your correspondent, Dr. Taylor, of Alabama, proposes a serious question as to whether an irreligious person should be admitted to the communion; or rather as to whether the Methodist Church countenanced it. It seems, too, that he has heard it announced from the pulpit as being one of our usages. Such an announcement has no foundation either in the word of God or in the standards of Methodism, no matter what the usage of the church may be in localities, nor how the standards may have been perverted.

We refer our venerable brother to chapter 4, part 4, of Watson's Institutes, which has always been regarded as the standard of doctrines among us. Our special reference is to the first three of the six general observations which conclude the chapter, as well as the book:

"The very nature of the ordinance excludes unbelievers."

"When there is no evidence of true repentance for sin, they are disqualified," etc.

And again: "It is a part of Christian discipline in every religious society to prevent (mark the expression) such persons from communicating with the church," etc.

These were Mr. Wesley's views also, and during his stay in Georgia he suffered a sore persecution on account of his fidelity to the church upon this subject. May God keep the church pure from having fellowship with unbelievers.

MYTHS EXPLODED.—And now somebody digs up an old copy of the Times newspaper of November 7, 1805, containing the fresh accounts of the battle of Trafalgar, and in connection with it states that the order actually given by Nelson, as they were going into action, was to run up the signal: "Nelson expects every man to do his duty;" but that the signal officer, pretending not to have heard clearly, asks: "Shall I run up: England expects every man to do his duty?" when Nelson, so prompted, assented tacitly to the alteration. It is added that the effect was not brilliant, at least in one of the ships, where the old salts grumbled out: "Of course we shall do our duty;" while Collingwood rather pettishly said: "I wish Nelson would leave off making signals." So one by one the myths depart which used to warm and cheer our heart.

Obituaries.

LITTLE JOHNNIE, eldest son of Prof. John Massey, died of diphtheria, October 10, 1874, aged seven years and twenty-five days.

Bro. Massey, having resigned the presidency of Centenary Male Institute, and accepted that of the new district school in Mobile, left his family in Summerfield for a few weeks, but on the morning his school opened he was summoned back to his family, only to see dear little Johnnie enter the shadowy vale that separates the one family of God in earth and heaven.

He was a child of rare intellect, with a bright face and an affectionate disposition. He loved the Sabbath school, and was as generous as he was intelligent. Last spring, when I organized the Sabbath School Missionary Society, though the small children were expected to contribute only a nickel monthly, Johnnie's first contribution was his own silver half dollar.

DIED, in Bastrop, Morehouse parish, Louisiana, October 3, 1874, after a long and painful illness, JOHN B. BRISCOE, aged forty-one years.

Bro. Briscoe was a native of Kentucky, but came to this parish more than twenty years ago. I think his early religious training was received from the Campbellites. When he came to this State he connected himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and has ever been a useful member. His was a very kind heart. His was a very tender hand. His was a most loving nature. He was a very open purse. His life was made up of "little deeds of kindness." His reward will surely be a grand one, for the Master says: "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto me!" The last connected sentence I heard him utter was this: "You don't know how happy I am! Jesus is precious, oh, so precious to my soul, and I am so weak." After this testimony, we sorrow not as those who have no hope.

HIS FRIEND.

ADAM BEMROW, Sr., was born in South Carolina, March 15, 1800, and died at Mount Ida, Crenshaw county, Alabama, September 16, 1874, aged seventy-four years, six months and one day. He was married to Miss M. C. K. Rogers, in South Carolina, January 9, 1825, and moved to Alabama in 1831. He settled in Montgomery county, and he joined the Baptist Church in November, 1845, after which he moved to Florida, and remained there some five years without any church privileges. He then moved back to Alabama, and settled at Mount Ida, Crenshaw county. Some three years since he joined the Methodist Church South, and lived a consistent Christian until death. His last illness was erysipelas. He was confined some three months. He bore his affliction with much patience and Christian fortitude. The writer of this, when sitting by his bedside, often heard him express a desire to depart and be with Christ, his living head, saying: "Brother, I am not afraid to die and go home." He died without a struggle. He leaves the partner of his life and kind relatives to mourn his loss, but not as those who have no hope. Our loss is his gain. In Jesus he quietly sleeps till the resurrection morn, when both great and small must come forth to meet the Lord in the air. So shall we ever be with the Lord.

TO MATTIE IN HEAVEN.

Note.—When little MATTIE SMITH found there was no Sunday school at the White Sulphur Springs, she went and requested an accomplished young lady to teach her Sabbath lessons, with the other children. Her request was granted.

Sweet child! Thy earthly pilgrimage is o'er;
Thy spirit's thirst for truth divine can now
At truth's exhaustless crystal fount be satisfied.
The blessed Savior knew the long age of thy soul.
And gently bore his little lamb from the
Fold, where love had ever guarded thee from ill.
He would lead thee in elysian fields, close
By the river of life; there Willie had bathed
His wearied soul ere thou wast called away.
In thy blissful home there is no need of sun,
Neither of Luna's soft beams, for the Lamb
Is the light thereof. In thy Brandon home
Thy kind father had a gift for thee prepared,
To delight thee on thy return to us.
Thy little hand he hoped would first awake
To song that organ sweet. Alas! its chords
Are silent still; thy voice we'll hear no more.
But far more wondrously beautiful
And sweet were thy Redeemer's gifts to thee—
A harp of gold, a crown of immortality.
Methinks I hear thee sing, even now, the Song, the sweet song, which the seraphim sing.
At twilight's mystic hour, ere the lamps burn,
Or ere the stars their Maker's praises sing,
Mattie and darling Willie softly come,
Bearing blessings to their parents from above.
These nightly vigils they'll be keeping till
The bridegroom's voice is heard; then they will
So softly, sweetly, gladly guide them through
The gates of pearl, to go out no more forever.
* * * Thy form all robed in spotless white, thy Brow encircled with flowers of purest mold—
Fit emblems of thy innocence—they laid to rest.
Rest thee until the archangel's voice awakes
The sleeping dead. And should we meet
Around the throne of God, we'll sing the song,
The coronation song, and weep no more:

"Crown him forever, crown him King of kings;
Crown him forever, crown him Lord of lords;
Crown him, the glorious Conqueror of hell;
Crown him, the everlasting Prince of peace;
Crown him, Jehovah, Jesus, Lamb of God;
Hallelujah! Hallelujah! Amen."

BRANDON, October 12, 1874.

BRO. J. S. WOODWARD was born in Beaufort county, North Carolina, September 22, 1802, and died August 25, 1874.

In 1830 he moved to Mississippi, and was then a member of the Presbyterian Church. He was married, in 1833, in Franklin county, to Miss Mary Ann Pritchard. He afterward came to Tensas parish, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church on probation, but was never received into full connection. He made application in July last for membership, and was received on a profession of faith at his residence, not being able to go to church. His past life proves him to have been worldly, not seeming to think much about the future; but the goodness of God, as seen in his affliction with cancer, led him to repentance and salvation. He said often that he was willing to die—only regretted leaving his family. He suffered very much, and was confined to his bed five months and sixteen days. During that time he was unconscious, but occasionally he seemed to be rational for a short while. His family think that consciousness was restored at or just before his death. He was unable, as he had been for days before, to utter a word. He left no testimony at death as to his peace of mind. But that smile! Who knows but that it was caused by a sight of the angelic host coming to bear him home forever. The family have our prayers and sympathy.

JAMES J. BILLINGSLEY.

WATERPROOF, La., October 7, 1874.

ANDREW ARMSTRONG was born in Duplin county, North Carolina, October 14, 1787. He moved with his mother to Georgia, and was married to Miss Sarah Stanford, January 10, 1810. Then he moved to Clarke county, Mississippi, where he remained until the death of his wife.

He professed religion under the ministry of Z. Dewling, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church at Simpson's camp ground, in Carnack county, Alabama, in 1834, and was baptized by the Rev. Lewis Pipkin. After the death of my grandmother, his children all being married, he broke up housekeeping, and spent his time in visiting his children and grandchildren.

Grand father was one of the excellent of the earth, a man of deep piety and unbending integrity. As husband and parent he was kind and loving. For years before he died he suffered with a chronic complaint. Sometimes his pain seemed too great to bear; but he never murmured. He was perfectly resigned to the will of the Lord at all times. He visited us about two weeks before his death, and when asked when he would return, his reply was: "The Lord only knows; but if we meet no more in this world, meet me in heaven." He was on his way to my aunt's—his only daughter—in Choctaw, Alabama, and was taken with a congestive chill at his grandson's, in Choctaw county, Alabama, and died on the twenty-fifth of September, 1874. In the bright abode he is now with Jesus. He was too blind to read the word of God, and it was my mother's pleasant task to read to him, and when through he would sing his song of praise:

"In heaven above, where all is love."

AT THE session of the fourth Quarterly Conference of Rayville circuit, Louisiana Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church South, held in the town of Rayville, Louisiana, on the tenth day of October, 1874, the preacher in charge reported the death of one of our worthy stewards—our beloved brother, ROBERT B. BAIRD.

On motion a committee was appointed to draw up a preamble and resolutions expressive of our great loss in the sad death of our esteemed brother. The committee reported the following preamble and resolutions, which were unanimously adopted by the Conference:

Whereas, It has pleased almighty God, in his wisdom, to take from our midst and from this Quarterly Conference our beloved brother and steward, Robert B. Baird, it becomes us as members of this Conference, wishing to express our great sorrow, to render this last tribute to his memory; therefore, be it

Resolved, That while we bow in meek submission to his will, yet we deplore the fact that death has visited our fold, and removed from our midst one of our best members.

Resolved, That although we feel confident that our beloved brother is now in that better land, where no sorrow is known and death comes not, and all is love, still we cannot help mourning his loss, and giving expression of the deepest sympathy to his bereaved family.

Resolved, That we feel the great loss that we, as a church, and the community have sustained in the death of Bro. Baird.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be given to his afflicted family, and that a copy be sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication, and also to the Richland Beacon and Delhi Chronicle, and that they be spread upon the minutes of this Conference.

DIED, near Sharon, Madison county, Mississippi, August 27, A. D. 1874, CHARLIE, son of the late T. L. and J. A. Hart.

Thus has passed away another sunbeam from the hearthstone, another loved one from the community. Charlie was one of those unassuming little boys who command the esteem of every one, and who weave golden threads in the home circle that cannot be broken, even by the cruel hand of death. He committed his ways early unto the Lord; for, although scarcely twelve years of age when called upon to yield up his young life, he had been a member of the church several years, and a constant attendant at the Sabbath school. Possessing a buoyant disposition, he was indeed a light in the household; and greatly did he endear himself, especially to his widowed mother, by his many thoughtful and kind attentions. His many little deeds of love, performed in his unobserved, child-like way, are treasured up in that mother's heart, the thought of which will gladden many an hour of sorrow, and afford a sweet consolation that can be appreciated only by the heart of a bereaved mother.

Charlie's illness was brief. On Tuesday night he was taken ill, and on Thursday morning he closed his eyes forever on earth, to awaken in the spirit-land. He met his death with that calmness and self-possession that is experienced only by those who quietly fall asleep in Jesus. When told that he must die, he summoned his brothers and sisters around him, and told them he was going to live with their dear father in the glory-land, and entreated them to meet him there. Life's current was flowing fast and soon. In peace and quiet little Charlie's spirit took its everlasting flight to the bosom of his God.

May the widow's heart be consoled; and when her days on earth are ended may she find rest with the loved ones of her household, who now stand at the portals of glory and beckon her away from earth.

THE THREE WATCHWORDS.

To watch, to wait, to work!
Ah, me! the fiery sun,
The level, treeless, barren, dew-drained fields—
I would the work was done!

To watch, to work, to wait!
Ah, me! the tedious roar
Of wreck strown oceans roofed with somber clouds—
I would the watch was o'er!

To wait, to work, to watch!
Ah, me! thou absent Friend,
Comest thou quickly? So thou saidst. I would
The waiting had an end!

My soul, be still and strong!
Sight follows after faith;
In all advancement of the true and good,
He cometh as he saith.

My soul, be still and strong!
Here on thy Lord's estate
No place is useless, no experience vain.
Work on, watch on, and wait.

Moody and His Work in Ireland.

It may be said of Belfast, as truly as of Jerusalem in apostolic times: "The whole city was moved." Since Mr. Moody has commenced his work, people of all grades of society and of all denominations have been stirred up as never before, and the interest continues unabated. The papers of the city, notably the Witness, record the marked features of Mr. Moody's work, the great blessings attending which are seen on every hand. And, right here, a most gratifying feature of the movement is the happy bringing together of all evangelical denominations to which it has given rise. In all the meetings Presbyterians, Episcopalians and Methodists are mixed and mingled without distinction—on one occasion the Rev. Mr. Dickson, incumbent of the Mariners' Episcopal church, being one of the busiest among the inquirers, and on another the Rev. I. H. Deacon, incumbent of Trinity Episcopal church, occupying the pulpit of Eglinton Street Presbyterian church.

ONE OF THE MOST USEFUL ADDRESSES

given by Mr. Moody since his coming was that delivered at the two-o'clock meeting on Wednesday, on "Bible Reading." It was addressed specially to young converts, but older Christians could derive many a useful hint from it. He was very earnest in urging his hearers to make a constant practice of studying the Bible. For this purpose he recommended them to provide themselves with three books—a Bible, "not too good to be marked," Cruden's Concordance, and a Scripture text-book. Let them not merely read the Bible "to ease conscience," but study it "to get food," and mark in it anything they met worth noting. A good plan was to take up a book and spend say six months upon it. He recommended "topical" Bible reading—i. e., reading up a subject in it. Let them take the subject of love, for example, and find out all the Scriptures bearing on that, and study them "till they were full of love." Let them also meet with other Christians for this purpose and compare notes. They would wonder what good they would get from this practice. Mr. Moody then gave examples of this topical study, some of which were very happy. There were, for instance, viz.: 1. "Blessed is he that readeth and they that hear the words of this prophecy." 2. "Blessed is he that keepeth the sayings of the prophecy of this book." 3. "Blessed are they that do his commandments." 4. "Blessed is he that watcheth." 5. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." 6. "Blessed is he that hath part in the first resurrection." 7. "Blessed are they who are called to the marriage supper of the Lamb." Then there were the seven "walks" in Ephesians, the four "little things" of Proverbs, and so on. The whole lecture was replete with instruction, and was listened to with the most undivided attention. As to the results, up till the present, of the work of the past three weeks, not only has there been, as is evident to all, a wonderful stirring of the whole town, but many conversions have taken place. We can only mention a few illustrative incidents.

"THE SEVEN BLESSINGS OF REVELATION,"

Last Saturday night four young men came to the house of one of the Presbyterian ministers of the town to ask about "the way to Zion." They had all been deeply impressed, and were in real earnest about themselves. All four, so far as man can judge, are

"LOOKING UNTO JESUS."

During that week two other young men of the same congregation were savingly impressed, and on last Sunday morning a young girl belonging to the same church, and whose heart the Lord had touched, came into the vestry after service to ask her minister to give her some "work to do for Christ." In the Sunday school of another of the town churches three young men appeared last Sunday morning, asking to be received as teachers, saying that they felt called on now to do something for their Master. In a third Sunday school, when the minister entered he found a youth talking very earnestly with one of the classes. Inquiring the meaning of this, he was told that this lad, having had his heart changed during the preceding week, had asked permission from his teacher to speak a few words to his fellow-scholars, urging them also to come to Christ. In the same school a female teacher came to the superintendent and resigned her class, saying that such a wonderful change had come upon them that she felt herself incompetent to instruct them. Brought thus to a sense of her own wrong state, she was made anxious about herself, and by and by came back to teach again, a changed woman.

THREE SONS OF CLERGYMEN are among those reported as converted. Another case is that of a young lady who found benefit from one of the two-o'clock meetings. Next day she brought her two sisters with her, desiring that they too might share the blessing. They remained for the inquiry meeting, and both "went on their way rejoicing" in a manner which the minister who had been conversing with them says he can never forget, the three sisters now feeling themselves "one in Christ." Another remarkable case is that of an who heard Mr. Moody, we believe, at one of the open-air meetings, and have left the Church of Rome. These are some of the cases which have come under our own notice. There are many such.

ENTIRE ROMAN CATHOLIC FAMILY,

The meetings are held in the various churches of the city, which are freely tendered for the purpose. Especially was the one held in Rosemary Street church of absorbing interest. Before eight o'clock every seat was occupied, those "who wanted to be Christians" having been invited. This was one of the most deeply interesting meetings which has yet been held. After singing and prayer by the Rev. W. Wylie, Mr. Sankey sang two solos, "Come Home" and "Almost Persuaded." Mr. Moody then preached from "What must I do to be saved?" to a very solemn and attentive audience. After a few minutes spent in silent prayer, the Rev. T. Y. Killen led in prayer; another hymn was sung, and then Mr. Moody prayed. The congregation was then dismissed, and those who wanted to become Christians and desired further instruction were asked to come into the body of the church, which was

SPEEDILY FILLED.

Many manifested the deepest anxiety. Some were in great distress. A number of young men were drafted off into two of the adjoining rooms, and addressed by two ministers. The rest were talked to in the church, and when, at ten o'clock, the meeting was closed, many still lingered about those who had been speaking to them, seeking to have their difficulties removed. There must have been several hundreds of these anxious inquirers. The overflow meeting filled Donegall Square church, and was addressed by the Revs. G. Shaw, C. Johnston and others. A large number remained for the inquiry meeting.

All this is really but the beginning. What will be the result of this work to Ireland, and not to Ireland alone, the blessed Master alone knows.

Beaten Men and Women.

So long as there is inequality in men's fortunes, so long as there are prizes and blanks according to men's judgment held up before the combatants in the great arena of life, there must be beaten men and women, even as conquest implies defeat. God has ordained inequality in men's fortunes, and it is a law of human nature—a wholesome and beneficial law within due limits—that men and women should press for precedence in reaching the goal which they desire to attain. Therefore we shall always have beaten men and women, even as we shall always have the poor with us.

The next question is: How far is it a misfortune to be beaten? Of course that depends altogether on the nature of the thing contended for. Human nature is short-sighted and perverse. In infancy it will court the means for its own destruction; the child stretching forth its hand and clamoring to get at the live coal or the sharp knife, and the man or the woman compassing heaven and earth for the fatal post, or the false companion, more destructive than the coal or more cruel than the knife.

A merciful Providence, like the wise friend, in denying baneful gratifications, is often far kinder to man than he is to himself. Even when the object desired appears lawful and laudable, and cannot upon any reflection be considered in the light of dallying with temptation, still so many consequences remain hidden from our closest scrutiny that not only are we not warranted in indulging in excessive regret for a mere temporal loss, but if we live long enough our regret may be changed to rejoicing, and we may come to think it one of the most gracious circumstances in our history that we were balked of that prospect which in its dawn we regarded as so fair.

But no doubt there are aims which to reach would be well-nigh certain gain, and on which we correctly judge that much of our future spiritual as well as temporal welfare depends. Yet there may be unaccountable, disheartening, crushing failure in these aims. We have done well, we are fully persuaded, to try for this good thing; we have meant well; we have even run well so far as our strength and knowledge permitted in this race. We are certain that if we had succeeded we should have been furnished with many advantages to be better workers of God's work, better men and women to the day of our death. Yet we are beaten; those helps and props, those high watch-towers to gaze afield from, and that broad rampart to shelter and wall us in, so that we could dwell in tranquillity and never more be tempted to stray, have all eluded our grasp, and we are left so much poorer, weaker and more forlorn, in that we have had a glimpse of the goodly portion which might have been ours, but which is allotted to another perhaps not more deserving, and unquestionably not more anxious to win it than we were.

We have been beaten. Yes, and may it not have been in the way of discipline? We started with the decided impression that we were the men for the place, amply furnished with the materials of victory, and the result has shown us to have been in error; the lightness of the limb and length of wind in which we trusted have failed us. Can we not improve the experience, and seek to acquire more enduring speed and vigor? We are all aware that we must learn "hardness"—that is, manly or womanly firmness and endurance in our service; and how else are we to learn it save in being beaten, worsted, compelled to relinquish both schemes and dreams, however blindly held or fondly cherished?

But there are respects, and those too the most important, in which it is impossible for a true man or woman to be beaten. Can a poet cease to be a poet because he does not receive a poet's bays? A great many of the things which we strive for with the best title are but shadows or reflections of the realities which we already possess. The very wife-and-mother hunger, which exists naturally in the breast of women, proceeds from the honoring, cherishing love which God has rooted deep in all tender hearts. The plant of love is not rooted up, though its direct outward development is stayed. We may lose the shadows or reflections, which are in a sort arbitrary and accidental, but we cannot lose the realities, which are integral parts of our being; and just as we are immortal, they are eternal. God, who sees not as man sees, and works not as man works, can so ordain that the absence of one outward object may serve at once to deepen and purify, consecrate and expand the inward sentiment, until it is ready to spend itself in many fertilizing streams and on many objects.

Surely it is a great comfort to the beaten men and women to know that in the main they may, if they will, by God's decree, never be beaten. Poor they may remain, undistinguished they may continue. Strong tastes may be ungratified, or so partially appeased as but to render the craving more intense. Travel, cultivated society, science, art, even books in this bookish age, may be more or less denied. The love of the beautiful in material things may be sentenced to a perpetual martyrdom. The heart's passionate longings may find no return, or the cup of home happiness may be dashed from the lips; still the truths of which all these gifts were no more than the expressions cannot be touched. The moral and spiritual, even the intellectual, need not be affected. The man or woman is a complete man or woman notwithstanding, and may be as perfect in degree in the sight of God, and even in the sight of the wiser of his or her fellow-men and women, as if he or she had received of all good things richly to enjoy.

And for those earthly temporal deprivations which do befall beaten men and women, I suppose the French sentence, taken in its best sense, is written: "Heaven is made for beaten men." It is not those whom God hates, but those whom he loves, that he chastens. Heaven is not entered by jubilation, but by tribulation. Let us bethink ourselves that all suffering is explained by the fact that the Captain of our salvation was made perfect through suffering; and that to the eyes of the motley crowd that stood round the cross on its awful day, and saw him whom they called the King of the Jews nailed there, that same Son of God—whom Jewish priests mocked with the taunts: "He saved others; himself he cannot save;" "Let him come down from the cross, if he be the Son of God, and we will believe him"—died a beaten man.—Good Words.

RUSSIAN HORSES.—An English writer says: A specialty of renown in Russia are the little horses of the Mushik. They are hardy in the first instance, as everything is in Russia, and they are quick and strong. Two of these little horses, hardly large enough to be called ponies, will draw a plow all day, with a pause at noon. They are now largely exported (under the name of Lithauers) to Prussia, and in some places have altogether dispossessed the oxen of their old privileges. I worked with them on one of the estates of Baron Pfuce, where they were fed upon chaff of any description, even of lupines, very successfully, condimented with some potato refuse from the distillery. In harvest-time, when the little mice had to work like brewers' horses, I administered to them some bran, and they grew fat even under so unfavorable circumstances. We soon had some twenty more sent down, and so we would spare them a little, and send them into the inclosure with the foals now and then. Two of them were able to draw the Champion reaper all day long, and got two pecks of oats each as an encouragement. They, too, laid on flesh during the time. I mean to say that they are the most useful animals for easy agriculture existing, as we used to work them.

STRONG MEN.—Strength of character consists of two things—power of will and power of self-restraint. It requires two things, therefore, for its existence—strong feelings and a strong command over them. Now we all very often mistake strong feelings for strong character. A man who bears all before him, before whose wild bursts of fury the children of the household quake, because he has his own way in all things, we call him a strong man. The truth is, he is a weak man; it is his passions that are strong; he, mastered by them, is weak.

You must measure the strength of a man by the power of the feelings he subdues, not by the power of those that subdue him. And hence composure is often the highest result of strength. Did we ever see a man receive a flagrant injury, and then reply calmly; that man is morally strong. Or did we ever see a man in anguish stand as if carved out of solid rock, mastering himself? Or one bearing a hopeless daily trial remain silent, and never tell the world what cankered his home peace? This is strength. He who, with strong passions, remains chaste; he who, indignation within him, can be provoked and yet restrain himself, and forgive, those are strong men, the moral heroes.

TO BELIEVE is to be happy; to doubt is to be wretched. Doubt weakens, belief is to be strong. Belief is power. Only so far as a man believes strongly, mightily, can he act cheerfully, or do anything that is worth doing.

LORD CLARENDON says: "We cannot make a more lively representation and emblem to ourselves of hell than by the view of a kingdom in war."

Origin of the Spices.

Nutmeg is the kernel of a small, smooth, pear-shaped fruit that grows on a tree in the Molucca islands and other parts of the East. The trees commence bearing in their seventh year, and continue fruitful until they are seventy or eighty years old. Around the nutmeg or kernel is a bright brown shell.

This shell has a soft scarlet covering, which, when flattened and dried, is known as mace. The best nutmegs are solid, and emit oil when pricked with a pin.

Ginger is the root of a shrub first known in Asia, and now cultivated in the West Indies and Sierra Leone. The stem grows three or four feet high, and dies every year. There are two varieties of ginger—the white and black—caused by taking more or less care in selecting and preparing the roots, which are always dug in winter, when the stems are withered. The white is the best.

Cinnamon is the inner bark of a beautiful tree, a native of Ceylon, that grows from twenty to thirty feet in height, and lives to be centuries old.

Cloves—native to the Moluccas islands, and so called from resemblance to a nail (clavis.) The East Indians call them "chaugkek," from the Chinese "techengkia" (fragrant nails.) They grow on a straight, smooth-barked tree, about forty feet high. Cloves are not fruits, but blossoms, gathered before they are quite unfolded.

Allspice—a berry so called because it combines the odor of several spices—grows abundantly on the beautiful allspice or bayberry-tree, native of South America and the West Indies. A single tree has been known to produce one hundred and fifty pounds of berries. They are purple when ripe.

Black pepper is made by grinding the dried berry of a climbing vine, native to the East Indies. White pepper is obtained from the same berries, freed from their husk or rind. Red or cayenne pepper is obtained by grinding the scarlet pod or seed-vessel of a tropical plant that is now cultivated in all parts of the world.

Get Rid of the Bible.

Three Roman Catholic bishops gave this advice to the Pope on the day when consulted as the mode of strengthening the Church of Rome:

"Lastly, of all the advice we can give your beatitude, we have reserved to the end the most important, viz.: that as little as possible of the gospel (especially in the vulgar tongue) be read in all countries subject to your jurisdiction. The little which is usually read at mass is sufficient, and beyond that no one whatever must be permitted to read. While men were contented with that little, your interests prospered; but when they read more they began to decay. To sum all: that book is the one which, more than any other, has raised against us those whirlwinds and tempests, whereby we were almost swept away; and, in fact, if any one examines it diligently, and then confronts therewith the practice of our church, he will perceive the great discordance, and that our doctrine is utterly different from and often contrary to it; which thing, if the people understand, they will not cease their clamor against us till all be divulged, and then we shall become an object of universal scorn and hatred. Wherefore even those few pages must be put away, but with considerable wariness and caution, lest so doing should raise greater uproars and tumults."—Imp. Library a Paris, fol. B, No. 1,038, vol. ii, pp. 641-640; also Brit. Mus. 7. c. 10, 11, Fasciculus Rerum, Lond. 1690, fol.

(The Pope was Julius the Third, and the document bears date "Bologna, October 23, 1553." The genuineness of this extract has been verified by reference to the original in the library of the British Museum.)

POLITE CHILDREN.—"Thank you, Charlie," said Mrs. Brown, as her little son handed her a paper he was requested to bring.

"Thank you, Bridget," said the little fellow a few hours after, as he received a glass of water from his nurse.

"Well, Mrs. Brown, you have the best-mannered children I ever saw," said a neighbor. "I should be thankful if mine were as polite to me as yours are to the servants. You never spend half as much time on your children's clothes as I do, and yet every one notices them, they are so well behaved."

"We always try to treat our children politely," was the quiet reply.

This was the whole secret. When I hear parents grumbling about the ill manners of their children I always wish to ask: "Have you always treated them with politeness?" I once knew a man, considered quite a gentleman in society, who would speak to his children in a manner that a well-instructed dog would resent. He would order them with a growl to bring his slippers, or perform some other little service; and yet he complained of the rudeness and disobedience of his children.

CONSTRAINING LOVE.—God's way of binding souls to obedience is similar to his method of keeping the planets in their orbits—that is, by filling them out free. You see no chain keeping back these shining worlds to prevent them from bursting away from their center. They are held in the grasp of an invisible principle, which we call the law of gravitation; and it is by the invisible bond of love—love of the Lord who bought them—that ransomed men are constrained to live soberly and righteously and godly. "Neither do I condemn you; go and sin no more." Such is the method by which Jesus bound a chief sinner to obedience. He trusts that his free pardon will generate as love in the sinner's breast, which will constrain him, like the law of gravity, to keep the law.—Arnot.

WHO can tell why it is that organists and choirs seldom sing when an old tune is started by some one who is not a chorist?

Religious Intelligence.

THE time for the beating of swords into plowshares is still in the future. Last year Christendom paid, for the support of the war system, $2,000,000,000, and for missions, during the same time, only $5,000,000.

THE Brotherhood of the Rough House in Hamburg numbers about four hundred, who are engaged throughout the world as teachers, agents, colporteurs and preachers to colonists. About forty of them are constantly connected with the institution, training future laborers and carrying on its various interests.

CHRISTIAN MISSIONARIES HAVE achieved a remarkable success in the Friendly and Fijian Islands. In the former the people have become a Christian nation, ruled by a Christian sovereign. They support their own churches, and raise $15,000 besides to send the gospel to other portions of the heathen world. In Fiji the Methodist missionaries preach to one hundred thousand hearers. On Kandavu Island, where there are ten thousand Fijians, they are regularly called to family worship every day by the ringing of a bell. Every family on the island answers its summons.

CHRISTIANITY still continues to triumph in Madagascar. Nearly every mail brings some cheering intelligence. The special mission of Dr. Mullens and Mr. Pillens, sent by the London Missionary Society, opens more fully the wonders Christianity has wrought there. There are, we are informed, 500,000 of professing Christians; 60,000 children are at school; some 600 churches; and the Bible has been translated, and many books written in Malagasy; and more than 150,000 books in that vernacular are sold every year. Besides building their own churches and supporting their ministers, the native Christians maintain 120 evangelists in the outlying districts.

THE Irish Wesleyan Conference at its recent session unanimously resolved "that, inasmuch as the assistance of gifted and godly laymen on committees of the Conference have greatly served the interests of our cause in Ireland, and that numerous memorials from our societies have been presented to us, praying that their assistance may be rendered available to a still greater extent by their admission to the councils of the Conference itself in all matters not purely ministerial, it is the judgment of the Conference that the prayer of the memorialists should be granted, and that the British Conference be requested to appoint a committee to meet during the year a committee of this Conference to confer upon this subject."

METHODIST UNION IN CANADA.—The General Conference of the Wesleyan Church in Canada assembled in Toronto on the sixteenth ultimo. This is the first General Conference since the union. The different branches of Wesleyans in Canada, and a body of the New Connection Methodists, now unite in one ecclesiastical organization, the former cutting themselves off from their relation to the parent Wesleyan Conference in England. Heretofore the Wesleyan body in the old country has nominated the president of the Canadian Conferences, and paid his annual salary. At the Wesleyan Conference in England, previous to the last, delegates from the Canadian branches took an impressive and tender leave of their long-cherished mother. They now conduct their own business, under their own officers, in their own way. This Conference is quite another affair from that of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Canada.

PROTESTANT DIVINITY STUDENTS IN GERMANY.—The Bremen Evangelist states in its last number (August 22) that a statistical account of the students of Protestant theology who have matriculated at German universities has been published by the Magdeburg Consistorium, the statement having, however, only to do with those who belong to the eight provinces of Old Prussia. The total number amounted in the summer of 1851 to 604, and steadily advanced from that till it reached in the summer of 1862 the number of 1,180. But from thence it fell with the same regularity, so that in the winter of 1873-4 it still amounted to 667, or not many more than in 1851. The total number who had studied in the German universities out of its eight Old Prussia provinces during the twenty-three years dealt with in the report was 41,139. The particulars are: 14,864 in Halle, 11,259 in Berlin, 4,067 in Konigsberg, 3,428 in Breslau, 5,395 in Bonn, 1,243 in Leipsic, 1,179 in Greifswalde, 1,171 in Erlangen, 920 in Tubingen, and 583 in other German universities (Gottingen, Jena, Kiel, Rostock, Heidelberg, Giessen, Marburg.)

REV. MASON GALLAGHER arrived in Toronto on Sunday, August 30, to organize a new congregation of the Reformed Episcopal Church. A very large number of the members of Trinity church being dissatisfied with the ritualistic tendencies of their clergyman, petitioned Bishop Bethune to divide the parish and nominate Rev. Mr. Harris, of Orillia, as pastor, his moderate views being more in accordance with theirs. Their request was refused, whereon some three hundred members resolved to secede from the church, and in conjunction with the discontented members of St. George's form a congregation of Reformed Episcopalians. Bishop Cheney is at present upon a missionary tour through the Dominion, and is very well received. Indeed the Reformed Church is making better progress in Canada than it has thus far made in the United States. The reason for this may be found in the fact that American individual independence is beginning very generally to permeate society, thus bringing about a reaction against the prevalent forms and customs. The Bishops in Canada have been, as a rule, considerably more autocratic than they are in England toward their presbyters, and the presbyters, in turn, toward their congregations. There is also a strong Low Church movement in Canada, and between the two it comes that the Reformed Church, having a duly consecrated Bishop at its head, meets with no little favor.

THE receipts of the Roman Catholic Society for the Propagation of the Faith during 1873, as reported in the Annals, were $1,101,835. Of this amount $725,800 were contributed in France; Great Britain gave $59,000; Germany almost equaled the British isles with $56,630; Belgium gave $78,200, and Italy $53,500. The dioceses of North America all together gave only $25,815; and poor Spain, which formerly headed the column, now comes in with only $1,470, or about half the sum contributed by the islands in the Pacific. From this statement it will appear that the Romish missions are essentially French, since three-fourths of their support comes from that nation. It will also be evident from this summary that the Roman Catholic Church gives far less to the cause of missions than do the combined Protestant denominations. The united income of the Wesleyan and Church Missionary Societies alone exceeded that of the Romish Propagation Society by a large amount. And this, too, notwithstanding the concession of "precious favors" to Romish contributors. "By the contribution of a half penny a week," says the Church Intelligencer, quoting from the Annals, "and by adding to the Pater Noster and Ave of morning and evening prayers the intention that they are said in behalf of missions, with the addition of 'Saint Francis Xavier, pray for us,' contributors can obtain plenary and partial indulgencies, which are enumerated at length on the wrapper of the periodical."—Independent.

THE nature of the warfare, says the Independent, now going on in Germany between the government and the Roman Catholics is indicated by the fact that during a single week of August the Ultramontane papers reported five arrests of Roman Catholic priests, eleven expulsions and twenty sequestrations of church property, in addition to the dissolution of four Catholic societies and inquiries into six others, one of which has since been also dissolved. Just now the authorities are paying their most assiduous respects to the Catholic clubs. As a measure of political warfare these clubs have been formed throughout Europe, but especially in northern Germany. Of five hundred and thirty-three organizations of this character, two hundred and forty-nine are found in Prussia. The German correspondent of the English Guardian thus describes them: "The Roman Catholics have managed within the last thirty years to spread a network of combination over all Germany, in order to get the rising generation, and especially the young workmen—who, they foresee, will be a great political power in the future—completely into their power. The young lad who is preparing for confirmation is already a member of a boys' society; after confirmation he passes into a higher club, and when he gets married into a third. The young women are similarly all enrolled in a pius verein. These clubs, in close combination with the socialist societies, manage all elections, civil and parliamentary. In a Catholic town or village, the nominee of the Catholic club is the mayor, and in large districts they nominate the election for Parliament. When the history of the present struggle comes to be written, and it is seen how Rome endeavored to subjugate Germany to herself, it will also be seen what an important element in the struggle these journeymen's clubs are." Throughout the provinces the police are now actively searching the rules of the societies and the lists of members, and shutting up the clubs when there is the least excuse for doing so. If anybody thinks this proceeding savors of Cæsarism, we shall not take pains to undeceive him.

LIGHT BREAKING FOR CHINA.—A very favorable report is received of the results of the efforts of the American Missionary Association at San Francisco for the Christianization of the Chinese. At the close of July last the evening schools of the association had an attendance of four hundred and five Chinese pupils, which is a large increase over the previous reports. Of these thirty-five have renounced idolatry and twenty-six have embraced Christianity. Let us hope that each one of these Christianized converts will prove an active missionary to his heathen countrymen, either in this country or in Asia, and thus prove a providential agency for the spread of the gospel, for which the way has been prepared by the great and oftentimes dreaded immigration of this remarkable people to our shores. The immense possibilities for evangelizing the heathen of Asia which reside in the irruption of the Chinese upon our shores should not be lost to the perception of Christians, and should kindle their zeal and enable them to see their duty plainly. It would seem as if the Chinese, under providential guidance, were moved to wait no longer for the advent of Christian missionaries to China, but are impelled to our shores that they may be within gospel influences and be the more easily Christianized. The harvest of souls, instead of being left thousands of miles distant, where the labor is difficult and the laborers mournfully few, is brought to our very doors, where the difficulty of the work is inconceivably diminished, and where every Christian should be a ready laborer. Here, then, is the church's opportunity. As was well said by Dr. Talmage in his letter, published in the Intelligencer of August 27: "If God in his providence shall bring them (the Chinese) in such numbers into the very heart of Christendom, let the church thank him for this, and address herself to the task of saving them." This is practical common sense, as well as the suggestion of religious obligation. Let the whole Christian church, then, at once address itself to this great task for the establishment of God's kingdom among the heathen, so as to hasten the day when the prediction shall be fulfilled: "His dominion shall be from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth."—Christian Intelligencer.

Economizing for God.

The cheapness with which the present crop has been made is regarded as a hopeful circumstance. If the prices are low, and the yield scanty in many sections, still if there has been but little outlay in the cultivation, the net results will be considerable. People who keep out of debt, and make a little, are well off in comparison with those whose obligations are more than the value of the crop. Economy is an excellent remedy for hard times, and a means by which the country after awhile will recover some degree of prosperity. It is a necessity with many who have already exhausted their credit, and it is a wise expedient where people would maintain their independence, and recover from the financial prostration and losses which have befallen them.

Doubtless the exorbitant taxes call for retrenchment in other expenditures, as the taxes must be met, or the property will be put under the sheriff's hammer. These are days of frugal expedients, of shifts in every department of expense. Luxuries, comforts and conveniences once enjoyed must be dispensed with, that the things absolutely necessary may be secured. The old clothes, the last season's bonnet, the faded carpets, can be made to do somehow. It is wonderful how many things can be done without when there is a strong compulsion.

But how is it with reference to economizing for God? The spiritual crop this year in our Southern fields has been more than usually abundant, and none has ever been made at a smaller cost in money to the church. It has, however, cost much to the preachers in consuming what means they may have had, in the destitution of their families, and in the personal toils and hardships endured. They are not disposed to complain, and generally say but little about their privations; but we know that, as a class, they are greatly straitened. Are the people, served by those self-denying men, retrenching in other things that they may contribute to their support? Churches must be built and repaired, or the work of God will make little progress. Nearly every religious interest suffers, the annual collections, which are vital to our connectional welfare, are reduced, and the church in her missionary enterprises is brought to a halt, when the needed funds are withheld. The times are stringent with the most. If the gospel is supported, and the interests of the church are kept up, there must be retrenchment in secular expenditures, that there may be means to sustain the institutions of religion.

There must be economizing to this distinctive end, the foregoing not only of luxuries and expensive pleasures, but even of usual comforts. We imagine it was in this way that the Macedonians did so bountifully in trouble times, so that "their deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality." There must have been a great deal of self-denial, extreme frugality in living, and many sacrifices by those poor but devoted Christians of whom the apostle testifies: "For to their power I bear record, yea, and beyond their power, they were willing of themselves." It will not do now to go by the standard of ability as understood and practiced in the days of our prosperity. If people give of their surplus only, and according to convenience, as was the custom in former times, the gathering will be meager indeed. God's tenth is the same in proportion, whether we have little or much, but that tenth with many can hardly be spared in their impoverished condition. Let them save in some other way, even to the point of personal inconvenience, rather than withhold from God.

There will be a blessing in the deed, a blessing returning to them, and a blessing going out in manifold streams to gladden and refresh the Lord's heritage. We would only indicate the principle, and leave the application to every Christian's conscience. Let the devout woman consider wherein she can do without what she feels she really needs, in order that Christ's cause may be upheld. Let the man of God go over the demands which press upon him and the things which he desires, and mark some cherished object as taken from himself and given to his Lord. Save, deny yourselves, use every thoughtful expedient, that you may be able to aid in maintaining the gospel and in sustaining the enterprises of the church. It is right that Christians should do this, and in these times it is absolutely necessary.

The falling off in religious giving is not so much with the poor, who have always been accustomed out of their deep poverty to contribute their mite, but it is rather with those who have been used to something like style in their living, and who have followed closely in the wake, if they have not kept fully up with the fashions. The sacrifice of mere appearances, the singularity of being behind the fashions, and of bringing their present style into contrast with the past, requires more courage than the surrender of actual comforts. They cannot give anything for religious purposes, and maintain the expenditures to which they have been accustomed. Their economizing for God would not touch the real comforts and needs of ordinary desire; but are they willing to give up the struggle after style and a sham respectability, that they may be not liberal but just toward God?

There are, of course, some who have the means of giving largely even in these times of almost unparalleled pressure. The demand on them is more imperative than ever. Their stewardship involves a weightier responsibility, and they will be held to a stricter account by the Master. Economizing for God is not without application to them. In all their profits and investments, and in the use of their money, there is occasion for them to devise liberally for Christ. It is in their power to help the pastor and his family, to cherish every languishing interest of the church, and to hold and extend the work of missions. Those that have money now, and hoard it, and speculate on it, and grow richer, while every religious enterprise is crippled and appealing for help, will have a sorrowful account to meet in the end.

A Mystery Solved. (?)

MR. EDITOR: Bishop Gilbert Haven and all the preachers of the Methodist Episcopal Church (North) who work down in these extreme Southern States, in all their communications, written and oral, that I have ever heard of, have made and continue to make assertions about the people of the South—their character, their feelings, their conduct—and especially about the Methodist Episcopal Church South, so grossly false that it has been a problem to see how they can possibly be lovers of the truth. Their statements have uniformly been such as to produce the positive conviction that in many cases they manufactured out of whole cloth, and did so willfully and malignantly. Now it is written of a Bishop that "he must have a good report of them that are without, lest he fall into reproach and the snare of the devil." These men have certainly fallen into reproach, and many people think also into the snare. If they are not in the snare, then their conduct is a riddle. This riddle we have been trying to solve, so as to save these preachers and their leader from the charge of bearing false witness; and the effort has been intensified by a knowledge of the fact that it is decreed that hereafter "we be brethren."

The solution—the best one, at least—that my mind has been able to make came out in the sworn testimony given by a negro, in this city, a few days since. This is very remarkable; but still it furnishes, I say, the most reasonable, because the most charitable, solution of this painful mystery. The case was this: Two gentlemen of good standing were arrested in Sumter county, Alabama, on the charge of Ku-Klux murder, and carried to Mobile, Alabama, by the United States soldiers. They were on trial before the United States commissioner, and the negro was a witness. Being sworn, he was asked if the prisoners had done the deed, to which he replied that they did. Being further asked "how he know they were the men," he answered: "God told me so." (This is the language, verbatim, reported by good men.) Upon such testimony the prisoners, men of property, families and personal good character, were incarcerated in the county jail, and that, too, in the face of contradictory testimony, given under oath, by men of reputation for honor and intelligence. Yes, sir, this was proof enough for the United States officer, and they are in jail to-day.

It is not my purpose, Mr. Editor, to comment on the baseness of prostituting a high office to the purposes of political partisanship, nor to hold up to scorn the ineffable meanness and tyranny of such conduct, for I am not a politician, nor is the ADVOCATE a political newspaper. I introduce the circumstance to explain the mystery; and you will at once see how it bears on the matter.

Suppose the Bishop and his men should in their Southern work meet with these gifted sons of Africa, and hear from their inspired lips the marvelous things they rehearse in Northern papers and before Northern Conferences—can they be blamed for believing what they hear? You read that the Bishop, in a Northwestern Annual Conference, not long ago, said that "the negro is immeasurably superior to the white man." If this is his honest opinion, then can he be censured for giving full credence to everything this superior being may communicate to his reverential soul?

That the negro is a remarkable man, in some respects, no one will deny; and nobody will doubt that he has a very superior gift of being able to tell things he neither saw nor heard, nor in any way received of man. We who have a life-long acquaintance with him know that he possesses this power to a marvelous degree, and is not entirely unpracticed in its exercise. Indeed we had nearly concluded that all the Northern preachers who are at work in these regions—the Bishop too—are about as richly endowed with this African prophetic power as the negroes themselves; and candor compels us to say we were almost settled and confirmed in this belief, and had well-nigh despaired of solving the mystery. But fortunately, perhaps, for charity and fraternity, in an hour and in a way we looked not for, this solution came up, viz.: If a United States commissioner, without personal meanness and wrong, can incarcerate the bodies of citizens upon the avowedly inspired testimony of a negro, then these Northern preachers may, without personal meanness and falsehood, upon the same kind of testimony, publish things that blacken the characters of both citizens and members of the church. You may say this solution is unsatisfactory. Well, I answer that it is the best I have ever been able to give, and if you can give a better, then I will be exceedingly thankful, for you know we have got to be brethren.

A Case to be Considered.

AMBITION WORKING ON IGNORANCE.

MR. EDITOR: One who reads the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE wishes an account of proceedings that took place in a certain church in Covington county, Alabama, to be published. We believe that county is embraced in the district of Rev. S. P. Richardson or of Rev. J. W. Shores. We advise them to be on the lookout lest these troublers in Israel should creep in and do mischief. They can do mischief where the people are ignorant. Where the papers of the church and the Discipline do not circulate, what else can be expected? The want of knowledge is the cause of much religious instability. For want of knowledge the people fall a prey to every kind of deceivers. They are driven about and tossed by every wind of doctrine.—See Ephesians iv, 14. The eye-witness reports in substance as follows:

"October 3.—Bethel Church.—A meeting took place in the church here, about two weeks ago, that I will give you some account of. It was called by two local preachers to see who was in favor of Congregational Methodism. One of these preachers introduced the subject. He did not see the use of Bishops and presiding elders. Here we have an assessment made out for the circuit-rider; and here comes the older and runs his pencil through that, and leaves a small sum for the man who does the work. The church is a scheme to make money. And then they've got a big Publishing House, and that don't do us no good.

"One who reads this paper asked the speaker if he took the ADVOCATE, or ever bought a hymn-book or Discipline? And the sublime reply was: 'No, sir.'

"The speaker continued, after this boast of his ignorance, saying that he was necessarily compelled to resign, to quit the church, as it seems that a local preacher will have to get his lesson; must take a course of study before he is allowed to continue to preach; and if you don't get that lesson you can't preach. He closed by saying: 'I can't stand the pressure. I am bound to withdraw.' The other of the brace of disaffected and ambitious local preachers spoke his mind. He did not think it was safe to remain in the Methodist Episcopal Church. Times are too hard to pay Bishops and elders.

"Here he was interrupted by one who said: 'No need of growling. I have been here two years, and never knew a dime to be paid on the Bishops' fund.' Not at all silenced, the brother continued: 'He saw no use in Bishops, no how. They go where all the refinement and wealth is; but they can't visit us country Christians.'

"A young brother defended the old church; but the plague had spread—the plague of disaffection. Busy-bodies and schismatics had sowed the seed of dissension before that meeting was called. Nevertheless, the young brother was valiant for the cause. He saw the hard-shellism of the movement. Many Hard-shell Baptists are in that region. He would cut to the bone and take it out, if there was a piece of hard-shell in him. These disaffected preachers were selfish; they wanted a free gospel, and if anything was paid they wanted it themselves. He was sorry to see such weak-mindedness among the people. The church and the plan of church government that had brought them the gospel, and that had done everything for them, they were now told, was all wrong. There was a cheaper and a better plan. Episcopal Methodism had sought them out and given them the gospel in the wilderness; Episcopal Methodism had been sending them preachers year after year, who were meagerly supported, but who continued to serve them; Episcopal Methodism had done all for them that had ever been done. But now they found out that Congregational Methodism was the thing! Quite late in the day to find out the right kind of Methodism. For his part, he would stick to the old ship.

"But the game was blocked. The malcontents took a vote, and about two-thirds of the misled members went their way; and then they modestly asked for the use of the meeting-house to organize in! Their elder is to come round on the third Sunday in the month to organize them, and then they can call their own preacher, and have a right to starve out as many as will serve them. And then the two malcontents will have a chance to be called and chosen. Ambition works among the ignorant as well as among the learned; it works among the small as well as among the great. Self!—how it finds excuses to push its interest."

There are a few things to be noticed in this connection:

1. We must get up Sunday schools, not simply in cities and villages, but among the hard-shell neighborhoods.

2. We need a catechism on church government, as well as on church doctrine. Nearly all the secessions and schisms that occur from our church come by misleading the people about church government. Ambitious and intriguing men deceive and pervert the weak and ignorant at this point.

3. In the absence of a catechism on church government, our pastors must teach their people the truth on this subject, so that they may be rooted and grounded, and stand fast against all who would lead them astray.

The Dead Line of Fifty.

BY E. WENTWORTH, D. D.

The Bible limit of life is threescore years and ten. Of these years the first third are spent in education, physical growth and development, mental and moral expansion, getting ready to live. By the time he is thirty a man, by immemorial usage, is ready for priesthoods and senates, the pulpit, bar and forum, headship in the family, the army, the State, the church. As a rule, a man cannot expect more than twenty or thirty years of active, busy life, whatever his business or profession. A Chinaman wisely retires from business at forty-five, and expects his sons to support him, as a gentleman of leisure and advisory counselor, for the remainder of his days. If Shakespeare's Seven Ages represent so many decades, the sixth, that of "the lean and slippered pantaloon," begins at sixty, at which age the work of most men is done, and they are on the decline. Confucius comprehends his mental history in decades, and confesses to no decline: "At thirty I stood firm; at forty I had no doubts; at fifty I knew heaven's decrees; at sixty my ear was an obedient organ; at seventy I could follow what my heart desired without transgressing what was right." Socrates was as hale as Vanderbilt at eighty, and Plato was polishing his inimitable "Dialogues" at the same ripe age. These are exceptional cases. In choosing leaders, men prefer enthusiasm to wisdom.

"Old men for counsel; young men for war."

Action is better than advice; the positive is better than the negative; an ounce of poor poetry is better than a pound of sound criticism; the dogmatism of crude eighteen is more palatable than the slow caution of experienced eighty.

At the late session of the Cincinnati Conference, one of its veterans, the Rev. Dr. Asbury Lowrey, asked leave to retire from the effective ranks of the itinerancy to the supernumeraries, in view of the fact that he had "reached that period of age and ministerial service" that implied "the general impairment" that always attends a life past its meridian, and that he did not "think it best for a minister to continue in the uniform work of the itinerancy until he reaches the bitter end of unacceptability." "There is a time when God calls men into the ministry, and a time when he calls them out." These are wise words, and the Conference wisely granted Dr. Lowrey's request.

In olden times the pastoral relation was as indissoluble as the marriage relation, and was ended only with death. In these days, churches with permanent pastorates retire their ministers, like army officers, on half pay. Dr. Cox, of Brooklyn; Dr. Spring, of New York; Dr. Sprague, of Albany; Dr. Boaman, of Troy; Dr. Todd, of Pittsfield; Drs. Ames and Bond, of Norwich, and numerous others, were so retired, and supported as superannuates, and succeeded by younger men. Regretfully, or secretly exultant, the advancing ranks of the strong and healthy and active press out of the service those who have done their work and become old and feeble. They have the field now; but it is a brief possession. "Every dog has his day." Their turn will soon come, perhaps, like the old draught-horse, to be turned loose to die on the common, or, like the useless mged of the Africans and Asiatics, left in some exposed place to die of starvation. In the order of Providence, the "dead line of fifty" is not a fixed line; it is movable.

Those who mature early, fail early. "Soon ripe, soon rotten." Some are as forward at twenty as others are at thirty. Some have spent as much vital force at forty as others have at sixty. Years simply are no measures of ability to do. Some men do their best work between three and fourscore. Let every man work as long as there is work in him, and let the church provide that those who no longer bear the brunt of the battle have positions in the rear suited to their day and strength. Work we must; but we cannot all, if we would, "cease at once to work and live."—Repository.

The Old Catholics at Bonn.

We have already briefly noticed, says the Methodist, the proceedings of the conference at Bonn between Old Catholics, Anglicans and Greeks. Besides the surrender of the filioque as a part of the Nicene creed, the Old Catholics gave up the canonicity of the Apocrypha, the superior authority of the Vulgate, the use of the Latin as a liturgical language, works of supererogation, five of the seven so-called sacraments, the co-ordinate authority of tradition, the immaculate conception of Mary, confession, as far as it is made compulsory, and indulgences, in as far as they relate to other than church penalties. "Faith working by love" was defined to be the ground of justification, and distinguished from faith without love. The Eucharist was admitted to be "not a continuous repetition or renewal of the propitiatory sacrifice offered once forever by Christ on the cross," but a perpetual memorial of it. The Orientals did not quickly accept this statement.

It was found, as might have been expected, that the representatives of the Eastern Church were rather impracticable. Reposing calmly on their orthodoxy, they were indisposed to yield as much as the breadth of a hair. They quite surprised the Anglicans by hesitating to accept the regularity of their orders. This, after so much Anglican courting of the Eastern Church, was cruel! Finally the Orientals consented to take Dr. Dollinger's word for it. That an ex-Catholic should have to guarantee the regularity of English orders to an Orthodox Greek prelate was as funny a situation as could be well conceived. Just as strange was it that the Old Catholics were more strenuous than the Anglicans for the rejection of the immaculate conception of Mary. Canon Liddon wished for liberty to hold it as a "pious opinion," but Dollinger was for its extirpation, root and branch. It was of the papacy, papal, and he would have nothing to do with it.

Protestants will regard this conference with mixed feelings. As an Indication of Old Catholic progress toward the light, it is most cheering. One by one the impostures of Romanism are discarded. Old Catholics no longer acknowledge the Council of Trent; soon, no doubt, they will be more Protestant than High Church Anglicans. As a means of unifying Christendom the conference will accomplish nothing. Christendom is not to be united on the basis of an apostolic succession through bishops. The vigor of modern Christian life is in the "reformed" churches, and no union will hold that counts them out.

THE editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate, who was in attendance at the St. Louis Conference, in his report of the proceedings of the fourth day, says:

At eleven o'clock the question of the change of the General Rules, in regard to the use of ardent spirits, was called up, and on motion the question was taken without debate, and resulted in favor of change, 3; against a change, 42. This I regard as a sensible vote, all things considered, and this remark is made with the full admission of the fact that those who voted for the change are just as wise, honest and conscientious as those who voted against a change, each voting agreeably to his own sense of propriety, and on his own individual responsibility. The probabilities are that the action of the majority of the last General Conference will not be confirmed by the requisite majority of the several Annual Conferences. The rule, as we have it, has stood as it is for a long time past, and has always been found efficient and sufficient whenever and wherever properly applied, and changes so important as this should never be made but for good and sufficient reasons, clearly and forcibly set forth.

HARD ON NEWSPAPERS.—The past year or two has been especially hard on religious newspapers, many of which have suffered financially, and some of which, as well as secular papers, have suspended. A certain Baptist paper with a bona fide circulation of seven thousand five hundred, has during the last few years fallen, by its own showing, seriously behind in its finances. The editor announces that the subscriptions and the business have failed by ten thousand dollars to pay expenses, and that "another four years of such failure" would put the concern from twenty to thirty thousand dollars in debt—an obligation that the denomination could never meet. The Religious Herald tells us that another Baptist paper, with eight thousand subscribers, failed last year to pay expenses by five thousand dollars. The last two years have been years of embarrassment to all enterprises whose business is readily affected by a financial crisis.—Church Advocate.

BY GOOD acts we make good friends.

The Roman Catholic Issue.

Dr. Thompson, writing from Berlin to the Observer, expresses the opinion that the dispute between Prussia and the Pope is in reality a controversy in which all Christendom will yet have to take part. As to the shape which the issue will take in the United States, and the right way to meet it, he says:

"There are three ways in which Romanists are there seeking to employ the State as an agent and supporter of their church: 1. By obtaining State aid for Roman Catholic schools in rivalry with the public schools. 2. By procuring legislative grants to their church institutions. 3. By claiming a distribution of offices to Catholics as such, thus introducing the baleful practice of recognizing religious communions as political powers, to be negotiated with and placated in the administration of government.

"Every reader of the Tablet and of the Catholic World will recognize this as a fair statement of the attitude of the Roman Catholic hierarchy toward the State in America. But every item of this programme is directly hostile to the principles of American liberty; and it is only necessary that the aim of the Ultramontanes be made apparent in order to rally the American nation against ecclesiastical management in the State. For this, however, it is important that the movement should not rest upon Protestantism as its center, nor use Protestantism as its argument or its end. Why should we cling to the name Protestant, which, as first given, was of political origin and significance, in the Protest of the evangelical estates of Germany at Spires in 1529, against the decree of the Diet forbidding the propagation of the new doctrine? What have we to do to-day with a name that had reference to certain politico-ecclesiastical measures of Germany three hundred and fifty years ago? Before the common people this very name enables Roman Catholics to contrast Protestantism with Christianity and "the church," and to decry Protestantism as a modern human invention. No; let us be what we are. We are Christians; we date from the New Testament; our faith, our charter, our title is older than Luther, older than Augustus. And we are Catholics; ours is the one, holy, universal faith of the one, holy, universal church. They are schismatics, they are heretics, who have departed from the doctrine and the practice of the New Testament. Our succession is the spiritual life of believers, never extinct in any age. As here, in the land of Luther, I see how formal, how traditional, how arbitrary Protestantism has become, I feel loath to fight under such a name against the aggrandizements of Romanism. We must take higher ground.

"Especially must we do this in the United States. The American idea of religious liberty forbids that the State should foster or favor Protestantism rather than Catholicism; there are thousands upon thousands of citizens who, though nominally Protestant, have no intelligent sympathy with the evangelical system; and in a controversy with Romanism, waged in the name and for the interest of Protestantism, or waged against the Roman Catholic Church in its faith and worship, these would either be indifferent or would throw their doctrine of religious liberty over the Catholics themselves.

"Pains should be taken to present the true issue clearly, sharply, forcibly; and this should be kept constantly before the people. The Constitution of the United States forbids religious tests for political office, and any form of church establishment. Most of the State constitutions are now to the same effect, in spirit, if not in words. No man's religious faith can be urged as a disqualification for office. This principle and practice all true Americans are ready to defend. But when Roman Catholics claim that as Catholics they are entitled to a pro rata share in the distribution of political office, then true Americans, to a man, will resist the doctrine that an ecclesiastical connection gives a claim to political preferment! Such a doctrine is destructive of liberty, civil and religious."

WE CLIP the following item from the Hot Springs Daily Press, Arkansas, of October 22:

Methodist Episcopal Church South. This church, which has been in course of erection for some months past, will be ready for use on next Sabbath. Rev. P. T. Scruggs, from Memphis, will preach at half-past ten A. M. and administer the ordinance of baptism.

At nine A. M. the Sunday school will be reorganized. Rev. I. Z. T. Morris will deliver an address on the responsibility of Sabbath school teachers. The pastor will organize a class of young men, and also of young ladies. Besides, there will be a class for visitors, taught by a visitor.

WE WERE deeply pained, a few days since, at the announcement of the death of Mrs. Emily R. Miller, wife of Rev. John C. Miller, of Jackson, Louisiana. An obituary of this estimable Christian lady will appear next week. Sister Miller's death is a most serious loss to the church and to the community. The bereaved family have our earnest sympathies and prayers.

REV. S. P. RICHARDSON, presiding elder of Union Springs district, Alabama Conference, in a private note of recent date says: "The work on the district is prosperous; about seven hundred have been added this year, and the work goes on."

BISHOP KEENER reached home from St. Louis on Saturday, October 24. He reports himself as weary, but in good health, and as having had a very pleasant time in Missouri.

A Happy Death.

The following account of the last hours of Dr. T. M. Eddy, one of the missionary secretaries of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was furnished by General Fisk and read at the funeral:

MEMORIAL STATEMENT OF DR. EDDY'S CLOSING HOURS.

Sunday, Midnight, Oct. 4.—Dr. Eddy's physicians advised me that he must die, and suggested to me that I should impart this information to the suffering saint. I performed the melancholy duty as best I could. He received the intelligence with great calmness, but said he thought his medical attendants must be mistaken. It did not seem possible to him that this was his fatal illness. His exact words were as follows:

"Clinton, it does not seem possible that this can be my fatal illness. There is too much work to be done that I should accomplish. I am just in the prime of life. I know how to work for Jesus, and I love to work for his cause. Does it not seem strange that I should be called home from the vineyard when there are so many laggards in a field whitening for the harvest? Nevertheless, God's will be done. If I am to die now, there are certain items of business I must adjust. Sit down here with the family, and I will dictate my wishes."

With composure most marvelous he dictated his will, and gave advice to his executors respecting his every interest in this world; after which he dismissed all thought of his earthly affairs, and summoned us to prayer at his bedside, in which service he was himself the most fervent. He then, in the most touching manner, spoke to each member of his family present, and left messages of love, and earnest words of invitation to holy living, for absent ones. From this hour—two A. M. on Monday morning—until daylight the scene in the chamber of this good man was impressively solemn, and his golden words would make a volume. He left messages for his associate secretaries, for his Conference (Baltimore,) for the Missionary Society, and the church at large. Speaking of his life-work, he said:

"I have no regret that my life has been spent in holding up Jesus to my fellow-men as their Savior. Preaching Christ is the only work which brings sweet perpetual contentment."

"Dying is a fact—that takes care of itself. Faith in the great hereafter through Christ is my strength."

"I am now in a most sweet state of mind, nearing the gates."

"Tarry not, O Lord, but come now."

"Beyond the parting and the meeting
I shall be soon;
Beyond the farewell and the greeting,
Beyond the pulse's fever beating,
I shall be soon."

"Love, rest and home—sweet, sweet home—
O sweet it will be there to meet
The dear ones all at home."

At five o'clock on Monday morning the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered by Dr. Chapman. The entire household, visitors, attendants and servants, were summoned to his room. As Dr. Chapman was beginning the communion service, Dr. Eddy sat up in his bed, looked around the room, and said: "Wait; tell Annie to come too." Annie is the colored cook, and was a great favorite of the doctor's. Annie was specially called, and on her arrival at the bedside the most impressive communion service I ever witnessed began.

Dr. Eddy quoted much from the hymns so frequently sung on such occasions. With much emphasis he repeated:

"Jesus, thy blood and righteousness
My beauty are, my glorious dress;
Midst flaming worlds, in these arrayed,
With joy shall I lift up my head.

"Lord, I believe thy precious blood,
Which at the mercy-seat of God
Forever doth for sinners plead,
For me, e'en for my soul was shed."

The entire morning was made glorious by his utterances. Nearly every wakeful moment gave us some gem of religious thought. Monday and Monday night and Tuesday thus passed away. Tuesday night and Wednesday morning he marched rapidly to his end, a shouting victor all the way. In response to words of mine, suggesting the great loss our Missionary Society would sustain in his death, he said: "Clinton, I must quote to you the last text I preached from—'My God shall supply all your need, according to his riches in glory, by Christ Jesus.'"

To Bishop Janes he said: "I am resting in Jesus, O so sweetly; a poor sinner saved by grace; but saved, God be thanked."

Far more than an hour of his last night he uninterruptedly spoke of the great needs of the church, and the imperative demands upon our Missionary Society to take advanced ground. "Forward! Is the word—no falling back. We must take the world for Christ; say so to our people. God calls us. Louder than thunder, on the dome of the sky, the Lord strikes the hour. We must throw down our gold in the presence of God. Amen."

More than a score of times he called on us who stood beside him to see to it that the church be roused to its plain duty to possess the world for the Master. His face was beautiful as the lights of the gates of the celestial city flashed upon him.

One very pleasing incident before losing the power of speech was that of stretching his hands over the heads of his weeping family and pronouncing the benediction. How emphatic were the words: "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be upon and abide with you evermore. Amen."

About one o'clock on his last morning he lifted his trembling hands and endeavored to clasp them in ecstasy. He was so weak they passed each other, scarcely touching; but he clearly shouted: "Hallelujah! hallelujah! hallelujah!" His last words were: "Sing and pray—eternity dawns."

We gathered around the rejoicing, triumphant saint and sang: "Jesus, lover of my soul." Dr. Tiffany led us in prayer. We continued to sing for an hour, during which time he manifested exceeding joy. He was filled with glory—trying in vain to speak.

Just before his last moments I said to him: "Dr. Eddy, is the way still bright and joyous? Is Jesus very precious to you now? If you understand me and cannot speak, please raise your hand." He raised his hand as if voting at a Conference, and held it up until the ebbing pulse grew fainter and fainter. In a few moments it was still, and the soul had rest in the bosom of the Savior of mankind.

Books and Periodicals.

THE NEW SONG. Classified and arranged by Rev. Aaron Coons. New York: Nelson & Phillips, Methodist Publishing House.

A 12mo of 255 pages of songs and hymns, with the notes, designed, we believe, chiefly for social worship and revival meetings. There are many of our best old hymns and some songs of merit. There are also many songs not fit to be published or sung—mere doggerel and trash. There is, however, enough good music and poetry in the book to make it a means of usefulness, we trust.

MANUAL OF PRACTICAL ARITHMETIC. By William G. Peck, LL. D. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York and Chicago, 1874.

This volume is by the well-known Prof. Peck, of Columbia College. It is designed as an introduction to the "Complete Arithmetic," and for those who wish to acquire a sufficient knowledge of arithmetic for ordinary business purposes. Price, fifty cents sent by mail, postpaid.

MONTEITH'S INDEPENDENT COURSE—ELEMENTARY GEOGRAPHY. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York and Chicago.

This is well adapted for beginners. A beautiful volume, excellent in method, and containing many illustrations and handsomely colored maps. Price, eighty cents sent by mail, postpaid.

SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY for November has: The Story of an Outcast, The Miracle of Lourdes, A Cambodian Ceremony, Richard Wagner, and other articles. The Great South in this number is about Florida, accompanied with splendid illustrations.

THE Southern Cultivator for November is well stored with articles and selections suited to our Southern climate and soil. It is one of our best agricultural publications. Published at Atheus, Georgia, at $2 per annum.

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE for November has: The New Hyperion, Where the Brown Stone Fronts Come From, The Genius of Conservatism, The Naturalist in Buzzard's Bay, Europe in America, and other articles.

APPLETON'S JOURNAL of October 24 has a fine table of contents. We note especially: John Everett Millais, The Manx Cat, The Prisons of London, John Lawrence Toole, Zigzags on the Hudson Highlands.

BRAINARD'S MUSICAL WORLD.—The October number of this popular musical monthly is on our table, and contains the usual amount of choice new music and interesting and instructive musical reading.

THE publishers announce that after October 31 Every Saturday will be merged with Littell's Living Age. The Living Age is a valuable weekly, containing the cream of the periodical literature of the day.

ST. NICHOLAS for November, Scribner & Co., New York, publishers, is a very fine number. It will be a rich treat to the boys and girls who are fortunate enough to get it.

OLD AND NEW for November has: Jeffries Wyman, Possession, The Way We Live Now, Our Sketching Club, The Protestant Episcopal Church, and other articles.

DR. ROSSER has just come in from an eight weeks' campaign on his district, says the Richmond Christian Advocate, and reports three hundred conversions, three new churches dedicated, and $2,500 of debts on these churches provided for. This is a good eight weeks' work. But the doctor complains that he does not feel as if he had done anything—says he has been cooped in thirteen little counties, instead of having a continent for his field. He is as elastic as a brand-new elliptic spring.

DIED, October 20, 1874, Fannie Virginia, youngest child of Dr. and Mrs. J. J. Lyons, aged nine months and fourteen days. Gone to rest in the arms of that dear Savior who said: "Suffer the little children to come unto me."

HARDWARE, AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS, ETC.—Consumers and dealers in search of the largest and best-assorted stock of hardware, agricultural implements, iron, steel, nails, paints, metals, tools, cutlery, guns, etc., to be found in the Southwest, are referred to the advertisement of Messrs. A. Baldwin & Co., No. 74 Canal street, and Nos. 91, 93 and 95 Common street.

The old firm of Slocomb, Baldwin & Co. was well known throughout the South, and to the trade in the North and in Europe, and the public spirit and vigorous enterprise of the late lamented C. H. Slocomb gave to the house a popularity and extent of patronage which, by thorough acquaintance with the necessities of the trade, judicious management and a liberal policy to customers, the present firm, who are the successors, have been able to retain. The numerous friends of this well-known and influential family will be pleased to learn that Mrs. C. A. Slocomb and Mrs. A. D. Slocomb, the mother and widow of the late C. H. Slocomb, alluded to above, retain a leading interest in the firm, in commendam. The management of this vast importing and vending interest is intrusted to Messrs. A. Baldwin and C. Eustis, both judicious and capable merchants. Mr. Baldwin is president of one of our banks, and prominently connected with the management of several of our moneyed incorporations. Mr. Eustis is a grandson of the late Major Chotard, of Natchez, and grandson of the late General Eustis, United States army, and had been in the service of the firm, in a confidential and responsible position, for many years before he became a partner in the succession.

DR. TUTT'S VEGETABLE LIVER PILLS.

THE STARTLING DRAWBACK ON nearly all medicinal agents has ever been that in their process of purgation and purification they have also debilitated the system. To obviate this difficulty physicians have long sought for an agent that would

PURGE, PURIFY AND STRENGTHEN

AT ONE AND THE SAME TIME.

Their research has at last been rewarded by a discovery which fully realizes the fondest desires of the medical faculty, and which is justly regarded as the most important triumph that Pharmacy has ever achieved. This important desideratum is

Dr. Tutt's Vegetable Liver Pill,

which purifies the blood, and removes all corrupt humors and unhealthy accumulations from the body, and yet produces no weakness or lassitude whatever, but, on the contrary, tones the stomach and invigorates the body during the progress of its operation. It unites the heretofore irreconcilable qualities of a Strengthening Purgative and a Purifying Tonic.

Dr. Tutt's Pills are the most active and searching medicine in existence. They at once attack the very root of diseases, and their action is so prompt that in an hour or two after they are taken the patient is aware of their good effects. They may be taken at any time without restraint of diet or occupation. They produce neither nausea, griping nor debility, and as a family medicine they have no rival.

Price, 25 cents a box. Sold by all druggists.

TO THE SUFFERERS WITH RHEUMATISM.

In view of the numberless sufferers afflicted with this painful malady, I feel induced to offer to the public my "ANTI-RHEUMATIC MIXTURE," which medicine proves to be the only successful remedy in this line, for it always gives instant relief, and in most cases cures permanently.

During the last fifteen years I have cured thousands of people, in this State and city, of this dreadful disease, with this medicine; and, what astonishes most, the patient recovered by the use of a single bottle of it. This medicine cures nothing but Rheumatism, and should the patient not recover by using the first bottle of it, that patient is not afflicted with Rheumatism at all. This being the first time of making any discovery known to the public after fifteen years of most successful results, I hope the sufferers will take advantage of this rare remedy, and by doing so add their names to the thousands already cured by it.

The Child's Corner.

MICE.

BY GEORGE COOPER.

They break the kitchen windows
And overturn the chairs;
They cut the doors and tables—
Much wicked work is theirs.
Your watch they often handle,
And sometimes let it fall;
Which fact is quite surprising
When told of rodents small.

They hide your books and papers,
Unlock the doors and gates;
They revel in the pantry
And rattle down the plates;
They fill your boots with pebbles,
And, to your great dismay,
A garret full of pussies
Can't keep the knaves away.

But mice don't slam the shutters,
And sail your hats for boats,
And give away to beggars
Your pantaloons and coats.
At last you muse on Darwin,
And, much to your annoy,
You find those mice developed
Into that youngest boy.

About Footmen.

Has the young reader of this ever read the story of Marco Polo, the Venetian, who, six hundred years ago, traveled through Tartary and China, and, coming back nineteen years later, wrote a book containing accounts of such wonderful sights and strange adventures that his bosom friends would not believe him, and begged him, even when on his death-bed, to retract the falsehoods he had published? But Marco stuck to them, declaring that every word he had written was true. After many years other travelers have shown that Marco had really not told half the marvelous things he had seen in the countries which he had visited. Among many other wonderful things which he describes in a most fascinating way, he tells of the first pony express and mail service that probably ever existed in the world. Wherever he traveled in Tartary, Marco Polo says he saw the "couriers of the kahn," as the Emperor's swift messengers, who carried letters from city to city, were called. Day and night they flitted by him, on horseback and on foot, over the great highways; "never stopplug," he writes, "for an instant, save at the post-stations," where fresh horses or runners were always on hand.

There were both mounted and foot couriers among the Tartars. The stations for horsemen were twenty-five miles apart. Each courier had to ride this distance in two hours on a single horse. At the station, however, both horse and rider had a good long rest, for a fresh horse and fresh courier were ready to take his message and speed onward with it to the next station, where in turn the jadded horse and rider would find rest, while the message would speed onward in the hands of another courier on a fresh, fleet steed. The foot couriers had stations three miles apart. When the message was to be carried, it would be given to a foot messenger, who would instantly start running with might and main to the next station, where he would deliver the message to the courier in waiting. The trained couriers could go the distance in a very short time, without much injury to themselves, and, indeed, without much fatigue.

Foot couriers of the same kind were in use in England about one hundred and fifty years ago, though not employed by the monarchs of that country, but by private gentlemen and noblemen. It was their duty to run by the side or in the rear of the coaches when their masters were traveling or riding for pleasure. These attendants were called "footmen," as the attendants on carriages nowadays are called; but the first footmen did not ride on the box with the drivers, or on the seat behind, as now. And the footmen in past days accompanied the coaches, not to open the door for their masters and mistresses, as in the present time, but for a purpose you will never guess, I am sure. They ran after the carriage to help it out of the mud and mire! In the "good old times"—which, for all that you may hear said in praise of them, had not half the pleasures and conveniences, nor, indeed, half the virtue and goodness of the present time—the public roads in England were so poor that it was almost impossible to travel over them; every few miles the footmen had to help the coach out of the mire. When "gay Prince Charley from over the water," who was afterward King Charles the Second, went to visit another prince, his coach-and-six was six hours in going nine miles! After the roads were improved, the footmen died out, or rather were replaced by what were called "guards." These were strong, stout men, who rode on the stage-coach or followed it on horseback, partly to protect it from robbery, but mainly to help it out of the mud. When the stage-coaches gave way to railway cars, the guards became porters and brakemen.—From "The Pony Express," in St. Nicholas for September.

Effect for Cause.

BY MRS. PROSSER.

"Caw! caw! what's the matter, neighbor?" said one rook to another, building in the same tree.

"Matter enough; all my beautiful work that looked so clever yesterday destroyed by the gales that blew last night."

"Caw! caw!" said the first, flying down to survey the ruin. "I should have been in the same plight, neighbor, if I had not been so snug in the fork of yon branch. Yours is a pleasant place truly, if you are able to keep it."

"But I cannot keep it. Three times now has my labor been in vain. All blown down. Caw! caw! caw!"

By this time many builders had gathered around the desolated nest. "Friends," said one, sidling along a branch rather above them, "it is too bad; it is really a pity! Your hearts must have ached, as mine did, to see the ground of the avenue strewed with sticks and twigs, scattered about in dismal profusion, showing what the devastations of last night were; it is high time to put an end to such evils."

"Caw! caw!" cried the rooks. "What are we to do?"

"I will tell you," said the orator. "Go to yon brazen bird on the top of the church-tower. I have noticed that whenever he turns his head to the willows our nests are in danger. Tell him plainly that if he will look that way we will peck his eyes out."

"Caw! caw!" said the rooks, and, rising in a cluster and wheeling round, they soon settled on the church-tower. The weathercock was staring hard at the northeast point, and could not see them till they had marshaled themselves on the battlements in front of him. When they had finished their harangue of complaints, reproaches and threats, he creaked out:

"He! he! he! Excuse me, gentlemen, but I should have given you rooks credit for more wisdom. Break your bills, if you please, in pecking out my eyes. When you have done you will be in the same place that you are now. If you could manage to lay hold of the northeast wind and punish him, you would gain your end, and I would turn round with pleasure; but, as that would be a difficult business, the best advice I can give you is to go back and build where he cannot injure you, or else to stay building till he has done blowing."—Interior.

How a Coat Used to be Made. Boys in these days who can go to a clothing store, try on a coat, and when they find one that suits, pay for it and take it home, may be interested to know how boys came by their coats in the old times. Hon. Amasa Walker tells this story:

"After I had obtained the wool for my coat, and carried it a long distance to be carded, I found the parties overwhelmed with business. Everybody desired their wool carded as well as I, and I was obliged to wait the natural course of events, which meant two weeks. I returned home, and, when the two weeks had elapsed, again presented myself at the mill, and inquired for the wool. It would be done in less than another week. It was done when I next visited them, and I took my possession home. My mother was quite delighted on my arrival, and at once set to work to spin it on a great wheel. At the appointed time I made another journey on horseback, with my bundle behind me, to the cloth store at Knoxville. I was obliged to be contented with receiving a promise of the cloth in three weeks. When that time had gone by, I went again, and had to wait a long time, but finally obtained my treasure and went home. After three weeks' delay and disappointment, Uncle Daniel gave me the cloth for my surtout, and then Aunt Debby, the tailoress, had to be engaged to make it. Aunt Debby could not come for some days, but at last, after more hardships in going for her at early sunrise on a cold, frosty day, and waiting for her to finish a job, she was obtained, and the hard-earned garment was at last completed, as well as my brother's clothes."

Purity of Character.—Over the outer coat of plum and apricot there grows a bloom more beautiful than the fruit itself—a soft, delicate powder that overspreads its rich colors. Now, if you strike your hand over that, and it is once gone, it is gone forever; it only appears once. The flower that hangs in the morning impearled with dew—arrayed with jewels—once shake it, so that the beads roll off, and you may sprinkle water over it as you please, yet it can never be made again what it was when the dew fell gently on it from heaven.

On a frosty morning you may see the panes of glass covered with landscapes, mountains, lakes and trees, blended into a beautiful fantastic picture. Now lay your hand upon the glass, and by the scratch of your finger, or by the warmth of the palm, all the delicate tracery will be obliterated.

So there is in youth a beauty and purity of character, which, when once touched and defiled, can never be restored—a fringe more delicate than frost-work, which, when torn and broken, will never be repaired. When a young lad or girl leaves the parents' house, with the blessings of a mother's tears still wet upon the cheek, if early purity of character be once lost, it is a loss that can never be made up again. Such is the consequence of crime. Its effect cannot but be in some way felt, though by God's mercy it may be forgiven.—Early Days.

Water Running up Hill.—Did any of you ever see water run up hill? I've always kept my eyes open (at least when I was awake,) but as long as I've looked at the brook that flows near my pulpit, I've never yet seen it try to run up hill. But a bird who heard a naval officer talking about it, told this to me:

There is, in the Atlantic ocean, a warm water river or current, called the gulf stream, that really, of its own accord, flows up an inclined plane from south to north. He said that, according to scientific men, this warm stream starts at three thousand feet below the surface of Hatteras, and in the course of about one hundred and thirty miles rises, or runs up hill, with an ascent of five or six feet to the mile.

What makes it? Ah! that is more than Jack knows. More than the bird knew. More than the officer knew, either, I guess.

Shall any one ever know? Why not? Wise people are learning new things all the time, and why may they not find out the why and wherefore of this queer thing?—St. Nicholas.

When the Duke of Edinburg visited Birmingham, the other day, a fervid old lady elbowed her way to the front of the crowd, exclaiming: "God bless you! How's your dear mother?"

Those who are very difficult in choosing wives seem as if they would take none of nature's ready-made works, but want a woman manufactured particularly to their order.—Hawthorne.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Soup-Making.

There is no way in which the comfortable abundance of a table may be better insured, while at the same time a strict eye is kept upon economical expenditure of means, than by an almost daily addition of soup to the family dinner. From the careless, slovenly manner in which it is too often prepared, many acquire an almost invincible repugnance to this otherwise palatable and nutritious article of diet. It is only when concocted by an indifferent cook that soup deserves the contemptuous sobriquet of "slops," so often applied to it.

It is surprising from what a scanty allotment of material a dainty dish of soup may be supplied. Let a roast of beef be consumed to the very bone, a turkey or pair of fowls deprived of every joint, yet if the carcass is put away it furnishes at once the needed basis. The French understand this to perfection, and we read that in Parisian kitchens a closed vessel containing the "potage" is ever at the fireside, awaiting any and every contribution the skillful grisette anon supplies from the surplus of other dishes in process of preparation. But we propose to give directions suited to American habits and tastes. The following hints, we trust, will not be found untimely, and are extracted from the manuscript recipe-book of an old and famous Virginian housekeeper.

In the first place, observe always to lay your meat in the bottom of the pan or pot, cutting the meat up, or, if a bone, cracking it well. A lump of butter adds richness, but is not necessary. Select such herbs and vegetables as you prefer, cut them up very small and lay over the meat, with a very little water and a cautiously small piece of salt. Cover the vessel with a close-fitting lid and set it by a slow fire; this will draw out all the virtue of herbs and roots, giving the soup a different flavor from what is imparted by putting the full quantity of water in at first. Turn the meat frequently. When the gravy produced is almost dried up, fill your pot with a sufficient quantity of water to make soup for your family. To a large shank-bone of beef three quarts or even one gallon is not too much to allow.

When your soup is done take it off the fire to cool, and skim thoroughly from grease. Put it on again, and be sure not to dish it up unless boiling hot. Be careful to add salt and other highly-flavored condiments sparingly; every table is provided with salt-cellar and casters, so that a deficiency in these respects may be easily rectified; not so an over-quantity. If other thickening than the vegetables used is deemed advisable, brown the flour for all soups save chicken, veal and oyster soup.

Exhaustion of the Brain.—Dr. Radcliffe, in his recent Croonian lectures, is reported to have discussed, at much length and very acutely, the subject of brain exhaustion, so common at the present day. After describing the leading symptoms, such as loss of memory, depression of spirits, increased or lessened sleepiness, unusual irritability, epileptiform condition of the nerves, and sometimes transitory coma, he argues against urging the patient to eat heartily, believing that such a practice tends to develop the disease; he equally opposes the training diet system, as generally starving the nerve tissues by excluding hydrocarbons from food; nor should the patient be urged to work more than is natural under the circumstances, nor to rest from headwork, in many cases cerebral exhaustion being intensified by the brain lying fallow; if there is undue sleeplessness, the head should lie low on the pillow, and if undue sleepiness, it should be kept high.

Feeding Cattle.—For the same reason given for feeding hogs early, begin to feed at once such cattle as are designed for beef. A moderate quantity of grain in connection with a good pasture will fatten them rapidly during this and next month. The great waste of feeding unground corn may be obviated by having one store hog to every head of cattle to run in the pastures with them. Milch cows, if well fed, will make more and better butter during this and next month than at any other season. Pumpkins make an excellent addition to their food, and corn meal—even two quarts daily—adds very much to the richness of the milk. Give salt once a week.

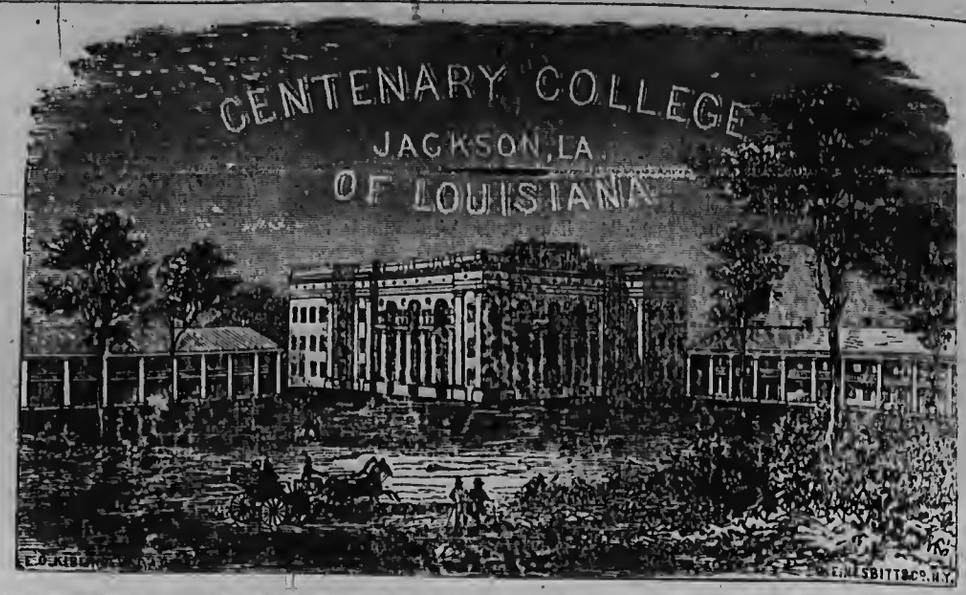
The following recipe, taken from an English paper, is said to make a good Scotch tweed entirely impervious to rain: "In a bucket of soft water put half a pound of sugar of lead and half a pound of powdered alum; stir this at intervals until it becomes clear; then pour it off into another bucket, and put the garment therein; let it be in twenty-four hours, and then hang it up to dry without wringing it."

Variegated-Leaved Almond.—A handsome strong-growing, variegated-leaved almond has been originated in France. The leaves are of a fine green, marked with white streaks, and in this respect strongly resemble those of the variegated-leaved Nagundo. Should it withstand our hot sun it will be a very desirable acquisition to our gardens.

Cleaning Stoves.—Stove luster, when mixed with turpentine and applied in the usual manner, is blacker, more glossy and more durable than when mixed with any other liquid. The turpentine prevents rust, and when put on an old rusty stove will make it look as well as new.

French Toast.—One egg, about one cup of milk, a very little salt; mix well together; dip in thin slices of bread (this is sufficient for about six slices) and fry on a griddle. This buttered is very nice, is quickly prepared, and is a good way to use stale bread.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.



THE NEXT TERM OF THIS VENERABLE INSTITUTION OPENS ON THE FIRST MONDAY IN OCTOBER, 1874.

Faculty.—REV. C. O. ANDREWS, A. M., President, and Professor of Mental and Moral Science, Political Economy and International Law; REV. A. R. HOLCOMBE, A. M., Professor of Mathematics and Adjunct Professor of Natural Science; G. H. WILEY, A. M., Professor of Ancient and Modern Languages; ——— ———, Professor of Natural Science; THOMAS J. KERNAN, A. M., Principal of the Preparatory Department and Adjunct Professor of Modern Languages.

Charges.—Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in College, $60; Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in Preparatory Department, $40; Contingent expenses, $5. A matriculation fee of $5 must be paid on entering any regular college class. One-half the charges must be paid when the student enters; the other half on the beginning of the second term, March 1.

Board.—Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be had in the best families for $20 per month. Day-boarding with the same families, $10 per month. Rooms provided in the dormitories free of rent. Board to be paid in advance at least one month.

Location.—This institution is located in the lovely village of Jackson, about twelve miles from Bayou Sara, in a grove of pine, magnolia, oak and beech. The location is remarkable for its beautiful woodlands, its bland and delightful atmosphere, its pure water, its unrivaled healthfulness, and its cultivated and refined society.

When Founded.—The college was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and ceded to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845.

Alumni.—Its Alumni numbers two hundred and three, and they are to be found in the most honorable and useful stations in the land.

Apparatus and Cabinet.—The college possesses a valuable set of Philosophical, Astronomical and Chemical Apparatus, and also a well-selected Mineralogical and Geological Cabinet. The apparatus includes a Theodolite, Sextant, Compass, Chronometer, Atwood's Machine, Whirling Tables, Electrical Machine, Air Pump, various combinations of the Mechanical Powers, Batteries, Chemical Tests, etc., sufficient for a thorough and extended course of observations and experiments. Steps have been taken by the Board of Trustees to put these in thorough repair.

Literary Societies.—There are two regular Literary Societies connected with the institution. These are of great utility to young men acquiring a liberal education—improving them in the art of public speaking, making them in some degree familiar with the proceedings of deliberative bodies, and in cultivating systematic business habits. Each Society has a convenient hall and a well-selected Library—about one thousand six hundred volumes each, which, added to the College Library of two thousand volumes, makes over five thousand volumes in the college.

Buildings.—The Trustees are determined to continue the repairs on the buildings till completed. The grand Center Building is a noble specimen of architectural beauty and adaptation to the purposes of its erection. The wings, built of solid brick, present each a front of two hundred feet, with upper and lower galleries the entire length, supported by Tuscan columns, and with the center making in the perspective a continuous front of seven hundred feet.

Preparatory Department.—In the Preparatory Department students are fitted for regular college classes, or may obtain a thorough English or commercial education.

The Faculty.—Its Faculty are men of experience and success in teaching.

Scientific.

A MASTODON lately found in Wilton, Iowa, and described by Dr. C. E. Witham, is probably the largest known. Its length was eighteen feet, exclusive of tusks and tail, and its height twelve feet. This considerably exceeds the size of the Cohoes or the Warren mastodon. It is unfortunate that the Wilton skeleton is quite imperfect. Comparing a single bone, the scapula of the Wilton mastodon measures three feet five inches in length, by two feet four and one-half inches, and weighs fifty-one and one-half pounds. The Cohoes scapula measures two feet nine inches, and weighs fifty pounds.

THE journal of the Linnean Society for June has a paper by Mr. Bentham, of exceeding great value to those who are studying the composite plants. He shows that many characters which have been relied on to distinguish genera and species are so uniform through many forms as to be practically useless. For generic characters he prefers, in the first place, sexual differences, next di- and trimorphism, then differences in the pistil, and so on in order, as follows: the fruit, androecium, corolla, calyx, ultimate inflorescence and bracts, foliage, habit and geographical distribution. There are about ten thousand species in this order known.

THE VAPOR BATH IN HYDROPHOBIA.—According to Dr. Buisson, of Lyons, an almost certain cure for the bite of a mad dog consists in subjecting the patient to the influence of a vapor bath, heated from one hundred and thirty-four to one hundred and forty-four degrees Fahrenheit, for seven successive days, for the purpose of throwing him into a profuse perspiration, and eliminating the poison through the skin. When the disease has actually declared itself it will be sufficient to take one vapor bath in which the temperature is made to rise rapidly to ninety-eight degrees Fahrenheit, and then slowly to one hundred and twenty-seven degrees, the patient keeping his room until the case is complete. A few hot bricks placed in a pail of water over which the patient sits on a cane-bottomed chair, a large blanket covering him in from his shoulders down to the floor, can be easily improvised, and is said to answer the purpose of a vapor bath admirably. The remedy is the result of the personal experience of Dr. Buisson, he having been subjected to the attack of a rabid dog, and affected with all the symptoms of hydrophobia. Having a theory in regard to the efficiency of vapor baths in such cases, he tried the experiment, and found that when the temperature reached one hundred and twenty-five degrees Fahrenheit the symptoms disappeared as if by magic. Since then he has treated more than eighty persons bitten by mad animals, and, according to his account, has not lost a single case.

THE LOBSTER.—The Boston Globe says: Among the many prominent enterprises in this city there are few of which so little is known and which are more interesting than the lobster business. There are six firms engaged in this trade, with a combined capital of over $200,000, requiring nineteen vessels and a large number of boats, giving employment to over five hundred men. There are three million lobsters boiled in this city each year, and one-half of this number are consumed in Boston and vicinity, and the balance find a ready market in New York, Buffalo, Chicago, and other inland cities and towns. All lobsters suitable for boiling are caught from Cape Cod to Cape Sable, while those caught south of Cape Cod are of no value. With the present appliances—skill and knowledge of the habits of these "fish"—only two-thirds the amount of former years are now caught, so the constant drains by packers east of Portland has fearfully reduced the supply. It is thought that unless government protects the growth of lobsters, in a very few years the scarcity will be so great that as an article of diet lobsters will be no more, as the price will be too high for consumption. The only protection which can be given to the growth of the lobster is that all small ones be left to mature on the grounds from which they are caught; also that the female lobster be protected during the spawning season. Each female lobster carries from two thousand to four thousand eggs, which mature in from two to three years. All lobsters come to the shore to shed their shell about once a year, but this depends in great measure upon its growth, as it is discovered that the shell is not shed if the lobster is not growing. The growth of lobsters, with good feeding grounds, is about one pound a year, and the most desirable size is from two to three pounds. Lobsters weighing nearly thirty pounds have been brought into this market, but not for several years. The old notion that these paint-tempting "fish" should not be eaten during the months of May, June, July and August, the months which do not contain the letter "R" in their names, is fast passing away, as there is a steady increase of consumption during these months. Many plans have been tried in Maine and Massachusetts for the propagation and raising of lobsters, but in no case have the results been satisfactory. The nature of these animals requires space and variety of food, with an even temperature and a large supply of water. It is known that lobsters have traveled twenty miles in ten days. Their food consists of clams, muscles and periwinkles, and whenever lobsters have been confined it has been discovered that they lose in weight. There will be not far from eight million cans of lobsters packed by Boston and Portland packing-houses this season, all of which find a ready market in all parts of the world. This great demand is what is threatening to deprive of what nature has bountifully supplied us, and, unless New Englanders awake to the importance of preserving the supply, its drain will prove detrimental to a important interest.

IT IS easy in the world to live after the world's opinion.

Total	19,379

On Saturday the market opened in face of a decline of 1-16d. at Liverpool, and sales of only 5 000 bales, but buyers, nevertheless, came forward with considerable spirit. The movement, however, was checked by moderate supplies, and the stringent pretensions of factors for all desirable kinds, and up to noon the sales did not exceed 1,700 bales, although ten buyers participated in the business; after which (the dispatches from New York reporting a decline of ⅛c.) the demand was met rather more freely, particularly toward the close, and the entire business summed up 2,900 bales, quotations being barely maintained. On Monday, with nothing in the dispatches to have any marked influence, the movement at the opening appeared sluggish, but there was, nevertheless, a fair inquiry, and up in noon about 800 bales had changed hands, partly at previous rates and partly at a concession of ⅛c; after which, as factors evinced a disposition to meet the demand freely, the movement became more animated, resulting in further sales of 2,2 0 bales, making a total of 3,250 bales. Middling sold at both 14⅛@14⅝c. On Tuesday the market appeared to be very quiet at the opening, factors being unwilling to meet the views of buyers, but later in the day, under a decline of 1-16d. at Liverpool, and ⅛c. in spots at New York, factors evinced a disposition to make the required concessions, and the movement became quite animated, resulting in sales of 5,700 bales. Prices exhibited some irregularity, but the closing rates indicated a further decline of ⅛c., to which we have conformed our quotations.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 11,850 bales, against 11,850 for the corresponding time last week and 8,850 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 116,279 bales, against 91,328 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 127,173 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 49,344 bales to Great Britain, of 5,083 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 12,546 to France. NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

VOL. 20. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 5, 1874. NO. 45.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, Oct. 28.—The Tribune says: Much sooner than was expected, the contest on ritualism came to a close in the Episcopal Convention. The large majority given in favor of the new canon was probably secured not by speeches and arguments during the debate, but by the explanation of the committee.

Their spokesman said that the canon, while presenting a mere opinion that certain ritualistic acts and practices were of doubtful doctrine, by no means settled the question or forbade the acts, but simply paved the way for an investigation and trial when they took place. The real battle over ritualism is to be fought when their cases come up for trial. The vital question is thus postponed.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., Oct. 28.—Republican Chancellor McCraw, whose division embraces nearly one-third of the State, in a published letter, says: "The chancery division over which I preside extends across the black belt into what are known as the white counties, both in north and south Alabama. Since the commencement of the present political canvass I have held terms of the Chancery Court in the various counties of eastern Alabama to the Florida line on the south. I have been in constant communication, as well as in personal contact, with all the members of the bar and leading citizens of both political parties, all of whom conversed freely and fully as to the present status of political affairs. I have been present at gatherings of the masses of all colors, and have listened attentively to the speakers on both sides. I am rejoiced to say that I do not know of a single case of outrage or personal violence for opinion's sake in all the length and breadth of this division, nor have I heard of even one authenticated case. I have no hesitancy in saying that citizens of all colors and all political parties can fully and freely express their political opinions just as, and when and where they please, without the least fear of any outrage or personal violence. The outside world is deceived by the terrible passion into which letter-writers and political editors have lashed themselves. There is not a county in east Alabama in which any man—Democrat, Conservative, Republican or Radical—may not publicly declare his sentiments with as little fear of molestation as in any State in all the broad Union."

WASHINGTON, Oct. 29.—President Grant has proclaimed Thursday, November 26, for a day of thanksgiving, and the laying aside of all political contentions and secular occupations, to observe such day as a day of rest, thanksgiving and praise.

CHICAGO, Oct. 29.—The following dispatch was received at headquarters to-day:

Wichita Agency, Indian Territory.—The Indian war in this nation is rapidly collapsing. General Davidson reports through scouts that Major Schofield, with his column, has captured on Elk Creek sixty-nine Necouee warriors and two thousand ponies. This party is of the worst character, and is accompanied by their families.

I met Captain Carpenter with his column to-day, in hot pursuit of a large party of Kiowas, who are trying to get to Fort Sill to surrender before he can overtake them. He had been in pursuit two days. The party is thought to be Lone Wolf's.

PHIL. SHERIDAN,
Lieut. General Commanding.

OMAHA, Oct. 30.—The weather for the past three days has been very cold, with high winds. The first snow of the season fell yesterday. Ice formed half an inch thick to-day.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 2.—The fires in the pine forests in the southern part of Fairfield county sent such a dense smoke into Lancaster to-day that gas lamps had to be lighted. Forest fires between Bainbridge and Baurueville, Ross county, so destroyed crops, fences, live stock and houses as to leave many farmers destitute. Measures are being taken for their relief.

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—The diphtheria is reported to be spreading rapidly here. There were fifty deaths from that disease the past week.

BOSTON, Nov. 3.—Returns from 203 towns give Talbot 58,368, Gaston 55,818. Same towns last year gave Washburne 43,652, Gaston 34,368; these figures do not include the vote in Boston. Last returns of this city are: Talbot 10,460, Gaston 16,400.

(Note.—These returns indicate the election of 6 Democratic Congressmen from Massachusetts, with one more in doubt. Present delegation 11 Republicans.)

9 P. M.—Ninety-nine towns, without Boston, give Talbot 24,519, Gaston 21,095. The same towns last year gave Washburne 19,184, Gaston 10,818.

The majority against Butler is still rolling at Salem. At Salem he was nearly a thousand behind his ticket, and his defeat is overwhelming. In the seventh and eighth Congressional districts, as near as can be figured out, Williams and Ayer are both about a thousand behind the Democratic candidates.

At this hour the streets are full of jubilant Democrats, who persist in the belief that Gaston is elected Governor.

One hundred and twelve towns give Talbot 29,666, and Gaston 27,780, against last year, 23,350 Republican and 15,439 Democrat. This does not include Boston, Worcester and Lowell. The Traveler (Republican) concedes the State to Gaston, as this city will give him a majority of from 6,000 to 7,000. This seems to be the general opinion, though the close vote may change the result.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 3.—The feeling in Republican circles shows no improvement. The best cyphering shows two or three majority on either side in this count. The Conservatives discount all doubtful Southern districts, basing their hopes upon possible, and in the main upon probable gains in the North.

It is whispered that high official circles have dispatches that Louisiana is lost to the Republicans by 14,000, and that the Conservatives have four members of Congress.

NEW YORK, Nov. 3.—The vote in this city complete is as follows: For Governor—Dix 45,187, Tilden 87,248. Mayor—Wickham 57,729, Wales 35,789, Ottendorfer 24,772 Register—Hayes 61,038, Jones 71,425.

NASHVILLE, Nov. 3.—The election was quiet. The vote throughout the State was at least a fourth less than in August. The Democrats carried the State by from 25,000 to 30,000 majority, electing the entire Congressional delegation, except the first and second districts, which are doubtful. Both branches of the Legislature are largely Democratic.

GALVESTON, Nov. 3.—The returns from all the principal towns in this State show a large Democratic majority in every district. Texas sends six Democrats to Congress.

FOREIGN.

BOMBAY, Oct. 30.—The cotton crop in the Presidency of Bombay is in a good condition, and promises the largest yield ever recorded. The crop is a fortnight in advance of that of 1873. Picking has fairly commenced.

Education in the South.

The trustees of the Peabody educational fund held their annual session in this city on Thursday and Friday. Robert C. Winthrop, president of the board, was not present, but wrote a letter from Berne, Switzerland, which was read before the board. Dr. Sears, the general agent of the board, made a very voluminous and interesting report of his work for the fifteen months since the last meeting of the board.

The report says the period has been one of signal success in some of the more northerly States, while in those further south ground had been lost. In Virginia $33,425 had been distributed. In North Carolina the want of active county supervision has been greatly felt; $12,300 has been distributed. In South Carolina, except in the city of Charleston, scarcely any schools are kept throughout the year. Nothing has been done except to contribute $200 for a school in Spartanburg. Georgia is feeble and faltering in its action; $10,350 has been distributed. Florida has raised on its own account $81,000 a year; contributions from the Peabody fund, $10,200. Alabama shows a partial recovery from the inactivity of the preceding year, and has received $10,000 from the fund; distributed $10,000. In Mississippi education has made unexpected progress; distributed $4,400. In Louisiana, $3,250. No money was distributed in Texas, Arkansas, $8,400. Tennessee, $36,800. West Virginia, $15,000.

The plan of the general agent has been to co-operate with the school commissioners in each State, and only upon his recommendation is money given from the fund. Certain conditions have been made necessary, and the non-compliance at the end of the year causes a forfeiture by the school of the sum that was to have been awarded it. These conditions are that the school must contain so many pupils; must have so many teachers (one to every fifty pupils;) must be graded, etc. At the end of the year, if all the conditions asked are not complied with, then the school is marked "Failed," and they receive no money from the fund.

Messrs. Evarts, Clifford and Whitmore presented a report declaring that compulsory legislation by Congress in favor of "mixed schools" will be pernicious to the interests of education, and worse for the colored population.—New York Observer.

CRUELTY TO PRISONERS.—In reply to a resolution of the House, calling on him for the number of prisoners held on both sides, and that died during the war, Stanton made the following report:

	In prison.	Died.
United States soldiers	260,000	22,576
Confederates	200,000	26,500

That is, the Confederate States held as prisoners sixty-one thousand men more than the Yankees held of Confederates; and yet the deaths of Yankee prisoners fell below those of Confederates six thousand.

Two Yankee prisoners died out of every twenty-three; while two out of every fifteen Confederates died in Yankee dungeons. The mortality was fifty per cent. greater in Yankee prisons than in ours! And yet we are continually reminded of the wonderful "humanity" of the Yankee officials; and the Southern officials are generally held up as first-class specimens of "fiends."—Christian Observer.

ON NOVEMBER 7, says the Picayune, the pioneer steamship of the line between New Orleans and Vera Cruz will sail from this port, and thereafter a ship will follow every three weeks. It behooves the merchants of our city to avail themselves promptly of this new field of operations, and we would urge the journals of the West to bring the subject before the merchants and manufacturers of that section.

THE way to keep down envy is to keep up charity.

From the Work.

AUTAUGA AND CLANTON MISSION, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: I have just closed a meeting of three days and four nights. We have had a precious time. The visible results were eighteen conversions, twenty-one accessions and several reclamations. Since my last quarterly meeting, in July, I have had seventy conversions and ninety-eight accessions to the church. Pray for us. Thanks be to the great Head of the church!

Yours in Christ,
R. A. MIEARS.

OCTOBER 24, 1874.

TRENTON CIRCUIT, POLKVILLE, MISSISSIPPI.—Mr. Editor: We commenced our protracted meetings on the first day of August, at Caney Creek, at our third quarterly meeting, and have just finished the last protracted appointment. We have had good meetings. The churches have been revived, backsliders reclaimed; sinners convicted, mourners converted, and the cause of Christ's kingdom very much revived. We have had some good revivals on the work, with an ingathering of souls to Christ's church. There have been some twenty children dedicated to the Lord this year, and ten adults baptized. Prayer meetings are held at every appointment on the work save one. Class meetings are kept up at several churches on the work. There is a good spiritual interest among the people of the circuit. There are at this time two good plank churches, worth $800 or $1,000, on this work, which will add to the convenience of the people of each church very much. Methodism is gaining ground in this section very fast this year.

JOHN H. EVANS, P. C.

POLKVILLE, MISS., Oct. 21, 1874.

WAYNE CT., MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The protracted meeting commenced at Pleasant Hill church on Sunday, October 18, and continued five days. Truly the Lord has been gracious to us in pouring out his Holy Spirit in showers of divine grace upon his church, in which we were made to rejoice on account of his love shed abroad in our hearts. The church, though in a backslidden condition, was reclaimed; those who seemed to take but little interest in the meeting at first were shouting the praises of God before it closed. There were six or eight accessions to the church, several of whom testified, by giving their hand to the preacher, that they had passed from death unto life. Blessed be the name of the Lord for his wonderful works among the children of men. There were some provisions made at the closing exercises of this meeting for the building of a church-house, as we have not one suitable for worship. The good people of Pleasant Hill church have contributed for this purpose; and by taking this step the probabilities are that we will soon have a church-house reared up where we can worship the Lord under our own vine and fig-tree.

Yours truly, C. C. CLARK.

OCTOBER 23, 1874.

HOUSTON, TEXAS.—Mr. Editor: Through your columns permit me to say that God has smiled graciously upon our church in Houston. Last spring we held services for two weeks, during which some fifteen persons professed conversion. We closed a protracted effort, a week since, of four weeks' continuance, during which twenty-five persons were brought "from darkness to light," the church greatly revived, and united in Christian love and zeal. Rev. A. E. Goodwyn, of Shreveport, gave us two weeks' effective help. Dr. J. B. Walker and Bro. Nabors, of Galveston, contributed greatly to our success; while our city preachers, Dr. Kavanaugh and Bro. Mitchell, rendered valuable services throughout the meeting. Rev. P. C. Archer was with us one night, and preached a pungent, pointed sermon. We have had an accession of more than fifty members to the church this Conference year.

We are now projecting repairs upon our church edifice that will add greatly to its attractiveness, as well as comfort. We purpose completing these improvements before our Conference meets, December 16.

Yours truly, N. A. CRAVENS.

TALLAHATTA CIRCUIT, SELMA DISTRICT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE. Mr. Editor: We have just closed a protracted meeting at Tallahatta church, on this work, which began on Saturday, the third of October, and continued six days. Our energetic and efficient presiding elder, Rev. A. J. Briggs, was with us during the entire meeting, and performed all the pulpit labor.

On Thursday—the last day of the meeting—Bro. Briggs preached on infant baptism in the morning, and on the mode in the evening; after which he administered the ordinance of baptism to nineteen and received twenty-five into the church. The discourses on baptism were greatly needed here, and have already been productive of great good. Especially was the sermon on infant baptism appreciated, from the fact that our people have never before been properly instructed from the pulpit on this important scriptural doctrine; and hedged in, as we are here, by Baptist influence and prejudice, too many of our Methodists have hitherto neglected to bring their children by baptism into the "ark." During this meeting twenty-six persons professed conversion, and the entire membership professed to have been greatly revived and blessed.

The day after the meeting closed at Tallahatta, Bro. Briggs, in company with our pastor, proceeded to Mount Pleasant—a church below, on this circuit—where, after preaching, they baptized twelve adults and four infants, and received twelve into the church, the fruits of a meeting recently held at that place.

During the present quarter Bro. Rice has received forty-five into the church, many of whom, we trust, will become strong pillars of our Zion. Yours fraternally,

J. L. PICKENS.

HOMER DISTRICT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: This has been a year of harvesting on the Homer district. There have been about nine hundred conversions, and between seven and eight hundred accessions to the church. The work has generally been greatly improved. On the Farmerville circuit there has been a most excellent new church built. There are also two camp grounds, where about one hundred have been converted. A new camp ground has been built on the Ouachita circuit, where one hundred were converted. Twenty-five or thirty have been converted at other places on the circuit. A good camp ground has been built on the Castor circuit, where about fifty professed faith in Christ. Vernon circuit has a new camp ground also, where fifty souls professed conversion, and seventy-five at other places. The circuit has a new parsonage under way, located at Vienna, which, we hope, will be paid for by Conference. Sparta has a camp ground where fifty were converted. Total on the circuit up to date, seventy-five. Arcadia has done a good work; about one hundred conversions, and arrangements are being made for a parsonage. Minden has also been blessed with the ingathering of souls. Up to date there have been nearly one hundred conversions. There are two revivals in progress now—one conducted by Bro. Miller, and the other by Bro. Shea. Haynesville circuit has a camp ground. The work has been greatly improved. About sixty have been added to the church. Homer circuit has also been greatly strengthened. About one hundred and twenty conversions, and nearly that number have been added to the church. A better corps of working preachers we have never had on a district, and we are profoundly thankful to the great Head of the church for the success that has attended our labors.

We regret the very meager collections for the church. Although large quantities of cotton have gone to market, but little money has been returned to the Lord's treasury. We are not ignorant of the truth that the country is embarrassed in all its temporal interests. When the day of prosperity will dawn again it takes more than human sagacity to tell. But is this political muddle and the comparative shortness of crops a sufficient excuse to withhold from the Lord's treasury? While we are able to pay taxes at the gates of the temple of mammon, we are able to pay into the Lord's treasury; and he looks upon his own with a jealous eye, and will demand it, with its proper interest, when he comes for final settlement.

AMITE CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: I have finished my round of protracted meetings for this year, only one of which I have had the time to report as they passed—the one at Adams' church. This circuit consists of four appointments. We have had a good meeting at each place.

We commenced a meeting at Salem church on Saturday before the second Sabbath in September, which lasted seven days. The presence of the Lord was manifested during the whole meeting. Bros. James E. Jagers and E. L. Tarver were with us. The membership was greatly strengthened in spirit, and increased in numbers by the addition of twenty-five persons, many of whom gave evidence of a saving faith in our Lord Jesus Christ.

Our next protracted meeting was at Liberty, commencing on Saturday before the first Sabbath in October, and lasting nine days. Here our church had been very weak, both numerically and in zeal. The social meetings of the church had entirely ceased, though the attendance on public worship was tolerably good. The result of this meeting was the accession of six members, the strengthening of the hearts of the older members; and last, though by no means least, the commencement of a regular prayer meeting every Wednesday night. The origin of this prayer meeting is largely due to the untiring energy and zeal of a most amiable young lady, who insisted so strongly on the male members to lead, and the female members to attend and sing, and otherwise assist, that the meeting was appointed and has been well attended. The Lord will surely bless that young lady and all like her, as well as their prayer meetings. We are greatly indebted to Bros. J. W. Sandoll and James A. Godfrey, of the Mississippi Conference, and Dr. John Sample and E. L. Tarver, local brethren, for valuable assistance in this meeting.

Our next and last protracted meeting was held at the Woodland schoolhouse, of which place it would probably be interesting to some of your readers to give a brief history. About five years ago Bro. James D. Roberts settled in that neighborhood, and succeeded in getting the services of Bro. A. Z. Young, a Presbyterian preacher, to fill an occasional appointment at the little school-house. Previous to this time there had been no preaching in that vicinity. Bro. Young zealously advocated the cause of Sabbath schools, and succeeded in getting one organized, which was continued some time by the indefatigable perseverance of Bro. Young, with the co-operation of Bro. Roberts and family; and to the efforts of Bro. Young and this Sabbath school we are indebted for the organization of a church, which was consummated by Bro. E. A. Flowers in 1872, with seventeen members; and thus we found them at the commencement of this Conference year. At the second quarterly meeting on this circuit, which was held at this place, there were eight persons added to the church, and at this meeting there were fifteen more, most of whom were happily converted, making a membership of forty souls. Bro. P. S. Petty preached for us once with great effect. Bro. J. E. Jagers was with us two days, preaching and praying with great power.

Mr. Editor, the work has been very absorbing for the past three months; so much so that there has been no time for retrospection. But now the year is well-nigh at an end, and we very naturally look at the results. The ground has been carefully gone over and the seed sown. The final results are in the hands of the Lord. There have been about sixty conversions and eighty-four accessions to the church. A movement is on foot to buy an eligible house and lot for a parsonage, which looks at this time as certain of success. When this is accomplished this circuit will be one of the best in the Mississippi Conference. To the Lord be all the honor for the good that has been accomplished, and may he continue the good work.

Yours respectfully,
JOHN RITCHEY, P. C.

ADAMS' CAMP GROUND, Oct. 26, 1874.

FORT DEPOSIT CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: At the beginning of the year three churches, viz: Fort Deposit, Letohatchie and Tabernacle, composed the work. The two first are situated on and the latter near the Montgomery and Mobile railroad. I've also organized a church at Calhoun, a station between Fort Deposit and Letohatchie, with sixteen members—good material; bought an excellent house, fitted it up nicely, and moved off independently. There have been additions at almost every appointment since, and the church now numbers thirty-four, with a flourishing Sunday school. It has already paid nearly $100 quarterage, and bids fair to do much more.

There has been a gracious revival in each of the churches. At Fort Deposit we began a meeting on the fourth Sunday in August. On Tuesday morning Bro. O. R. Blue, from Greenville station, joined me, and preached four days and nights. Then Bro. H. Urquhart, president of the Greenville school, came to our aid. Bros. Moss and Rencher, local, also rendered good service. On Sunday night I announced the close of the meeting, sung the doxology to "Sessions," and pronounced the apostolic benediction. The whole congregation, with but few exceptions, refused to be dismissed, and penitents began to rush voluntarily to the altar, asking the prayers of God's people. And oh! what a time ensued! The meeting continued until Wednesday night. Nineteen members were added.

On the third Sunday in September we commenced a meeting at Letohatchie; and as we thought there was but little material out of the church, the great aim was to get the membership revived. Signs of deep conviction were soon discovered, and when penitents were called the church almost unanimously came forward, and the preacher also felt that he ought to go. This scene was awfully solemn. On Tuesday night God poured the holy baptism upon the church, which swept like rushing wind over the whole congregation. The first sound that caught my ear was: "Victory!" which was wafted upon the night winds in various shouts and ascriptions of praise. This was kept up almost incessantly for two days and nights. Plenty of material now out of the church; penitents crowded the altar, anxiously inquiring the way. An intelligent young man, during a discourse upon "How Shall we Escape?" saw his deplorable condition, and, feeling that he would be lost if he did not begin immediate action, deliberately arose from his seat and went kneeling at the altar, and just as the sermon ended was powerfully converted. This young man gave the lot on which the church stands. See how God honors the gift in giving him salvation upon the very ground he had bequeathed to the Most High! At our last Quarterly Conference he was licensed to preach, and recommended to the next session of the Annual Conference. Our presiding elder, Rev. S. P. Richardson, came to our help on Saturday morning. Bro. Hanson Moss, who was converted and licensed to preach there, and recommended to the Conference from that church, came in on Sunday evening, and preached to his old friends out of the "ark:" "The harvest is past, the summer is ended," etc. This meeting closed with the church thoroughly revived and ten accessions.

Our other revivals were not so powerful, but resulted in much good. Up to date we have received seventy-four members.

The Sunday school interest is increasing; we have a good school at each church. This blessed enterprise is the nursery of the church. A large per cent. of the members received on this circuit, the present year, have come from the Sunday schools. We have prayer meeting at each church, and class meeting at one. Many of the young men be[gin] to pray in public, and ere long a great deficiency in the church will be supplied by working material. There is some improvement in family worship. A few new altars have been reared this year, and the foundation is being laid for others.

The finances on the work are coming up well. I have reason to expect that all the assessments will be met.

The presiding elder states that the number of accessions on the Union Springs district this year will amount to about eight hundred. He has about revolutionized the district on the subject of education. There are thirty-three Methodist teachers, and eight or nine hundred children being taught in our schools. Greenville now boasts of one of the best institutions of learning in the State. A handsome college building is anticipated there soon. Most of the material (brick) is upon the lot. May God speed education, for it is the "hand-maid of religion."

From Texas.

WINCHESTER, TEXAS, October 20, 1874.

MR. EDITOR: Cedar Creek circuit, Texas Conference, lies west of the Colorado river, partly in Bastrop and partly in Travis county. It has ten Sunday appointments—eight filled monthly by the writer, and two by President Stacey, of Austin Female College. It embraces a large scope of fine farming lands, and when more generally settled up by permanent residents will be a desirable section to live in. The lands, part "post oak" and "part prairie," will produce, when the seasons are favorable, from a half bale to a bale of cotton to the acre, and from twenty-five to fifty bushels of corn to the acre. Wheat does well, and the farmers are now preparing to raise wheat and other small grains, and less cotton. A flouring mill is being built, and one man has a thresher, and will soon have a reaper, so that in another year there will also be no difficulty in getting wheat harvested, threshed and ground. Land at present is very cheap, and can be bought, unimproved, at from $2 to $5, according to situation. Austin, the capital, is at present the main trading-point, being about thirty miles from the most southern part of the circuit. Other portions are only a few miles from market. Society is somewhat mixed. Some very sorry people here and the better citizens would willingly exchange these for good, thorough-going farmers and mechanics—sober, law-abiding men—who would be gladly welcomed among them and aided in procuring homes. Some of the farmers have large plantations on the Colorado river, and would furnish teams, and feed for the same, plows, etc., and give the laborer half the makes. We need a number of good families to come and settle permanently here, and develop the country, and build up society and good schools and churches. But specially do we need four or five good and acceptable local preachers, so considered at home, who will keep up regular weekly Sabbath appointments, and aid in protracted and camp meetings. One such, who has a family and force sufficient to work fifty or sixty acres of land, nearly equal to the Yazoo bottom lands, can get an excellent situation with a Methodist brother, in a good, plain community, where, and in the adjacent communities around within easy reach, he could preach every Sunday to good congregations, if good, be at home on Sunday morning, and ready for the farm on Monday morning. If this meets the eye of a local brother who fills the above required, let him write to Bill Fowler, Webberville, Travis county, Texas, immediately, as he will get it better to duplicate. Perhaps it would be better to duplicate his letter, as the first may miscarry.

Perhaps it may not be unacceptable to your readers to say that this circuit has had seasons of refreshing the past few weeks. We have held two camp meetings. At the first ten or twelve conversions and seven accessions, and the membership much benefitted. I mention, as one favorable result, a protracted prayer-meeting, held for weeks every night, at Webberville, four miles from the camp ground. The members attended our meeting and were much blessed, and hence their zeal and perseverance in the prayer-meeting. The second meeting resulted in twenty-one conversions, nineteen accessions, and the church greatly revived. Prayer meetings have been held weekly since, and a number of young converts pray in public. One of the converts is nearly sixty—a physician. He came into the vicinity professionally during the meeting, and had no intention of going to the camp ground—was careless and totally uncaneerned. Suddenly he was impressed with the thought: This may be the last opportunity to seek the salvation of my soul; and, deeply moved, he came to the ground, took one of the preachers aside, told his impressions, and desired the prayers of the church. He seems now a firm and decided Christian. Is this not a brand plucked out of the fire? At two protracted meetings we had about fifteen conversions and seventeen accessions. A revival spirit pervades the circuit and adjacent country.

WHERE ARE THE DEAD?

BY MRS. M. M. DUTCHER.

Where are the dead? Where have they gone?
We meet with them no more;
They've vanished like the breaking waves
Upon the ocean shore.

They've passed away from out our sight;
They left with noiseless tread;
In vain we watch for their return;
Where are those silent dead?

Go to that loved one as she lies,
So quiet on her pier;
And words of love and tenderness
Breathe softly in her ear.

Alas! 'tis vain. To those fond words,
She makes you no reply.
She still lies cold and motionless;
No love lights up her eye.

And now they sadly bear her out,
While all stand weeping round,
They hide that dear form from our sight
Within the cold, dark ground.

And is she dead? And must we drink
The bitter, bitter cup?
Oh, call to her, bid her return;
We cannot give her up!

A voice replies, so strangely sweet:
Your loved one is not dead;
Why do you mourn in selfish grief,
Why tears of anguish shed?

She has but crossed dark Jordan's stream,
And landed on the shore;
She's in her heavenly home at last,
Beyond the shining door.

And safe within that harbor now
She's free from grief and pain;
Why should you wish for her return?
Why call her back again?

In that bright land are many friends
You've numbered with the dead;
They've entered into endless life
Through Christ, the living head.

Then turn to him, O weary one;
Cling closely to his hand;
He'll guide you through life's troubled stream,
And bring you safe to land.

INFORMATION WANTED.

MR. EDITOR: On the second Sabbath in October, 1874, at Pleasant Ridge church, the Rev. P. M. Callaway, of Newton, Dale county, Alabama, took occasion to make an onslaught upon the Methodist Church because of her doctrine and practice; and in the course of his remarks asserted, in substance, that the Missionary Baptist Church was the only true church of the present time; that this church was neither of the Dissenters nor Protestants, because she had not originated from any church, but was the church organized by John the Baptist, and had existed ever since. Now the information that I want is, first, in reference to the church that John the Baptist organized. Will the reverend gentleman or some one else please tell me where the church or churches were located which were organized by their founder? Will he, in the second place, tell me the name or names of those churches? In the third place, will he tell me of the doctrine, polity and practice of that church or churches? And last, will he tell me where this information is to be found—in what book or books? If in the Bible, please give the book, chapter and verse? I ask for this information that my mind may be disabused, for I have never thus far believed the statement of Baptist preachers upon this important subject. But, after all, it may be that my want of confidence in such matters is the result of ignorance; and surely the minister of the gospel of the grace of God would not publicly make a statement from the pulpit that he could not prove by undoubted authority? Hence the above call.

Now, when the "brother" explains the above satisfactorily, I wish him to go still further, and tell me how it was and is that the Missionary Baptist Church of to-day has come down from the John the Baptist Church of the first part of the first century? In explaining this last-named question, will he tell me whether "the church" retained the name Baptist all along, or did she take other names? If so, why? I am already aware that some Baptist writers of church history claim that "the church" came down through a number of names and a multitude of doctrines—such names, for instance, as Montanists, Novatians, Donatists, Paulicians, Paterines, Arnoldists, Waldenses and Anabaptists. But as I read church history I find that these do not come in succession the one of the other, and therefore the chain is broken. Besides, the Baptists of to-day do not agree with all the above-named churches in all their doctrines and practices. For instance, the Montanists "denied the doctrine of the Triuity, but held that the Holy Ghost made Montanus his organ for delivering a more perfect form of discipline than what was delivered by his apostles. They suffered women to preach and baptize." "They baptized in the name of the Father, Son, and Montanus." This sect had its origin in the year A. D. 171. What became of the John the Baptist Church before this period? Since that time do Baptists indorse the above doctrine and practice? If not, what becomes of the chain (or line) of succession? If one link is struck out the whole chain drags. Besides, no chain is stronger than the weakest link in that chain.

Again, "Novatian," the founder of the Novatians in the year A. D. 250, "was baptized by pouring, and that, too, by a minister in the Church of Rome." How does this sound in the ears of Baptists of the present time?

Once more, "the year 653 is given as the time of their appearance," (Paulicians.) "They are said to be Dissenters." "The Paulelans, in imitation of Oriental philosophers, from whom the Gnostics and Manicheans derived their origin, considered eternal matter as the seat and source of all evil; but they believed at the same time, like many of the Gnostics, that this matter, endued from all eternity with life and motion, had produced an active principle, which was the fountain of vice, misery and disorder." "They refused to celebrate the holy institution of the Lord's Supper." "They rejected the books of the Old Testament."

These will suffice as specimens of the "line" of descent upon which the Baptists rely. They must either reject the "line" or give up their claim to "succession;" or, which is still better for them, and will be more satisfactory to the writer, prove by good authority that the Missionary Baptist Church has never changed the name Baptist from the days of John till the present. Which of these "lines" of thought will the Rev. P. M. Callaway elect?

ANGUS DOWLING.

Discipline and Liquor.

MR. EDITOR: I see in your paper of August 6 a communication on "Administration of Discipline," over the signature of "An Undergraduate," in which he wants some queries solved and some questions answered. My pen is not very full of theology, neither is it a perfect disciplinarian; yet by your permission I will give a few thoughts and facts in answer to his queries and questions.

1. There was a man who defied the church, and yet he was tried and expelled from her communion for selling spirituous liquors. This occurred on an adjoining circuit to mine. And I have known more than one case, in the bounds of my work, where persons would have been excluded if they had not been cured. One was very stubborn, sheltering himself behind his partner, who owned the capital that run the whole business. But just as I was arraugiug to put him on trial he received a fresh baptism from on high, and then his ceuscience would not let him follow that pernicious trade; so he was cured. I name this case to show that when the heart is full of love to God and man there is no room in the pocket for whisky money. That man is now one of the best and most useful members we have. I will give another case, as it will throw some light on the subject, especially on his first question. A class-leader informed me that one of his members was engaged in selling liquor. I told him he must see him, as I could not at that time. He asked if he must go in person. I told him he might visit him by proxy if he thought some one else would have more influence than himself. He visited him by proxy, and the result was that he said "there was no harm in it," and that the Discipline did not forbid it; and if we did not want him we could scratch his name off, for he would sell it whenever he felt like it. The day I received the report I had the opportunity of talking privately with him. When I named it he said that there was "no harm in it," and that others had done as bad, and that I could take his name off if we wanted to get shut of him. I said: "No, my brother, we do not want to get shut of you; we want to sustain your character as a Christian and sustain the dignity of the church. But if we cannot do this, we can and will put you out, sir. Yet we had rather keep you in, for we want you to live religiously and happy in time, and get to heaven at last. And the object in disciplining a member, if properly done, is not to get shut of him, but to cure him, and thereby preserve his Christian character and sustain the dignity of the church." He then asked: "What harm is there in selling liquor?" I said: "You know how little confidence the world has in the religion of one who was thus engaged, and that it casts a stigma on Christianity, and stained the character of a church that winked at such conduct, when it was against her usage; and hence it was morally wrong." With his heart softened and tears in his eyes, he said: "I have done wrong, and will do so no more if the church will bear with me." Thus he was healed. This is my way of dealing with all who dishonor God by doing, as they say, no harm; and then if they do not repent, try them and turn them out. I knew a society that was stalled when it came to a vote on a case of dram-drinking. There were so many guilty that they could not vote against the brother; and yet they could not vote for dram-drinking, and they were all cured. I hope your correspondent will discover the principle by which such things come under our General Rules, which are based upon general principles, giving only a few of the leading items by which these general principles or rules are violated; while special rules only embrace certain acts or crimes. Hence anything that is wrong and injurious to Christianity, or impairs the influence of the church, or that would stain a Christian character, or even the neglect of church duties, comes legitimately under these General Rules. But he may ask what rule the selling of ardent spirits comes under? It comes under more than one: 1. "Doing no harm." There is harm in selling ardent spirits. 2. "Doing what we know is not for the glory of God." God is not glorified by it. 3. "By doing good." It is neither doing good to men's souls nor bodies. 4. "By all possible diligence and frugality, that the gospel be not blamed." Vending ardent spirits is neither "diligence" nor "frugality" in the Christian race, and the gospel is "blamed."

I was in favor of the change in our General Rules, but I see, by reflection, that every special rule weakens the force of general rules; so if I am at Conference I expect to vote against it.

2. The difficult cases enumerated in the latter part of the first question all grow out of his satanic majesty to see no harm. I am unable to see how a Methodist could be duped by any such an idea as no harm; for everything is right or wrong, good or evil, and tends to the glory of God and the good of man, or it dishonors God and corrupts man. And there is no use of saying it is no harm. If it is right, good, or will glorify God and elevate man, say so, and let it stand on its own merits. If not, condemn it as being at least the "appearance of evil," from which we are commanded to abstain.—First Thessalonians v, 22. When our people are set right they will see that these shameful and evil practices come under our General Rules, and are contrary to the word of God; for Paul says: "Whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."—First Corinthians x, 31. "And whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus."—Colossians iii, 17. So the time to dance, play cards for amusement, or anything of a kindred nature, is when they dance or play cards, etc., "to the glory of God," or in "the name of the Lord Jesus." Otherwise it is a violation of our General Rules, and contrary to the word of God, and the offender can be dealt with in the church.

3. I would suggest, in the cases in the second question: Visit them, stay all night with them, pray with and for them, and invite them to go to church with you, and then win them back to the church and to Christ. I have never found a case yet that I have not succeeded in getting to church in this way, unless they had a lawful excuse. But should I find one who willfully staid away, I would read to them the third class of rules, from "It is expected" to "fasting or abstinence." Should they persist, then I would act according to the closing remarks of our General Rules, beginning with: "If there be any among us who observe them not, who habitually break any of them," etc.

4. In reference to the third question, I would say, "Try, try, try again, and again," as I have repeatedly done. W. R. KNOWLTON.

Fraternity.—What is it?

MR. EDITOR: I have been much interested in the articles in our church papers on the subject of "fraternity." I thought I understood the meaning of the word until recently; now I am in doubt.

Dr. Abbey, writing in the Round Lake and Sea Cliff glow of brotherly feeling, exclaims: "A fig for the Plan of Separation!" Evidently, in Dr. Abbey's view, there is something in the Plan of Separation so opposed to fraternity that we can only reach the one by abandoning the other. From the letters of others who think that the Louisville General Conference failed to fulfill the pledges of its predecessors, and did not speak the general sentiment of our people, I infer that fraternity is not to be understood by reference to the Plan of Separation or to any of those events that have so long divided us from the Methodists of the North, but rather by regarding the action of the several General Conferences from 1844 to 1874.

Now I do not know that either Dr. Abbey or President Johnson, or any of the writers in the pro-fraternity interest, assume to speak for any organized part of the Church South. I suppose that they do not. But before the discussion goes further I would like to ask them, or any one who adopts their views, to define the extent and limitation of the term "fraternity."

Now, in one sense, we have always fraternized with the Presbyterians, Baptists and other denominations of the Christian church. Their ministers have preached from our pulpits, and our ministers from theirs. We call them "brethren," and they sometimes reciprocate the term—always, I believe, the feeling which prompts us to use it. As preliminary to this fraternal communion, we demand of these brethren only that they be in good standing in their own churches.

Will "fraternity" between us and the Northern Church go only thus far, or will it require more? If only so far, let us see how it will work.

So far as we know, Bishop Haven, Dr. Newman and the host of political Methodist preachers are in good standing in the Methodist Episcopal Church. The pastor of Carondelet Street, then, will invite Bishop Ames, on some future episcopal tour, to occupy, by virtue of "fraternity," the church that he seized by violence in 1863, and relinquished by military order in 1865. Felicity Street will welcome to its communion Bro. Morrow, whose catholic and peaceful spirit stops short of the red-hot fraternity of Bro. Lansing, of Tennessee, and who unlikely declares, in a New England preachers' meeting, that the people of Louisiana, the Southern Methodists included, belong either to the "party of theft on the one hand, or to the party of murder on the other." While they might almost pardon the malice of the latter expression for the sake of the truth and pertinence of the former, I doubt if the Methodists of New Orleans would submit to this interchange of civilities without repentance on the part of these oppressors and libelers of our people. Nor is the supposed case an extreme one. These brethren are among us, or have been recently, and in all likelihood will be often again. There are exceptions, doubtless, but these are fair representatives, and they are among us. The charity of our fraternity should certainly begin at home.

But it may be said that we have some unworthy ministers in our own church, whom we would not invite to preach in our pulpits; nor need we ask Bro. Morrow or Bishop Haven. Well, let us see how that will work. The Methodist Episcopal Churches in America solemnly proclaim peace and good will, under the mystical term fraternity, in all their borders, and straightway Bros. Morrow and Lansing, and their like throughout the South, come forward, gushing, to claim the expected courtesies. But "No," we answer. "Brethren, you are not included; we are fraternizing with Bro. A. in New York, or Bro. B. in Ohio."

Or again, Bro. C. comes among us, a stranger from New England. He is our brother, and "fraternity" demands that we should invite him to preach. But wait a little. Let us see whether he is a sheep or a wolf. "Bro. C., do you agree with Bishop Haven or the editor of the Pittsburg Advocate in your views of the Southern people? Do you preach the gospel of the Bible or the gospel of Grant?" etc. "Bible, you preach; Grant, you don't—for us."

Well, quid rides? I am not seeking to ridicule, Mr. Editor. I am seeking for light. I am after "fraternity." What is it? PIERRE.

How Far Should the Authorities

RESPECT THE DEMANDS OF THE PEOPLE IN MAKING APPOINTMENTS?

MR. EDITOR: Just at this time, when the Conferences are holding their sessions and the preachers are receiving their appointments, the question propounded at the head of this article is one of considerable interest to some.

We all know what the rule and genius of the church is in this respect. It is the duty of the Bishops to make the appointments.—See Discipline, section 2, question 3, answer 2. If presiding elders have any more legal authority in the cabinet than a preacher in charge, I do not know whence it is derived. Yet it seems that presiding elders virtually make the appointments at the Conference, and the people make them at home before the Conference meets—that is, they set "meets and bounds," and often name their man.

We do not ignore the wishes of the people; but how far should they be respected? If absolutely, why have a Bishop and presiding elders at all? Let them call their man. Is it not more in accordance with the true spirit of the itinerancy to inform the presiding elders what they are able to do in the way of support, and then leave the rest with the Bishop?

But let us see how these demands for certain men operate. These demands are generally made by stewards. The circuits are more inclined to let the matter rest where the Discipline places it.

These demands are generally made between stations of equal or nearly equal grade. When a vacancy is about to occur the stewards begin to look around for a suitable successor, and they always look to a station of equal or higher grade than their own, that they may have at least the benefit of a man who has occupied a good position; and if they do not feel able to pay such a man they fall back on a young man.

They never look to circuits for a preacher. A man is demanded not so much for his fitness and usefulness as he is from the position he occupies. If he is in a good place, good places will demand him more for his position than his merits. They suppose he will do, or he would not be in so important a position.

In view of these facts, if a preacher starts out on a circuit, it is hard for him to rise above it. There is no demand for him, and "the demands of the people must be respected." But why is there no demand? Because he is on a circuit. He has no prestige of appointment to bring with him, and the people think he is not suited to station work or he would be in a station; and it is only those circuit preachers that will push themselves forward anyhow that receive their equal rights; "for we be brethren." Here a modest man has a bad chance, and if he dares to hint to his presiding elder that he wants and thinks he ought to have a better position, he meets the inevitable reply: "There is no demand." It is often the case that young men are put in stations that keep them up well, while men of families are thrown out on large circuits, with dirty huts to live in, and their families don't get to church once a month. But you say the stations won't support them. Well, what's the difference? The circuits don't support them, and it is just as easy to live in a station without support as on a circuit. This is mighty hard on men who have families, helpless, dependent. It puts their loyalty to the highest test. It don't look as if it were really religious. "Yet the demands of the stations must be respected."

Circuits would prefer a young man whom they could support too; but there is not so much respect to the demands of a circuit, for a man with a family can be half starved on circuits, and that's all right; but he must be well fed in stations, if they have to have a young man in order to do it. O mores! O tempora! It is time modesty should unveil its face and contend for justice.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

HOW THE CHICKEN GETS OUT OF THE SHELL.—Take an egg out of a nest on which the hen has sat near her full time, carefully holding it to the ear; turning it around, you will find the exact spot on which the little fellow is picking on the inside of the shell; this he will do until the inside skin is perforated, and then the shell is forced outward as a small scale, leaving a hole. Now if you will take one of the eggs in this condition from under the hen, remove it to the house or other suitable place, put it in a box or nest, keeping it warm and moist, as near the temperature of the hen as possible (which may be done by laying it between two bottles of warm water upon some cotton or wool,) and lay a glass over the box or nest. Then you can sit or stand, as is most convenient, and witness the true modus operandi. Now watch the little fellow work its way into the world, and you will be amused and instructed, as I have often been. After it has got its opening it commences a nibbling motion with the point of the upper bill on the outside of the shell, always working to the right (if you have the large end of the egg from you and the hole upward,) until it has worked its way almost around, say within one-half an inch, in a perfect circle; it then forces the cap or butt end of the shell off, and then it has a chance to straighten its neck, thereby loosening it legs somewhat, and so, by their help, forcing the body from the shell.—American Farm Journal.

Resolved, That in this sore bereavement the South Butler Sabbath school has lost a worthy member.

SAMUEL C. TISDALE, Sec.

DIED, in Marengo county, Alabama, August 7, 1874, MRS. MARGARET MCREE MOORE, in the sixty-fourth year of her age. She was a native of Darlington district, South Carolina.

Of the deceased, truth obliges the writer to say that she was not an ordinary woman. Living as she did, in a retired part of the country, and possessing, as she did, that modesty and diffidence so characteristic of Southern women, her real intellectual worth was known only in a small circle. Naturally she had a strong mind, and it was well stored with useful knowledge. There was in her intellectual development nothing artificial or superficial. Her education was of that kind which gives correct views of life, and it qualified her in an eminent degree for the stern realities and duties of life.

In early life she embraced religion and joined the Methodist Church. Hers was not a religion of profession merely. Its reality was attested by uniform obedience to the rules of the gospel. During the last years of her life she learned in the school of affliction the vanity and unsatisfying nature of all earthly good. She was a great sufferer. This, coupled with an unfaltering conviction of the truth that "all things work together for good to them that love God," made her willing not only to do but to suffer the will of God.

I was with her once during her last illness, and found her indulging a faint hope of partial recovery, but calm, tranquil and resigned to the Master's will. For her death had no terrors. When the last change came she could review life and its labors with the comforting reflection that life had not been a failure. To the future she could look without fear or dismay. She leaves a husband and seven living children. May God bless and bring them all together in the resurrection of the just. GEORGE F. ELLIS.

MRS. SUSANNA DANIEL died at Moss Point, Mississippi, on the sixth of August, 1874, in her seventy-sixth year. She was born near Columbia, South Carolina, November 16, 1798. She was the daughter of Peter Hendrix.

Her education in those early times was not extensive, yet sufficient for the main purposes of life. At an early age she was led by a good Providence to the house of worship. At twelve years of age she was converted, and against her mother's will she united herself to the church. From that time forth, encouraged by her father, she walked unfalteringly in the path of life.

About 1816 she was married to Mr. Fred. Daniel, and in 1818 moved to Monroe county, Alabama. In May, 1838, her husband died, and left her in debt, with eight children to care for. Everything on the plantation was sold except one horse, one cow and some farming utensils. Mrs. Daniel went to work herself and put the children to work, and by diligence and care the debts were paid and the children were all furnished with a good common school education. Of these eight children, one (Mrs. Bowden) died in 1858, in peace and hope. Seven are still living—one in Louisiana, three in Mississippi and three in Alabama. All the living children are members of the church.

Her life was one of uniform devotion to religion. She read the Bible at home and in the presence of the children, and prayed with and for them daily. She also read religious books and papers, and led her children regularly to the house of God. Her house was the home of the itinerant minister, and the place for social religious meetings.

Near the close of life she interested herself greatly for her grandchildren, and made special requests as to how they should be trained. She had no fear of death; spoke of it as if hourly expected; waited for it as one would wait for a call to start on a journey. In the prime of life she had loved to sing our revival hymns, and now, as she gradually neared her home, she listened delighted to these songs of praise. She suffered but little, as if "God made her bed in sickness." So lived and died one in the common walks of life, led by the eternal Spirit. "Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterward receive me to glory."

B. JONES.

ROBERT A. ATKINSON died, at his residence near Brownsville, Hinds county, Mississippi, September 3, 1874, aged fifty-one years, five months and sixteen days.

He was born in Halifax county, North Carolina, and in 1848 was married to Miss Bethtilda P. Biggs, and soon after removed to this State, where in 1853 he was called upon to lay the mortality of his first love in the "silent city of the dead." In 1856 he was wedded to her sister, Miss Cena T. Biggs, who still survives him, and upon whom the responsibility of a large family now rests. May the gentle dews of God's grace ever descend upon them, causing the sweetest exhalation of love and peace to dispel the gloom of the household.

In 1851 Bro. Atkinson was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and from that time until his death filled alternately the office of steward, class-leader and Sunday school superintendent with credit to himself and profit to the church. So punctual was he in his attendance at Quarterly Conference that when, at the first convocation of that body I attended on this circuit, he was not present, our presiding elder gave evident signs of uneasiness by urging me to visit him at once and learn the cause of his absence. I did so, and found, as predicted, that he was sick. Ah! how little did we then apprehend that the seeds of death had slowly but surely began to germinate, and would so soon mature in his beloved mortality. Before our next quarterly meeting this general debility had settled down into a typhus form of fever, and he never met with us again. On Sabbath evening Bro. Montgomery and myself visited, sang and prayed with him. He talked much about dying, but never once expressed any doubts of a perfect acceptance with the Father. His way was as clear as a sunbeam; and when we began to sing that expressive hymn,

"Amazing grace!—how sweet the sound!—
That saved a wretch like me,"

his eyes filled with tears, his lips quivering. He lifted his feeble hands toward heaven and exclaimed: "Yes, thank God, it is amazing grace that has done all for us poor sinners!" Then, turning to us, he said: "Brethren, in that hymn is embodied all our blessed theology. It is all told there in those few verses." Thus as he lived he died—just outside the gate of heaven. J. M. WEEMS.

DEATH OF MRS. EMILY R. MILLER.

On Sabbath evening two weeks ago, just as we were starting to church, the startling news came that Sister Miller was dead. As well as usual, she was attacked with apoplexy, or the bursting of a blood vessel near the heart, and in less than two hours her spirit had taken its flight. The sorrowful intelligence was borne as upon the wind throughout our village, and in a few moments the stricken community gathered about the house, mourning as for a mother.

A descendant of one of the oldest and most honorable families in the community, her entire life has been spent in this immediate vicinity; and such was the gentleness of her nature, and kindness to all, that she was loved by every one. We believe we state the simple truth when we say that she never had an unpleasant experience with any of her neighbors, and that there is not one single one who has aught against her.

The following was sent to us by her bereaved husband in answer to a request for dates and facts to prepare an obituary. It was not intended for publication as it is; but, being a glowing, life-like portrait by one who knew her best, we regard it as a most fitting tribute to her memory, and therefore append it without alteration, viz.:

"Emily R. Scott, wife of Rev. John C. Miller, died on Sunday, October 4, 1874, at her residence in Jackson, Louisiana, aged forty-three years and seven months. She was the daughter of Thomas and Rhoda Scott, and was born in East Feliciana, Louisiana, March 4, 1831; was married to Rev. John C. Miller, by President D. O. Shattuck, July 19, 1849. She was the mother of twelve children, six of whom were carried to heaven before her. The husband and six children remain to mourn her loss.

"She united with the Presbyterian Church in her childhood, and about one year after her marriage she transferred her membership to the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at Jackson, Louisiana, and remained a faithful member of the same until her death. She was undemonstrative in her piety, but was strong in faith, and always confident of her acceptance with God. The Bible, her own Bible, was always near her, and was constantly read. She was very remarkable for her great kindness of heart, not only to her husband and children, toward whom her love was inexhaustible and her self-sacrifice without a parallel, but also toward her relatives and connections, and toward the weak, the poor and the aged.

"The entertainment of ministers of the gospel and their families, in her genial and generous way, will long be remembered by many of the preachers of the Mississippi Conference who read this obituary. Their coming was always hailed as angel visits. She was remarkable for her numerous friends among the aged colored people, hundreds of whom came to see her after her death was announced.

"As a wife, mother, neighbor and friend, she had no superior. Many mourn her loss."

We bespeak the sympathies and earnest prayers of the numerous friends of our lamented sister for her deeply-bereaved husband and children. C. G. ANDREWS.

A BIRD'S WING.—There are few things in nature more admirably constructed than the wing of the bird, and perhaps none where design can be more readily traced. Its great strength and extreme lightness, the manner in which it closes up or folds during flexion, and opens out or expands during extension, as well as the manner in which the feathers are strung together and overlap each other in divers directions, to produce at one time a solid resisting surface and at another an interrupted and comparatively non-resisting one, present a degree of fitness to which the mind must necessarily revert with pleasure.—Pettigrew's Animal Locomotion.

"SAL-VA-TION is too good a word to be pronounced salvashon. It should never be butchered up by saying sulvation, selvation, silvation or s'lvation.

THE CHILDLESS MOTHER.

BY MARY CLEMMER AMES.

I lay my tasks down one by one,
I sit in the silence to twilight's grace;
Out of its shadow, soft and dun,
Steals like a star my baby's face.

Mocking cold are the world's poor joys;
How poor to me all its pomp and pride!
In my lap lie the baby's idle toys,
In this very room the baby died.

I will shut these broken toys away
Under the lid where they quietly bide;
I will smile in the face of the noisy day,
Just as if baby had never died.

I will take up my work once more,
As if I had never laid it down;
Who will dream that I ever wore
Motherhood's fine and holy crown?

Who will deem my life ever bore
Fruit the sweeter in grief and pain?
The filling smile that the baby wore
Outrayed the light of the loftiest brain.

I'll meet him in the world's rude din,
Who hath outlived his mother's kiss,
Who hath forsaken her love for sin—
I will be spared her pang in this.

Man's way is hard and sore beset;
Many must fall, but few can win.
Thanks, dear Shepherd! My lamb is safe—
Safe from sorrow and safe from sin.

Nevertheless, the way is long,
And tears leap up in the sight of the sun
I'd give my world for a cradle-song,
And a kiss from baby—only one.

Popular Fallacies.

The age of war and conflict is fast passing away, and the industrial and commercial age is taking its place. Progress is the world's watchword to-day; and it is the boast of the nineteenth century that since its birth the march of discovery and invention, in all the sciences and arts most conducive to man's comfort and civilization, has been greater than any preceding half thousand years. Science is now the measure of a nation's standing; for general scientific knowledge means education, which means refinement and religion, which means death to superstition. And in this country especially, where education and true religion are so generally diffused, science seems to have a strong hold upon the respect and admiration of all but the most ignorant and backward minds.

In view, then, of this general diffusion of scientific knowledge, which in this country, though not in itself astonishing, is yet great when compared with that in most other lands, it does seem remarkable oft-times that so many old and long-exploded fallacies should still find credence among the majority of people, and even among the well educated. It is fairly astounding to see what outrageously absurd stories will circulate through the popular press, often published in the fullest good faith, and accepted as true by simple-minded readers. The scientific hoaxes perpetrated in the United States are almost innumerable; and that they continue to be published, republished, revamped, and, strangest of all, believed, and solemnly discussed in journals that ought to know better, does not speak well for the thoroughness of this scientific knowledge, on whose diffusion we so often pride ourselves.

We remember a recent example in the story, lately published in a California paper (these hoaxes generally emanate from the fertile West,) concerning a magnetic cave, said to have been just discovered, possessing such powerful attraction that hatchets were drawn from the hands of the explorers and flew to the roof, remaining glued there; while unfortunates in hobnailed shoes had to leave their foot enclosements behind them. This story, though laughed at by one-half the community, was received with open eyes and gaping mouths by the other half, who could not comprehend that the size of the attracted body might have something to do with the force of attraction.

But it is not merely of these ingenious hoaxes that we wish to speak, but of a far more injurious state of ignorance among the common people. We refer to popular fallacies concerning the sciences of every-day life, and to the general ignorance about the great forces of nature, and the first principles of science in all its departments. Some of these fallacies are simply ludicrous; others are worse. What absurd blunders are made in matters of hygiene! The prosperity of quack doctors, who have medicines, each one of which will cure all the ills that man is heir to, is a forcible example of the latter case. And where we see newspapers—secular and religious—advertising their poisonous wares, we can hardly tell whether to call them stupid or wicked.

"By looking into a looking-glass, inclined at 45°, Mr. ——, of Northampton, obtained last night a fine view of Jupiter's satellites," says a certain Springfield paper. How Prof. Snell, of Amherst, must have chuckled to read it! Mr. ——'s wonderful glass would have conferred satellites upon every star in heaven. He should have known that plain looking-glass has no telescopic power, and that his "satellites" were only repeated reflections, between the quicksilver and the front surface of the glass, of the planet he was gazing at.

"Mrs. —— was recently saved from death from a lightning stroke by her son, who dashed a pailful of cold water upon her. It is supposed that the water carried off the electricity remaining in her body, and saved her!" Such is the Boston Journal's lucid explanation of a simple cure. The poor lady, almost killed by the terrible stroke, was saved by the sudden nervous shock caused by the cold water which her son with such presence of mind threw at her. It is not the presence of electricity in a human body that endangers, nor even the discharge of that electricity, since the body can hold but a small amount; it is the passage through the body of an immense discharge, between clouds and earth, that kills and destroys.

Old maids, and young ones too, throw themselves upon a feather-bed for protection from "thunder," or descend to the cellar. An iron bedstead would be safer than either of these places, because it would keep the charge away from them by receiving it through itself. Timid ladies are terrified when a boiler discharges steam through a safety-valve, for fear it will burst; when the roar of escaping steam is proof positive that it will not burst. And to crown all, some misguided victims of an insane fever, forgetful that "action and reaction are equal," and that "gain in power is loss in time, when the force is given," still labor and strive to create force out of nothing, and make what science has, time and again, declared impossible—a perpetual motion.

Such absurdities of course will never cease until ignorance ceases. But they are altogether too common among those that should know better, and reveal a great lack of logical reasoning and definite knowledge. Superficiality is perhaps the great fault of our common education, especially in science, where exactness is essential. The natural and exact sciences are, we are happy to say, taking more nearly their deserved stand in our American educational courses; and we hope the time may come, and come soon, when such nonsense as we have discussed cannot possibly be found, much less believed in, among those who have been fairly educated.—A. H., in Scientific American.

Smuggling Diamonds.

The Boston Commercial Bulletin, in an article on smuggling at New York, relates the following story:

"There is a very important traffic carried on in diamonds over the various European lines to this country, and as the duty upon them is ten per cent. ad valorem the sharpest watch is kept upon those suspected to be engaged in it. By means of agents abroad the collector's office has often information by cable of the departure from the various ports of suspected diamond smugglers, and is prepared to intercept them. In nine cases out of ten the stones are concealed upon the persons of the passengers. When this becomes a certainty, or what is supposed to be a certainty, the passenger is arrested and taken to the Searcher's Bureau in the customhouse. Here, if found necessary, the party is stripped to the skin, and his clothes examined inch by inch and seam by seam; the heels are taken from his boots, his hair and beard is combed, and every means taken to discover the hiding-place of the secreted treasures. Once this mode of search used to be tolerably successful, but now it rarely serves any purpose, except in the case of raw recruits to the smuggling ranks. An old bird is caught with chaff but once.

"A New York Jew, who was reputed to be in the business of smuggling diamonds, used to cross the water on the Cunard line from three to four times a season. Two years ago, in the early part of the season, he was seized upon his arrival and taken to the searcher's room. Nearly a thousand dollars' worth of precious stones were found secreted in the lining of his boots. He returned to Liverpool by the same steamer, and four weeks afterward again landed upon the company's wharf on North river. He was again seized and subjected to the same rigorous search, but with no success. The Jew took it smilingly and philosophically. When he took his leave he said: 'Better luck next time, gentlemen. I shall go back by the same steamer on business, and when I return you can try it again.'

"The officers mentally determined if he did they would try it again. Upon inquiry it was found that he really had engaged a return passage, having held his state-room for that purpose. Two hours before the sailing of the steamer he was driven down to the pier in his carriage, his wife and daughter with him to see him off. When they returned they carried with them over ten thousand dollars' worth of diamonds, which had lain secreted in his state-room during the whole time the steamer had remained in port. Before his return to New York the collector was notified by one of the revenue agents abroad that 'Max Fischer would return by the ——, which would leave Liverpool October 25, with several thousand dollars' worth of diamonds. In due time the Jew arrived, and for the third time was escorted before the searcher. He was evidently not prepared for such persistent attention. He seemed nervous and agitated, and finally attempted to compromise. He was politely informed that that was out of the question. He was again put through the searching process. His pocket-book, which was first investigated, revealed a memorandum showing the purchase of eighteen diamonds of various sizes and prices, amounting in all to about $12,000. When this came to light the Jew begged with tears to be allowed to compromise. A deaf ear was turned to his entreaties. His coat was removed and the lining examined. Nothing there. Then the waistcoat. As the searcher passed his practical fingers along the lining his heart gave a tremendous thump as he recognized the 'feel' of something pebbly, like little rows of buttons. The garment was hastily ripped, a strip of chamois skin withdrawn and unrolled, and there they lay, one, two, three—eighteen! All there. 'You can put on your coat and waistcoat again, Mr. Fischer,' said the searcher, blandly. 'Good day.'

"Without a word the Jew departed, took a horse car home, kissed his family, ate a rousing supper, repaired to the bath-room, and, after soaking a rather capacious plaster across the small of his back for a few minutes in warm water, peeled it off, and with it 'eighteen diamonds, of various costs and prices.' What the searcher and collector may have said or thought when they found their seizure to be nothing but clever glass imitations, worth from ten to thirty cents each, nobody knows; for although the seizure was loudly heralded, the finale was never made public. A lady in this city, moving in fashionable circles, wears a valuable diamond which was imported in the cavity of a double tooth, said tooth being in the mouth of an Israelitish gentleman of New York. It was placed in its rather unromantic hiding-place in London, and safely covered with bone filling, which was displaced after the arrival in New York."

Cleverness and Energy.

The following sound maxims are given in a recent address by Lord Derby to the students of Liverpool College:

"Do not any of you be disheartened because you think yourself slow or stupid, even though you may really at present appear to have good ground for the belief; and do not, on the other hand, any of you be confident of the future merely because you know or believe yourselves to have what is called cleverness. If I were to tell you that in my belief that particular quality of intellectual quickness and sharpness is by no means the first qualification for a successful career, many people would consider, in these days of competitive examinations, that I was wilfully indulging in a paradox. But I believe it is the truth. Talent is the edge of the knife which makes it penetrate easily; but whether it penetrates deeply or not depends quite as much on the force applied to it as on the sharpness of the blade. What a man really takes a keen interest in, he is seldom too dull to understand and to do well; and, conversely, when a man does not care to put the best of his brains into a thing, no amount of mere cleverness will enable him to do it well if it is a thing of any real difficulty, or unless it is one which he has trained himself to do easily by much previous practice, in which latter case he is really reaping, in present ease, the fruit of past exertion—living, so to speak, upon the capital which he has accumulated by early industry. The most conspicuous instance of complete efficiency and success in active life recently witnessed is that which was obtained by the military organization of Germany; and I am told, by those who ought to be the best judges, both among Germans themselves and among other foreign critics, that efficiency and success are ascribed not so much to any extraordinary display of genius or originality of design on the part of some few individuals as to the generally diffused habit of minute and almost microscopic attention to every detail of duty, however apparently small, which has become a tradition in that service.

"I believe that everywhere the same result will follow from the same cause. But to acquire and keep up in every-day work that habit of concentrated attention on details, two things are necessary—training and energy. The training you can all give yourselves; the energy which is necessary to maintain it is in part, no doubt, a gift of nature. Men possess it, to begin with, in very different degrees; but it may be lost where it naturally exists, and it may be enormously increased where originally it was but feeble. And in that connection it is important to notice how much depends on what students and young men are apt to despise as below their notice—I mean a perfectly sound physical condition. Take two men, if they could be found, exactly alike in mental and bodily aptitudes, and let the one go on carelessly and idly, indulging his appetites, and generally leading a life of what is called pleasure, and let the other train himself by early hours, by temperate habits, and by giving to muscles and brain each their fair share of employment, and at the end of two or three years they will be as wide apart in their capacity for exertion as if they had been born with wholly different constitutions.

"Without a normal healthy condition there can, as a rule, be no good work; and though that qualification cannot absolutely be secured or preserved by any rules, a little common sense and care will go a long way both in securing and preserving it. On that point I would give you these hints: First, that it is not mental labor which hurts anybody, unless the excess be very great, but rather fretting and fidgeting over the prospect of labor to be gone through; so that the man who can accustom himself to take things coolly, which is quite as much a matter of discipline as of nature, and who by keeping well beforehand with what he has to do avoids undue hurry and nervous excitement, has a great advantage over one who follows a different practice.

"Next, I would warn you that those students who think they have not time for bodily exercise will sooner or later have to find time for illness. Thirdly, where an opportunity of choice is given, morning work is generally better than night work; and lastly—a matter which I should not stop to allude to but that I know the dangers of an overdriven existence in a crowded town—if a man cannot get through his day's labor, of whatever kind it may be, without artificial support, it should be a serious consideration for him whether that kind of labor is fit for him at all."

A STATISTICIAN asserts that the world uses 250,000,000 pounds of tea each year, and 713,000,000 pounds of coffee. China furnishes nearly all of the tea, and Brazil over one-half of the coffee. Only 140,000 pounds of Java and 18,000 pounds of Mocha is produced. The United States consumes nearly one-third of all the coffee produced in the world, and the English people are the greatest tea-drinkers out of China. The Germans rank next to the Americans as coffee-drinkers. The Americans consume about six pounds of coffee and 122 pounds of beef per head, counting adults and infants, each year.

IT IS the divine attribute of the imagination that it is irrepressible, unconfinable; that when the real world is shut out, it can create a world for itself, and with a necromantic power can conjure up glorious shapes and forms, and brilliant visions, to make solitude populous, and irradiate the gloom of the dungeon.—Irving.

A Syrian Toilet.

We called yesterday on the daughter of a Mohammedan living in this city (Tripoli.) Though the girl had been married several days, she had never been seen by her husband. He only had gone to the mosque when the ceremony was performed, she taking no part in it. After the ceremony the bride usually stays at her father's house nine days, during which time she sits in state, decked in her finest dress and jewels, receiving calls from her friends. Then her joy is at an end. She must go to her husband, take off her fine clothes, and become a perfect slave, subject to the will of her cruel master. The parents of this bride were very poor. Her mother was dressed in a little better than rags, and was at the tagnua washing clothes. All the women of the bride's company had their hair plaited full of gold coins; these were heirlooms, and so greatly treasured that a woman would almost starve sooner than part with one. The present given by the family to the bride was an elegant pale blue brocade silk dress and a black silk, embroidered with gold. The former cost $150. The bridegroom's presents were a sumptuous blue silk, heavily embroidered with gold; ear-rings of pearl and gold; bracelets as wide as a finger. During the call she wore the bridegroom's presents. The other presents were hung spread out on the wall.

We stopped at a house below, according to custom, and sent word that we were coming. The bride returned an answer that she would be most happy to salute us. After waiting about twenty minutes we went up stairs, for she lived on the second floor. She had not quite finished her toilet, and she sat on the floor before a large mirror, surrounded by her finery. As we entered she arose and saluted us, and then returned composedly to her dressing. Of all the strange and ghastly sights her face was the most wonderful, as may well be imagined from the way in which it was prepared.

First, hot wax was spread over the whole face, which, when cool, was peeled off. This was done to remove all the hair from the face. The whiting was rubbed on till the skin looked like marble. Her eyebrows were painted jet black, her lips and a large spot on each cheek painted a brilliant red. On these red spots on her forehead and at the corners of her mouth gilt flowers were pasted. Then over the whole powdered sugar had been snapped, which made it sparkle as with "diamond dust." She wore pearl ear-rings, and around her neck were a string of large amber beads, three strings of roped pearls and a curious necklace, which we were privately told was borrowed for the occasion. It was made of gold twenty-five-dollar pieces, overlapping each other like scales. The usual head-dress was covered with real and artificial flowers. The finishing touch was put on in the shape of a piece of black wax, heated over the canoon till very hot, made round and flat, and then stuck between the eyes.—Jessup's Syrian Home Life.

CHRISTIAN ZOOPHYTES.—In his stirring little work on Life in Earnest, James Hamilton compares a certain class of people to the sea anemone, whose monotonous life consists largely in twirling its feelers, floating in the tide, or folding itself on its foot-stalk, when the tide recedes, awaiting that tide's return. This author sees a striking resemblance between this zoophyte and the man whose days float over one another, leaving him to vegetate on the same spot, with no high aims, no attempts at a forward movement. Unhappily the comparison is happy. Men, contented to fasten themselves to the rock of inactivity, simply diving, now and then, for periwinkles, are found in almost every Christian church. Too sluggish to move themselves, when the tide of religious excitement goes down they sink too, fold their arms, double themselves up, and become spiritually as numb as a mud turtle struck in the tenderest part by a gymnotus. It matters not how high the tide is, or how near the feelers of the Christian zoophyte are to the altar, he gathers no inspiration. He floats in silence. Without inward emotion, he is moved only as the waves of salvation beat against him—against, and not through him. He is like an engine-boiler full of cold water—he may freeze, but he cannot explode.

THE ROTHSCHILD WOMEN.—We take pleasure in referring to the merits of the ladies of the Rothschild family, not because they are wealthy, but for the simple reason that, in spite of their wealth, they strive to be useful to their kind. The men are immersed in business; they are charitable, but people will say that it is easy to be charitable if you are rich. The women are public-spirited, intelligent and warm-hearted, founding hospitals, reformatories, children's homes, endowing scholastic institutions, encouraging struggling professionals, and taking a personal interest in the doings of the poor. Baroness Lionel makes weekly visits in the meanest portion of London, brightening the home of the Jewish artisan, giving her good counsel to the earnest teachers in the free schools, the matrons and assistants in the various charities. The daughter of Alphonse, of Paris, teaches a good lesson to her sisters in faith, and to rich young ladies of every creed, by receiving a well-deserved diploma as teacher. Anselm's daughter in Vienna is prominent in music, not only composing songs that attain popularity, but aiding struggling musicians by pen and purse.—Jewish Messenger.

SAN FRANCISCO has increased in population during the past year twenty thousand; has built one thousand five hundred houses, at a cost of $5,000,000, and has doubled her direct trade, consisting principally of flour, wine and wheat, with Europe.

INDIGNATION.—The stronger a being's love for the right, the mightier his indignation for the wrong.

Religious Intelligence.

THREE HUNDRED Mennonites have just arrived in New York, most of whom will go to Dakota.

BIBLE WORK is advancing in Chili in a very satisfactory manner. Some opposition is offered, but is soon overcome.

THE German government has notified the lady-abbess of the Carmelite Convent of Posen that all foreign members of the community must leave the country.

AMONG the recent converts joining Mr. Spurgeon's Metropolitan Tabernacle have been several Roman Catholics and Churchmen wearied of the emptiness of sacramentarianism.

ALCESTE TAMNA, a parish priest and doctor of divinity in the papal church at Rome, has recently been converted to the Protestant faith. The event causes great excitement.

IT IS interesting to know that the first organ ever used in a Presbyterian church in America was placed in position in the First Presbyterian church in Zanesville, Ohio, in 1827.

IN Mexico there were not 500 Protestants five years ago. Now there are more than 100 churches, having upward of 10,000 members; 27 schools and academies are under Protestant control.

THE Anglican Dean of Ripon has felt it necessary to counteract the influence upon the people of his charge of the Marquis of Ripon's secession to Rome by a course of sermons in the cathedral.

THE Presbyterian Board last year spent $22,550 on Indian missions, besides the respectable contributions of the Indians themselves. They have forty-four missionaries and teachers engaged in this work.

THE Ohio Open-Communion Baptist Association held their annual meeting this year at Albany. The reports showed the past year to have been a successful one. Over six thousand members are connected with the association.

AT Cairo, Egypt, an independent mission, established by Miss Whately, is accomplishing a great deal of good. The work extends among both the Mohammedans and the Coptics, and there are three hundred children in her schools.

AT THE close of the war the Baptists in West Virginia numbered but 10,000. Now they have increased to 24,000, with evidences of continued prosperity. During the past eight months the result of the labors of their missions is 300 converts.

INTELLIGENCE from Matamoras shows the attendance upon public worship to be good. Mr. Graybill had commenced two services on the Sabbath, the average attendance being twenty persons. A Sabbath school has also been commenced.

A NUMBER of Catholic priests are expected to arrive from Rome soon to commence missionary work among the freedmen of the South. A party of Benedictine monks, who came from England some time ago, are said to be meeting with much success in the conversion of negroes.

THE Presbyterian Synod of New York will meet in Boston, in November, for the first time for a great many years. Drs. Hall, Crosby and Booth will be present, and make addresses. There are but four Presbyterian churches in Boston, and they are all of very small membership.

HERE is another nut for the Baptists to crack. Investigators among the catacombs of Rome say it has been found that baptism is always represented as performed by sprinkling or pouring, and administered to infants as well as adults. Several baptistries have been found, but they are all too small to admit of immersion.

THE project of the British Wesleyan Conference to raise $1,250,000 for church extension in London and elsewhere is still a living question. It is urged by the Methodist press there that the management should be more in the hands of the laity than heretofore. A noble layman, named Newburn, of Banberry, has promised $5,000 a year for ten years.

THE Wesleyan Missionary Society has 6 main stations or circuits in China—3 in the Canton district and 3 in the Weechang district, six hundred miles west of Shanghai, and the furthest inland of all the Protestant missions. It has 5 chapels, 6 other preaching-places, 12 missionaries, 12 catechists, 17 teachers, 233 members, 164 on probation, 504 scholars and 608 attendants on public worship.

REV. DANIEL DOLE, of the Sandwich Islands, writes discouragingly in regard to the present condition of the country. He thinks that if the islands were a part of the United States many good people would immigrate who would exert a good moral influence, and assist in developing the resources of the country. Home missionaries would come to labor for the salvation of both natives and foreigners.

A SCHOOL of the highest grade at Cambridge, England, has been deemed necessary by the late British Wesleyan Conference, the project being urged by influential and wealthy Methodists. Dr. Moulton, appointed to the charge of the school, possesses rare abilities for the work. He is a member of the Bible revision committee. Seventy-five thousand dollars have already been provided for this new project.

THE Wesleyans of England have taken measures to extirpate any seeds of Romanism that may be lurking in their liturgy. At the late Camborne Conference the following resolution was carried by a large majority: "That a committee be appointed to consider the subject of revising the liturgy and book of offices, especially with a view to the removal of all expressions which are susceptible of a sense contrary to the principles of our Evangelical Protestantism, and report to the next Conference."

A SCOTTISH cotemporary says of the late revival under the labors of Messrs. Moody and Sankey: "In Glasgow over three thousand five hundred conversions were reported; in Edinburg nearly as many. The work is remarkably free from disorderly and heretical tendencies, the standard of Christian life is much higher, with greater cheerfulness and simplicity in Christian service, and constant reliance upon prayer and upon the condensed facts of the old gospel, through the power of the Holy Ghost."

AMONG the Syrian manuscripts in the Ambrosian Library at Milan is a copy of the Peshito version of the Old Testament, which may be assigned to a period as remote as the sixth century. It is proposed to reproduce this ancient manuscript in fac simile by means of photo-lithography. The edition will be in two volumes folio, and will consist of six hundred and sixty photographed pages, and about sixty pages of letter-press. The entire cost is estimated at £1,200, and the subscription price for a single copy is £10, or $50.

PRESIDENT McCOSH has returned from Europe, and reports that the proposed pan-presbyterial federation of Presbyterian churches meets with great favor with all the Presbyterian churches in Great Britain, including the Established Church of Scotland, the Free Church of Scotland, the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland, the Covenanting Church of Scotland, the Presbyterian Church of Ireland, the Covenanters of Ireland, the Welsh Calvinistic Church, the Presbyterian Church of England, all of whom have passed strong and decisive resolutions in its favor, and appointed committees with full power to carry out the grand design.

A YOUNG Japanese student, who was admitted by profession to the Congregational church in Fair Haven recently, wrote a very interesting letter to his pastor, narrating the course of his religious experience. It was the words of Christ upon the cross—"Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do!"—that arrested his thought and touched his heart. "I was perfectly astonished," he says, "to hear this, and wondered what kind of man could say so." The whole letter, which is before us, is a touching revelation of the power of the cross upon an ingenuous mind, and bears witness also to the faithfulness and wisdom with which Prof. Seelye, of Amherst, and Mr. Pitman, of Fair Haven, had directed this inquirer in his search after Christian truth.—Independent.

IN a letter written early in August Mrs. Dr. Schneider, of Marsovan, Asia, sketches the fearful famine which prevails to the south of them. So severe was it that at the time of her writing five thousand had died in one section. Though removed from the immediate vicinity of the greatest distress, the starving natives came to them all through the summer, driven from their homes to seek for food. On some days two hundred and fifty of them thronged about the doorways of their houses. They gave them soup, and supplied them with clothes as far as they could, but when they had done all the need was by no means satisfied. The miserable roads of the country will not permit the transmission of grain, and the slow, inefficient government finds it easier to let its subjects starve than to improve the roads.

AT THE stated meeting of the board of managers of the American Bible Society, held October 1, communications were received from George H. Prince, Esq., St. Petersburg, reporting the progress of printing Scriptures in the Reval-Esthonian language; from Mr. Samuel A. Purdie, Matamoras, stating the completion of the Gospel by Matthew, printed at the mission press, and asking a fresh supply of books for sale and distribution; from Caleb T. Rowe, Esq., general agent, London, stating great improvement in his health, and that he was about proceeding, according to instructions from the board, to Constantinople and Beirut, to look after the society's interests in those places; and from Rev. Dr. I. G. Bliss, Constantinople, announcing his return home in improved health, but stating the sorrowful fact of the decease of one of his daughters during the absence of her parents.

THE revival in Scotland, under Messrs. Moody and Sankey, is exerting an influence on India. The Free Kirk of Scotland has a strong hold on the city of Calcutta, and is living sympathy with the home church in this its great awakening. We observe accounts of great spiritual manifestations among the Free Kirk churches in Calcutta. All the others have become participants in this revival, and union meetings are being held in all the churches, Baptists, Wesleyans and all being participants. The pastors of the native Christian churches have arranged a plan for united prayer meetings among the native Christians in the northern part of the city, and also similar meetings among those residing toward the south. This plan provides for one or two special meetings each week, and is intended to be carried out during several months.

WHY does the Pope refuse to go out from the Vatican? Why does he call himself a prisoner? Mgr. Mardi, who probably speaks semi-officially, replies as follows to these queries, and probably gives the true reasons: "Could his holiness come out to see the convents turned into barracks or offices, his own palace turned into a royal residence, impious caricatures exhibited in public places, the streets having changed their old historical and sometimes venerated names, and other revolutionary names substituted? But, besides that, this year only one incident proved that the coming out of the holy father is a real impossibility. One evening of last June, as he was standing at an open window of the Vatican, his faithful people greeted him so enthusiastically, Romans and foreigners alike, and, among others, your countrymen, that the government had many arrested, condemning them to two years and different terms of imprisonment. To all who know the present state of things, the resolution of the Pope not to show himself outside of the Vatican is not a caprice, but a moral duty, and also a real necessity. With regard to the indemnity, would it be seemly—would it be respectable—for the head of the Catholic Church to receive a salary from the King of Italy?"

The Christian Citizen.

He has a duty to perform in common with others in the endeavor to have good government and to place competent men in office. He must do his part in the exercise of his right of suffrage, and in the use of all just means to influence and determine the results of a popular election. His interest in the country is vital and most comprehensive. Besides the material prosperity, he is deeply concerned for the religious welfare, and his moral sensibilities are peculiarly alive to the right and wrong of the questions involved. None feel so sensitively as the Christian the prevalence and triumph of injustice.

As a matter of history our present troubles are not exceptional. The ancient world was, as a rule, familiar with tyranny in the most bloody phases of it. In modern times we naturally enough recall the sad fate of Poland, as she was torn limb from limb, and her dismembered parts were divided out to the despots who planned and consummated her ruin. Austria in Italy exhibits a fearful record, and Spain in Cuba furnishes a picture near at hand of brutal oppression. We doubt whether the dominion of Russia in Poland, with "her whiskered pandoors and her fierce hussars," furnishes instances of more revolting cruelty than have occurred in Louisiana and Alabama during the past month. Alva's career in the Netherlands, for the age in which he lived, was scarcely more inhuman in its methods and means. No man, who is not dead to all that is humane and good, can read the daily papers, filled as they are with the records of oppressive violence, wherein the liberty of peaceable citizens is sacrificed to the rage of partisan malice and lust, without feeling that his whole nature is fired with indignation against the perpetrators of these outrages. That a great people, professedly enlightened and Christian, should be so blinded by prejudice and sectional hate as to countenance and continue such flagrant violations of right and liberty, is passing strange. That a great and powerful government, supposed to be the creation and servant of freemen, should be the willing instrument of these wrongs, is enough to shake our confidence in all governments whatever.

There is nothing particularly new in this state of things. History abounds in events of like character and enormity. In the name of liberty and religion like crimes have been committed, and by the exercise of a like military despotism. Other peoples and communities have been subjected to the like indignities, and have been trampled on by the iron heel of power. The perplexing and most trying feature of our condition is that this ruthless barbarism is the outcome of the enlightenment and Christian civilization of the freest and most intelligent nation in the world. Considering who they were, we are not surprised at the vandalism of Attila and his hordes, nor at the conduct of Philip the Second, who was the acrid and concentrated embodiment of the bigotry of his age; nor are we astonished at the course of the Russians, under the lead of Suwaroff, in Poland, when we reflect that they were a semi-barbarous people. The fall of Kosciuszko and the sacking of Prague were perfectly in keeping with the character of the conquerors. But the treatment which the South is receiving at the hands of her Christian conquerors in this age of christly profession and humanitarian refinement, and all under the inspiration and authority of the party of great moral ideas, gives us pause. There were things as bad enacted in England in the days of Hampden, and in those years when Bunyan and Richard Baxter lived and suffered, but this was more than two hundred years ago. Since then it is supposed that there has been progress in the doctrine and practice of liberty, and that Christian nations have become wiser and better. They who wrong us are proud of the fact that they are the descendants of those glorious Puritans who defied King Charles, and scattered the squadrons of the brilliant and dashing Rupert. They are the men whose fathers threw the tea overboard, bushwhacked the red coats at Concord and Lexington, and formulated their treason in these terse and ringing words: "Resistance to tyrants is obedience to God." Times change and we change with them. The patriots of one age or generation become the oppressors of another.

Into what confusion of thought and feeling do these troubles throw the plain Christian man who believes in God and providence. It is a trial of his faith, but not more, perhaps, than faith has been tried all along ever since "men began to call upon the name of the Lord." Faith is tried now as it has been of old, but it can and will survive. The Christian citizen must not lose faith in God, nor permit the evils occurrent to shake his confidence in the gospel. Neither God nor Christianity is responsible for the iniquity of man, nor for his perversion of religion. Our only hope is in God, and in the ultimate assertion and triumph of the principles of the gospel. Prayer may be a means of deliverance even when in behalf of the most unworthy rulers. Says Paul: "For kings and for all that are in authority: that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty." The country needs the prayers of God's people, and those in authority more than all. Ours may not be more graceless or more tyrannical than the rulers whom the apostle had in view. The right to pray is at least left.

The patience of the Christian is put to the sorest ordeal. It is most difficult for him to have such restraint, in the face of so much palpable and monstrous injustice, as shall not pass the bounds of a righteous indignation. There is need of patience, and the occasion is one in which this eminent grace may be called to have its perfect work. The villainies and wickedness which threaten our temporal undoing, and are so offensive to good and fair-minded men, are deathless far more offensive to God. In these days we must possess our souls in patience. God is not indifferent, and we may be sure that his providential agencies will appear in due time. Now, certainly not less than in the days of Jeremiah, "it is good that a man should both hope and quietly wait for the salvation of the Lord." The wickedness of the wicked shall come to an end some time.

The love of the Christian is tested now as perhaps never before. David, in his citizen of Zion, graphically outlines the character of our own times, its duplicity, falsehood, slander, dishonesty and bribery. One point in his upright man is: "In whose eyes a vile person is contemned; but he honoreth them that fear the Lord." No amount of grace can change this feeling of contempt for the base and despicable miscreants who are the willing instruments of our humiliation. But as God loves the fallen, and as Christ loved his enemies, so may the Christian, in the front of the gravest provocations, maintain the spirit and possess the mind of Christ. The worst of all our calamities would be the loss of our faith, patience and love. It is essential alike to our true manhood, to our Christianity and to our Christian citizenship that these should be preserved in their full strength and purity. Whatever the Christian citizen may be called on to do or bear, let him by all means keep his hold on God, and maintain that love which never faileth.

The best citizen, and the bravest and purest patriot is he whose citizenship is in heaven, whose life is written in the declaration that he "walked with God," and whose political course is shaped and governed by the spirit of Christ. If the nation at large had this style of citizenship it would give us Christian statesmanship, honest rulers, and our troubles would soon have an end. But whatever such a millennium might do for us, the matter in hand is for our own Christian people, here at home in the South, to maintain their Christian character and experience in the midst of the trials which surround them. Let them have a strong faith, let them trust in God, and let them triumph over the enticements and temptations of the hour. Their citizenship and their Christianity cannot be broken asunder.

Letter from Tennessee.

MR. EDITOR: Bro. W. E. Doty, of the Louisiana Conference, was among the visitors during the sixty-first session of the Tennessee Conference, held in Gallatin, Tennessee, October 7-13, and you may have a letter already for your paper from his pen relating the most important events of the session, which indeed marks an epoch in the history of our Conference. None but those present, who have been regular attendants for years at our annual meetings, can realize how much we missed the noble triad of our venerable leaders and fathers in God—Drs. Thomas Maddin, A. L. P. Green and Rev. Fountain E. Pitts. The memorial service on Saturday morning was truly a solemn and deeply impressive occasion. The Conference went in a body from the session-room to the largest church in the city, which was densely thronged. The Bishop conducted the services in a very happy and appropriate manner. Dr. D. C. Kelley read the memoir of F. E. Pitts, which was written by Dr. Green—the last production of his prolific pen—a life-like portraiture of his gifted peer and co-laborer, who had toiled successfully with him for half a century in the same Conference. The reminiscential remarks of Dr. R. A. Young were thrillingly interesting. Among other incidents he spoke of his first visit to our Conference and the home of Bro. Pitts, where he, a stranger, found a warm welcome. Seeing him busy writing, he asked what he was doing. The reply was: "Transferring the names of those who joined the church during our revival at McKendree." Then he asked: "How long did your revival last, Bro. Pitts?" The laconic answer was: "About three months." When he inquired: "How many joined your church?" the response was: "Above five hundred." After the reading of a well-prepared sketch of the conversion, call to the ministry and fifty-six years' preaching of Father Maddin, by Rev. S. P. Whitten, Dr. J. B. West spoke with a full soul, swelling with tender emotions, of that saintly, gentle, chaste and consecrated man of God, who was converted from Roman Catholicism in young manhood, and devoted a long life to faithful work in the church.

Dr. Green's memoir was read by Rev. J. R. Plummer. Dr. Kelley rehearsed several incidents illustrating the genius and gifts of the truly great man. He alluded to his helping those called of God to enter the ministry; told how he turned him from the reading of law to the preaching of the gospel. Dr. R. H. Rivers testified of his wonderful power in impressing his heart indelibly in boyhood, which brought him into the ministry. Rev. W. C. Johnson, editor of the Western Methodist, added his tribute of testimony that Dr. Green had by intuition discovered his impressions that he ought to preach, and influenced him at once to lay aside his law-books, and take the Bible and hymn-book. Bishop Marvin called for the favorite song of Bro. Pitts, composed and often sung by him in the palmy period of his wonderful pulpit and altar powers, beginning: "My buried friends can I forget?" While the song was sung in strains of deep sorrow, mingled with sweet hopes of a joyous reunion, the great weeping was turned to shouts of triumphant joy, and such a glorious baptism of the Holy Ghost we seldom if ever realized at Conference before.

This was the first visit of Bishop Marvin to our Conference. To say that we appreciated highly his presidency, preaching, praying and singing would be to compliment our own love of the spiritual and simple, combined with the startlingly sublime. He only preached twice and delivered a missionary address in a half week, in addition to his daily and nightly responsible work of eight or ten hours in the chair of the Conference and cabinet. Some of us believe he has a head as clear and a heart as warm as a sunbeam. He knows what hard circuit work is, and he feels for those who rough it as once he did. How it helps a preacher to receive a hard appointment from the lips of such a man!

This has been a hard year in middle Tennessee. The long rains were followed by severe drouth, which was succeeded by the voracious army worm devouring what was not drowned or dried out. But the grace of liberality died not of water, dearth or worm, but gave evidence of true vitality in an advance of thirty to forty per cent. in our missionary collections, compared with the past or preceding years. The widows and orphans of our deceased brethren were neither forgotten nor neglected. While the number of claimants was increased, each one received about as much as hitherto. Of course we paid the Bishops' claim in full, and traveling expenses. The preachers looked like men who had been faring well, internally and externally. I suppose their average support was about as usual. Being a member of both the Board of Missions and joint board of finance, I would have heard complaints, if there had been any, great or grievous. Only twenty-two accessions, eighteen admitted on trial, two readmitted, and two by transfer. One located, not at his request; a bachelor; not efficient; did not go to his charge a year ago. Not a charge left to be supplied. Some made supernumerary who wanted work; but no suitable place for them. Ten transferred—three to the far West, three just over to Missouri.

The vote on the amended temperance rule, without discussion, was: Ayes, 45; Noes, 107. Better than our General Conference delegation, who voted almost solidly against it. But the Conference had "spinality" enough to adopt the following almost unanimously:

Whereas, It is supposed that wrong inferences may be drawn from the action of this Conference in rejecting the proposed change of our General Rules with regard to temperance; therefore,

Resolved, That as a Conference we are intensely opposed to the manufacture, sale and use of spirituous liquors for other purposes than chemical, medicinal or sacramental.

Resolved, That such manufacture, sale and use as may not be strictly limited to chemical, medicinal or sacramental use is anti-Christian, and prohibited by our Discipline, and so decided by our Bishops.

A few emphatic noes were heard, however.

Dr. McFerrin was on the Pacific coast, and his absence was felt by his Conference. He is to preach us a semi-centennial discourse at our next session.

How the Ivy is Killing the Oak.

One autumn evening, fifteen years ago, I saw two lovers planting a sprig of ivy at the root of a great oak in the town of Oxford, Georgia. For a time it seemed doubtful whether the ivy would grow at all. By and by a slender line of green began to ascend the tree. Although it was fair to look upon, the tree at that time was more admired than the ivy. The ivy kept thickening, widening, and reaching higher and higher, clinging to and, for the most part, feeding on the tree. You can't see the body of the tree now, and the creeping climber has covered some of the largest limbs. Now people do not look at the tree—the ivy gets all the praise. The tree seems restless, and keeps up a faint struggle for life, but it is yielding surely though slowly. Some of the branches have fallen off—others are dead, waiting the wind that is to bring them down; the rest are weakening and withering—choked to death. The tree is doomed. In a few more years it will die, and then it will rot. After awhile it will fall, but not alone—when it falls it will crush its destroyer.

This struggle between the tree and the ivy is to me an allegory.

The essential fact in Christian missions is this: evangelizing the "regions beyond"—giving the gospel to those who have it not. Strictly speaking, preaching the gospel in our own country, and to ourselves, is not missionary work. Speak to any man on the subject of missions, and his first thought is: It is sending the gospel to the heathen. But it has come to pass most naturally, and in a degree necessarily, that there is much gospel work that must be done at home for the people who cannot, without aid, pay for it. Hence that peculiar work we call "home missions."

There was a time when we had no home missions—the waste places being once included in the "plans" of the circuits. It is a singular and suggestive fact that the number of our home missions has multiplied with the growth of the church. Have you considered the fact that our oldest and strongest Conferences abound in "missions?" This state of things has come to pass largely—I say not entirely—by the subdivision of circuits.

Take an illustration: Once the —— circuit, with eleven appointments, took in the whole county of ——, in Georgia, and as they then tolerated "week-day" preaching, the "circuit-rider" worked the whole field. There was no "missionary ground," as the phrase is, in that circuit then, or else the preacher was missionary as well as pastor. But it is very different to-day, and although the church in —— county is stronger in numbers and money than in 18—, now it has come to pass that there is "missionary ground" there. How did this happen? It is easy to answer. The strong churches demanded "Sunday preaching," and would have no other. The result is, there are now two circuits and one work called a "mission" in the county of ——. It became a mission by a process of "natural selection" and "survival" of the strongest. Four strong churches in one end of the circuit put their official heads together, and then went to the presiding elder: "See here, Bro. Presiding Elder, we pay nearly all that is paid in our end of the county, and we want Sunday preaching. Make a circuit out of Ebenezer, Zion, Antioch and Shiloh." It was done. Next year the four strongest in the other end of the county said: "Do us the same way, Bro. Presiding Elder. Bethlehem, Mount Carmel, Wesley and Asbury will pay a preacher." And it was done. But what about Zoar, Hopewell and Jones' School-house? Natural selection and survival of the strongest threw them out in the cold. About this time "a strip of country" down by the river was found where there were "grown people who had never heard a sermon since they were born" (nevertheless they lived within five miles of a church,) and it came to pass that the three weak churches and the "strip" were put together, "bracketed" with —— circuit, the work called a mission, and an "appropriation" made.

Sometimes a mission is made in the following manner: Woodbury was once the "town appointment" in Woodbury circuit, with "circuit preaching" once a month, and a "monthly appointment" by a good local, Bro. Jones. And they did well. By and by the Presbyterians built a church, and called a brother to take charge of their flock and of the town academy. As the academy paid most of his salary, Dr. Beman could preach every Sunday for his people. This stirred up the Woodbury Methodists, and Woodbury was made a station. As the town church had been paying about half the quarterage under the old plan, what was left of the circuit broke down in its finances at the end of the first year, and at the next Conference was made a mission.

About the year the ivy was planted I began to pay special attention to what the preacher said when taking up his missionary collections. He dwelt largely upon the condition of the heathen, and our obligation to Christ to give them the gospel. He said a little about "home missions;" but he did not prize with this lever. Or, to come back to the allegory, you saw the ivy, you admired the tree; which, being interpreted, means: you thought of the home mission, you thought on the foreign. It was the plea for foreign missions that moved your heart, while you were very willing to help the home work. But now it is quite otherwise—you see little else than the ivy; the tree is shrouded for its death. What we call the "home mission" has grown around and upon the foreign mission sentiment; and it is choking it to death. When the true missionary sentiment—which is compassion on the souls of the heathen—is clean dead, when the tree falls, home missions will be crushed too. Already I hear of persons who have long ceased to pay money for foreign missions that are growing very tired of supporting "missions" in their own county. And there is more of this feeling than some fathers and brethren think. This does not surprise me, for when the true missionary sentiment dies in a man he soon ceases to have any missionary sentiment at all. Nay, he will become the hardest of anti-missionary "hardshells."

What ought to have been done with that ivy? To say the least, it ought to have been trimmed.

Now, in conclusion, let me say:

I am for preaching the gospel to our own poor. I am for home evangelization with all my heart, but I am opposed to making mission-fields simply because four or five strong churches in a circuit rid themselves of the burden of two or three weak ones. But it is said in reply: "They will have Sunday preaching, and no other." Well, can nothing be done with the three weak ones besides creating (yes, sir, that is the word that is generally used) a mission out of them with an appropriation? Is there no other solution to the problem? Cannot Methodism adjust her plans to meet this case without spending most of her missionary money in giving Sunday preaching to four strong churches?

But these are questions for Bishops and presiding elders, to whom these reflections—put on paper while I wait here for the "Buncombe train," which to-morrow will carry me as far as "Wolf Creek," en route to Asheville, the seat of the Holston Conference—are very respectfully dedicated by their unworthy brother,

ATTICUS G. HAYGOOD.

A Good Country.

Dr. McFerrin, in a recent letter to the Nashville Christian Advocate, says:

Oregon, I think, is a very desirable State as a home. There are four elements which, combined, make any country good: Productive soil, pleasant and healthful climate, an abundant supply of good water, and plenty of timber. All these are found in Oregon. The soil, for wheat, rye, oats, barley, Irish potatoes, and all kinds of fruits, except peaches, can hardly be surpassed, and peaches do well in some localities. The climate is delightful—never very hot, never very cold—not much snow in the winter. They have much rain in the winter season, but the summers and autumns are delightful. The nights are always cool. You need one or more blankets every night throughout the warm season. Sleeping is a grand institution in Oregon. The country is one in which a subsistence is very easily acquired. Wheat is the great staple, and this can usually be sowed any or every month in the year, and the crop is certain. There never has been a failure in the crops in Oregon. Some years are more bountiful than others, but never a failure. The fruit never fails, nor is it destroyed by insects. The lands, when they are good, and are improved, rate high, so that a poor man cannot hope to purchase a large farm at the beginning; but he will soon rise if he be industrious and economical. In many portions of the State, however, land can be had at low rates.

I think Oregon is a good country for new beginners. Labor is high. It is a good country for stock, especially for horses. I saw many superb draught and harness horses, all kept fat and sleek. They are fed on oats, hay and barley.

In company with Bro. J. E. White we visited Portland, where we were complimented with tickets by the Oregon Steam Company for a trip to the Cascades, on the Columbia river. The day was charming and the accommodations good. We left Portland at five o'clock in the morning. Twenty miles below we entered the Columbia river, and ascended it to the Cascades, some fifty miles above the mouth of the Willamette. The Columbia is the line between Oregon and Washington Territory. We passed several villages on our voyage, the most attractive of which is Vancouver, situated on the Washington Territory side. This was an early settlement, and is the seat of one of the government military posts—a pretty little town. The Columbia river is the second or third stream in importance in the United States. It has a history—a history full of facts more interesting and exciting than romance. Here was the seat of operations of the British and American Fur Companies. Here many an old trapper made his fortune or lost his life. Here the Indians roamed at pleasure, and committed many a deed of blood; the early missionaries strove to teach the savage tribes the doctrines of our holy religion in this wild region, and in an early day planted the standard of Christianity.

The scenery on the Columbia is sublime beyond description—the lofty mountains on either side standing in awful grandeur, their naked brows defying the storms of centuries, or capped with forests of fir, pine and cedar, waving their green branches far up in the light of heaven, present, as you glide along the clear waters of the majestic stream, an ever-varying panoramic view, that cannot be excelled in Europe or America. I have never seen Bishop Pierce so fully impressed with the wonderful works of the Creator. We all looked and wondered and adored. To make the magnificent picture perfect, yonder, in full view, stands Mount Hood, covered with perpetual snow, lifting its towering head above every other elevation in this grand panorama of majestic mountains. This was enough! We said our God is a great God, holy and reverend is his name! Let us bow in silence at his feet, stand in awe, and sin not.

Rev. George Bright.

The intelligence contained in the following note has been already published. Bro. Bright was for a short time a member of the Louisiana Conference. At the time of his death he was a member of the Florida Conference, and stationed at Spark's chapel, in Key West. We give the following note from Bro. Fulwood, who, we presume, was with Bro. Bright in his last illness:

KEY WEST, FLA., Sept. 25, 1874.

MR. EDITOR: I write to convey the sad intelligence of the death of Rev. George Bright. He died on last Sunday morning at half-past eleven o'clock, after a painful illness of seven days, in peace and full assurance of faith. He had been in the regular itinerant work for upward of thirty years. He was for several years a successful presiding elder in the Georgia Conference, and his name will forever rank among the pioneer Methodist preachers of the Cherokee region of that State. His death is a bereavement. Pray for us.

No cases of yellow fever in the city at present. Yours in Christ,

CHAS. A. FULWOOD.

THE WAN KWOH KUNG PAU (Chinese Globe Magazine,) published by our missionary, Rev. Young J. Allen, is a very handsome weekly, printed altogether in the Chinese language. The only English about it is a title-page, which informs us that the Wan Kwoh Kung Pau is devoted to the extension of knowledge relating to the geography, history, civilization, politics, religion, science, art, industry and general progress of Western countries. We have received specimen copies for the ADVOCATE and for the Felicity Street Sunday school. The price is two cents per number, or $1 per annum. The magazine abounds in illustrations, the paper is fine, and the typography most exquisitely executed. Our copy is dated Saturday, September 19, 1874.

WHERE IS THE MILITARY?—The Watchman and Reflector, Boston, Massachusetts, has this to say about the political campaign in that favored region:

Several disgraceful episodes have served to make the present campaign in this State especially noteworthy. One is the undisguised and well-nigh shameless bribery and ballot-stuffing in one district; the other is the disgraceful resorting to mob law and violence in another district. It cannot be said that this State is not making "progress" in its politics.

General Merrill and his soldiers should be sent there. Where is the President? and where Williams? and where the United States marshal?

THE election in Louisiana on the second instant was conducted with general good order, and is thought to have resulted favorably for the interests of the State. The Conservative majority is estimated at from twelve to fifteen thousand. The news from the States holding elections on Tuesday, the third instant, at this writing (Wednesday morning, November 4) are not yet received, so as to give satisfactory returns from doubtful States, such as New York and Pennsylvania. Large Conservative gains, however, are indicated. It is claimed that even Massachusetts has gone Democratic.

MRS. J. T. DAVES, wife of the superintendent of our missions in Mexico, accompanied by their two children, reached New Orleans on Thursday, the twenty-ninth ultimo, and left the same day for Monroe, Louisiana. Sister Daves' health has not been good during her residence in Mexico. She left Bro. Daves well, and in the successful prosecution of his missionary labors.

Terms of the Advocate.

I have received the following communication:

The Rev. A. H. Redford, D. D., Agent of the Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn.:

DEAR BROTHER—You will remember that at our late General Conference you, as the publisher of the Christian Advocate, agreed with the publishers of other church weeklies in favor of a uniform subscription price of $2.50 per annum, provided the agreement should be sanctioned by the General Conference.

You will remember also that it proved to be the sense of the General Conference that not upon it, but upon you, as the publisher, devolved the duty of fixing the subscription price of the Christian Advocate—the subscription price of other church weeklies to be fixed by the publishers thereof.

The reasons for a uniform subscription price, say $2.50 per annum, recognized by you, as well as by ourselves, last May, remain in full force. And additional reasons can be adduced now; first, in the requirements of the new law on postage; and secondly, in the fact that the financial pressure throughout the country threatens to diminish receipts from subscriptions and advertising to such an extent, if this has not already been done, as to make it impracticable to publish any one of our church weeklies at less than $2.50 per annum without embarrassment.

In view of this state of things, and for the promotion of our general publishing interests, as well as local, we, the undersigned, propose that you agree with us in favor of a uniform subscription price of $2.50 per annum after the present calendar year.

Yours fraternally,

J. W. BURKE & CO.,
Publishers Southern Christian Advocate.
L. D. DAMERON,
Business Manager St. Louis Christian Advocate.
R. W. BLEW & CO.,

R. J. HARP,

BENNETT & LAFFERTY,
Publishers Richmond Christian Advocate.
ZEPHANIAH MEEK,
Publisher Central Methodist.
J. EVERETT MARTIN,
Publisher Episcopal Methodist.
I. G. JOHN,
Publisher Texas Christian Advocate.

In conformity with the foregoing, I propose at once to make the subscription price of the Nashville Christian Advocate two dollars and fifty cents per annum. Subscriptions, however, received previous to the close of the present year will not expire until the close of the year 1875.

By this arrangement the Advocate is sent free to all new subscribers, or to those who may renew, until the close of the present year.

Preachers, local and traveling, will hereafter be charged one dollar and twenty-five cents.

REV. DR. BONAR IN THE PULPIT. A correspondent of the Congregationalist, who has heard Rev. Dr. Horatius Bonar, on the other side of the water, has given this off-hand portraiture of him:

The striking feature of his face is the large, soft, dark eye, the power of which one feels across the church. There are no bold, rugged lines in his face; but benevolence, peace and sweetness pervade it. The first thought was: "He is just like his hymns—not great, but tender, sweet and tranquil." And everything he did and said carried out this impression. His prayer was as simple as a child's. His voice was low, quiet and impressive. His address, for it could scarcely be called a sermon, was founded on the words: "The Spirit and the Bride say, Come"—"the last invitation in the Bible." It was marked by that absence of all attempt at originality which is, to an American, so striking a feature of most foreign preaching. It was simply an invitation, warm, loving, urgent. His power over the audience was complete. Even the children looked steadily in his face, and once he paused in his discourse and addressed himself especially to the Sunday school children, who sat by themselves on one side of the pulpit. I was sure the little things never heard the Good Shepherd's call more tenderly given. With one of the most winning faces I ever saw, he closed. "'Whosoever'—that includes you; 'Whosoever will'—does that include you?"

SPURGEON ON EVIDENCE.—Now, then, young men, you need not read "Parley's Evidences." You do not want to study "Butler's Analogy," though you may, if you please; but such books, excellent as they are, only prove the skin and shell of our religion, and the vital matter is the kernel. If you come by simple prayer, and ask to have the blood of Jesus applied to your soul, and if the Spirit of God works mightily in your spirit, so that you obtain a new inner principle, and lead a new life as the result thereof, you will have the best evidence in the world. You will laugh at doubters, and make a fire of Colenso's objections, and "Essays and Reviews," Tyndall's challenge and Huxley's dreams, and all that heap of worthless muck which has polluted the church and defiled the souls of men. O heavens, that ever we should live to see a day in which ministers tell us that it is good to doubt, when poets almost defy that very skepticism of which John says that it makes God a liar, and which therefore is to be denounced as an insult to God, and the curse of the age. Go, fling your doubts away, ye doting sneu and dreaming women, and bow like penitents at Jesus' feet, and you will find far more than all your fancied learning can bestow. But if ye will not do this, yet know that in valu do you rejudge his judgment, and act as if ye were the gods of God.

A WISE MAN doubteth; a fool rageth and is confident; the novice saith: "I am sure that it is so;" the better learned answers: "Peradventure it may be so, but I prithee inquire." Some men are drunk with fancy, and mad with opinion. It is a little learning, and but a little, which makes men conclude hastily. Experience and humility teach modesty and fear.—Jeremy Taylor.

Books and Periodicals.

THE following volumes are from the Methodist publishers, Nelson & Phillips, New York:

HOLINESS TO THE LORD. By Rev. Lewis R. Dunn. A 12mo of 219 pages.

The author, we believe, is in accord with the old Methodist standards on the subject of holiness. Christian perfection is his theme, and it is presented in the old way, and argued and illustrated after the beaten track of those who have gone before him. A useful book for devout readers.

HOLINESS THE BIRTHRIGHT OF ALL GOD'S CHILDREN. By Rev. J. T. Crane, D. D.

Dr. Crane is a writer well known by his works on Popular Amusements, the Arts of Intoxication, and other writings. His views are well defined, clearly expressed, and not altogether Wesleyan, although he makes out a strong case for their scriptural soundness. The author does not believe in a second work, but rather that the regenerated soul is holy. He makes out a strong case as against the National camp meeting doctrines, and the generally received opinions of Methodists.

SUNDAY AFTERNOONS. A book for little people. By E. F. Burt, D. D.

An excellent volume for the young. Good Sunday reading, calculated to entertain, to awake interest in sacred things, and to afford sound and solid instruction.

HOME AS IT SHOULD BE. With counsel for all. By L. D. Barrows, D. D.

Husbands, wives and parents will find some excellent and profitable things in this little book. Home As It Should Be Is the most important of all to the welfare of the individual, and to the well-being of the country. This volume will do good. Let it be read.

WE HAVE received from the publishers, Ditson & Co., Boston and New York, the American School Music Reader, Nos. 1, 2 and 3. These volumes contain a systematically graded course of instruction in music for public schools. They are well gotten up, and will prove of great use in schools and in families.

PETERS' MUSICAL MONTHLY for November is, as usual, replete with music and songs, fresh and choice. Published by J. L. Peters, New York.

ARTHUR'S ILLUSTRATED HOME MAGAZINE for November is splendidly illustrated, and replete with articles of interest and merit.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the last number of Moon's Bee World, a journal that ought to have a place in every farmer's home in the South.

Dr. Haygood was present at the session, and did excellent service. He was much pleased with his visit.

A LITTLE BOY, six years old, and a little girl eight, were looking at the clouds, one beautiful summer evening, watching their fantastic shapes, when the boy exclaimed: "Oh! Minnie, I see a dog in the sky." "Well, Willie," replied the sister, "it must be a sky torrier."

WE WOULD call the attention of our readers to the advertisement of Horace Waters & Son, headed "Waters' Concerto Parlor Organs," and for a description of them we cannot do better than to copy the following:

"The Waters Concerto Parlor Organs.—We are glad to chronicle any new thing, or any improvement upon an old one, that tends to popularize music by rendering its study either easier or more attractive. Lately our attention has been called to a new patented stop added to the Waters Reed Organ, called the Concerto Stop. It is so voiced as to have a tone like a full, rich alto voice; it is especially 'human' in its tone. It is powerful as well as sweet, and when we heard it we were in doubt whether we liked it best in solo or with full organ. We regard this as a valuable addition to the reed organ."—Rural New Yorker.

DR. TUTT'S VEGETABLE LIVER PILLS.

THE STARTLING DRAWBACK ON nearly all medicinal agents has ever been that in their process of purgation and purification they have also debilitated the system. To obviate this difficulty physicians have long sought for an agent that would

PURGE, PURIFY AND STRENGTHEN

AT ONE AND THE SAME TIME.

Their research has at last been rewarded by a discovery which fully realizes the fondest desires of the medical faculty, and which is justly regarded as the most important triumph that Pharmacy has ever achieved. This important desideratum is

Dr. Tutt's Vegetable Liver Pill,

which purifies the blood, and removes all corrupt humors and unhealthy accumulations from the body, and yet produces no weakness or lassitude whatever, but, on the contrary, tones the stomach and invigorates the body during the progress of its operation. It unites the heretofore irreconcilable qualities of a Strengthening Purgative and a Purifying Tonic.

Dr. Tutt's Pills are the most active and searching medicine in existence. They at once attack the very root of diseases, and their action is so prompt that in an hour or two after they are taken the patient is aware of their good effects. They may be taken at any time without restraint of diet or occupation. They produce neither nausea, griping nor debility, and as a family medicine they have no rival.

LET'S LIVE FOR GOD.

BY AUBIE AUGUSTA MAY.

Let us live for God and heaven,
In these days of worldly care;
While our hearts are almost riven,
We should live by faith and prayer.

There's a wondrous work before us—
Souls are dying every day.
Years are passing swiftly o'er us;
Let's improve them while we may.

And at home, on street, in temple,
Let us never idle be;
Proving always, by example,
That "the savior died for me."

And when life's long task is ended,
And our spirits sink to rest,
Love and works together blended,
Shall bear us upward to the blest.

And our great eternal Father,
Loving us as children dear,
Will delight to see us gather
Round his throne, without a tear.

LAFAYETTE, ALA., Oct. 24, 1874.

A String of New Fables.

BY MRS. PROSSER.

EQUAL FRIENDSHIPS BEST.

"Ah! what ever has become of you lately, Shag?" cried Drover. "I've missed you after evening shepherding this week or more."

"I've been engaged," said Shag, coldly.

"Engaged! How? Where?" said Drover.

"With company—the new company at the great house," said Shag.

"Oh, hoh! What, Crack and Brilliant, and the rest?" said Drover.

"Yes. They seemed to wish for my friendship, so I couldn't be uncivil," said Shag.

"Very good; and you are going now?" inquired Drover. "Don't let me hinder you."

"I was. You see, Drover, they are high-bred; and I think, when an opening offers, we should always try to improve ourselves."

"Certainly. A very improving evening to you," said Drover.

"You think so, don't you?" said Shag.

"I think the best company is that we get most good from," said Drover.

"Yes, that's it," said Shag; "and Mr. Crack has such a beautiful way of moving (action they call it,) and Mr. Brilliant is so quick and clever, and they are all so superior, one way or another."

"Happy to hear it. But I think your 'action' and cleverness are quite sufficient for your way of life. However, please yourself," said Drover, running on.

"Why, Shag! you here?" he cried a few evenings after; "I thought you had cut low company and were on the improving plan!"

"Ahem! I preferred a walk with you this evening, Drover," said Shag, looking rather shy.

"Very good," said Drover. "How are your friends at the great house?"

"Very well, for anything I know," said Shag.

"What! have you broken with them?" asked Drover.

"To say the truth, I was deceived in them. They are low, ill-bred, conceited fellows, and I despise them!" said Shag.

"When did you find that out?" asked Drover.

"Last night," said Shag. "They were together with Mr. Commodore, the captain's dog, and when I went to them they looked as if they didn't know me, and Mr. Crack asked me how it was I wasn't shepherding. So I walked away, and I don't mean to go near them again."

"Then you've done being improved?" said Drover.

"Oh, don't laugh at me," said Shag.

"I won't; only be advised, and never expect steady friendship out of your own beat. You may, for some capricious reason, be patronized and kept on sufferance for a time, but the merest trifle will be enough to take away the favor in the same caprice that bestowed it."

BUSINESS FIRST AND PLEASURE AFTER.

"Put the young horse in the plow," said the farmer; and very much pleased he was to be in a team with Dobbin and the gray mare. It was a long field, and gayly he walked across it, his nose upon Dobbin's haunches, having hard work to keep at so slow a pace.

"Where are we going now?" he said, when he got to the top. "This is very pleasant."

"Back again," said Dobbin.

"What for?" said the young horse, rather surprised; but Dobbin had gone to sleep, for he could plow as well asleep as awake.

"What are we going back for?" he asked, turning round.

"Keep on," said the gray mare, "or we shall never get to the bottom, and you'll have the whip at your heels."

"Very odd, indeed," said the young horse, who thought he had had enough of it, and was not sorry he was coming to the bottom of the field. Great was his astonishment when Dobbin again turned, and proceeded at the same pace up the field again.

"How long is this going on?" asked the young horse.

Dobbin just glanced across the field as his eyes closed, and fell asleep again, as he began to calculate how long it would take to plow it.

"How long will this go on?" he asked, turning to the gray mare.

"Keep up, I tell you, or you'll have me on your heels."

When the top came, and another turn, and the bottom, and another turn, the poor young horse was in despair; he grew quite dizzy, and was glad, like Dobbin, to shut his eyes, that he might get rid of the sight of the same ground so continually.

"Well," he said, when the gears were taken off, "if this is your plowing, I hope I shall have no more of it." But his hopes were vain; for many days he plowed, till he got—not reconciled to it—but tired of complaining of the weary, monotonous work.

In the hard winter, when comfortably housed in the warm stable, he cried out to Dobbin, as he was eating some delicious oats: "I say, Dobbin, this is better than plowing; do you remember that field? I hope I shall never have anything to do with that business again. What in the world could be the use of walking up a field just for the sake of walking down again? It's enough to make one laugh to think of it."

"How do you like your oats?" said Dobbin.

"Delicious!" said the young horse.

"Then please to remember, if there were no plowing there would be no oats."

TIME TO LOOK OUT.

"Here, friend, could you lend me one of your loose sticks? My nest wants repairing, and I've no time to hunt for timber this morning," said a magpie to her neighbor.

"By all means," said the neighbor; and the magpie, promising to return the next day, flew off with the stick.

"Could you lend me another stick?" she said the next morning; the wind has damaged me in the night. I am not safe, and I have so much work to do in repairing that I've no time to look for timber."

The neighbor looked dubious, but after a little hesitation lent another stick, which the magpie vehemently protested she would bring back with the other next morning.

"I am really ashamed to come!" she said the third morning; "but could you lend me another stick? Somehow I have got out of order at home; and what with one thing and another, I haven't time to look for timber."

"Take it," said the neighbor, in no satisfied tone; and directly the magpie had flown off, declaring louder than ever that she would repay all she owed with interest the very next day, she began to prepare for moving to a far distant tree. "It's all very fine," she said; "a stick is but a stick; but if I don't cut this connection I shall soon have to go about begging for sticks myself."—English Book.

How Long It Takes to Make a Slice of Bread.

"Oh, I'm so hungry!" cried Johnny, running in from play; "give me some bread and butter quick, mother!" "The bread is baking, so you must be patient," said mother. Johnny waited two minutes, and then asked if it was not done. "No," answered mother, "not quite yet." "It seems to take a long while to make a slice of bread," said Johnny.

"Perhaps you don't know, Johnny, how long it does take," said mother.

"How long?" asked the little boy.

"The loaf was begun in the spring"—Johnny opened his eyes wide—"it was doing all summer; it could not be finished till the autumn."

Johnny was glad it was autumn, if it took all that while; for so long a time to a hungry little boy was rather discouraging. "Why?" he cried, drawing a long breath.

"Because God is never in a hurry," said mother. "The farmer dropped his seeds in the ground in April," she went on to say, partly to make waiting-time shorter, and more, perhaps, to drop good seed by the wayside; "but the farmer could not make them grow. All the men in the world could not make a grain of wheat, much less could all the men in the world make a stalk of wheat grow. An ingenious man could make something that looked like wheat. Indeed you often see ladies' bonnets trimmed with sprays of wheat made by the milliners, and at first sight you can hardly tell the difference."

"Put them in the ground and see," said Johnny.

"That would certainly decide. The make-believe wheat would lie as still as bits of iron. The real grain would soon make a stir, because the real seeds have life within them, and God only gives life. The farmer, then, neither makes the corn nor makes the corn grow; but he drops it into the ground and covers it up—that is his part—and then leaves it to God. God takes care of it. It is he who sets mother earth nursing it with her warm juices. He sends the rain, he makes the sun to shine, he makes it spring up, first the tender shoot, and then the blades; and it takes May and June, and July and August, with all their fair and foul weather, to set up the stalks, throw out the leaves, and ripen the ear. If little boys are starving, the corn grows no faster. God does not hurry his work; he does all things well."

By this time Johnny lost all his impatience. He was thinking. "Well," he said at last, "that's why we pray to God: 'Give us this day our daily bread.' Before now I thought it was you, mother, that gave us daily bread; and now I see it is God. We should not have a slice if it weren't for God, would we, mother?"—Child at Home.

TO PUT AWAY FAULTS.—One day I was watching a great Newfoundland dog. He had been told by his master to fetch him a basket of tools that the gardener had left in the shed. The great dog went to obey his young master. He took hold of the basket with his mouth, but he could not lift it. What did he do? Give it up? No, never! One by one he took the things out of the basket and carried them to his master.

One by one! That is what we must try to do with our faults. Try and get rid of them, one by one. Jesus knows how hard it is for you to do this, and so he has given you a word that will help you to do it, and that word is: "To-day."

I will show you how. Take one fault—we will call it bad temper—and in the morning when you get out of bed ask God, for Christ's sake, to help you "to-day" to overcome that bad temper. Perhaps by and by something will begin to make you feel angry; then remember your prayers, and try and drive away the angry feeling, and say: "Not to-day."

If you have learned any bad, wicked words, like some poor children in the streets, who do not know any better, then ask God, for Christ's sake, to help you to-day; then, when you are tempted to do so, remember: "Not to-day; I will not say any wicked words to-day."

And do the same with all your faults. Take them, one by one, and try for one whole day not to give way to them. It will come easier then.—Guiding Star.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Thoughts for the Month.

The routine of work this month is simple and plain, the first business in hand being to finish gathering the crops. Short days, with cold and rain, will soon be upon us, and then out-door work will be difficult and disagreeable. Cotton especially should be picked out just as rapidly as possible, to secure a good article, free from stalk or trash. Corn ought no longer to remain in the fields, liable to rot and destruction from animals. Sweet potatoes should never be exposed to freezes while still undug; if possible, dig them while it is dry. We think the plan of keeping them in cotton seed an excellent one; have never tried it with sweet potatoes, but have seen Irish potatoes kept very successfully in that manner. The lint on the seed makes them a most excellent non-conductor of heat, and substances enveloped in them will therefore be kept at a very uniform temperature. This, with dryness, is the condition essential to their keeping.

Turning over land may still be kept up with great advantage, the vegetable matter turned under now will be more thoroughly digested and prepared for plant food than that buried after Christmas, and the freezes will have more opportunities to subdue the refractory clay brought up from the subsoil. Where lime is to be used, apply it at once to the fall-plowed land, broadcasting and leaving it upon the surface; it will be sure to find its way down. On light lands three to five bushels per acre, and on heavy soils ten to fifteen, is as much as we would recommend in our climate. Lime is the great digester, but our long, hot summers cook the plant-food in our soils so thoroughly that its digestion is comparatively easy.

The only crops which may be started advantageously this month are wheat and rye. The latter is said to produce seed better sown now than earlier in the season. Along the southern edge of the wheat belt it should be sown this month; and will sometimes succeed well, seeded down this late in regions still further north; but for localities above thirty-three or thirty-four degrees of latitude, October sowings succeed best. It is to be hoped that, wherever wheat can be successfully grown, every farmer will sow enough for home supply. A few acres of high, dry, poor land, literally dressed with cotton seed, will do this, and, in addition, be left in a fair way for improving afterward. It is usual in the South to sow about one bushel of seed per acre. In an account of some very elaborate and instructive experiments made by a gentleman in England, and recently published, we find the following:

"Taking the seed wheat sown by a usual mode at two bushels per acre, one and a half millions of grains per acre (speaking roughly) were put into the ground. In ordinary crops, the number of ears produced per acre being taken as about 1,000,000 and the crops as 34 bushels, they had, at 700,000 grains to the bushel, 23,800,000 grains per acre, or an average per ear of only 23 or 24 grains; and if more than 1,000,000 ears per acre were claimed it must be at the expense of their contents. Five pints of wheat per acre planted in September, 12 inches by 12 inches, gave 1,001,880 grains per acre, or 67,760 ears in excess of those produced on the other side of the hedge from six pecks, or more than 21 times the seed. Again, five pints planted 12 inches by 12 inches, October 17, gave 958,320 ears per acre; and planted similarly October 4, 966,792 per acre; while one bushel planted October 15 gave only 812,160. Two plants of 24 ears each gave 1,911 and 1,878 grains, or 79 per ear."

Experience has amply shown that drilling wheat, so as to permit cultivation—whereby the weeds, which spring up with the wheat and rob it of part of the food in the soil, may be destroyed—increases greatly the yield. Some advocate planting clover and grass this month. Our experience indicates that it is entirely too late; the tender young plants are too liable to be winter-killed. If fall oats show a disposition to joint, graze them down, but not too severely; if they are weakly, give them a light dressing of guano to strengthen them against the winter cold.—Southern Cultivator.

STIRRING SOIL AROUND TREES.—The opening or lightening the soil around the roots of trees, either in the spring or fall, for the purpose of letting in warmth, and affording a freer medium for the expansion and development of the roots, is of great value in promoting the health and vigor of the tree. All trees, whether fruit or ornamental, young or old, indigenous or exotic, are vastly benefited by this process. In old orchards the soil about the trunks of the trees, and to a considerable distance from them, in every direction, should be carefully broken, and the upper surface, to the depth of three or four inches, removed in the spring, every four or five years. The eggs of the curculio and other insects are deposited in this stratum, and if not removed or destroyed will produce insects, the ravages of which the succeeding year will be productive of far greater loss than the expense of removing the soil and replacing it with compost or loam. It is an utterly hopeless undertaking to attempt the cultivation of good fruit when no measures are resorted to to obviate the fatal ravages of this detestable and insidious foe, and the remedy now suggested is by no means expensive, if we take into consideration the advantages otherwise resulting to the trees from its application.

Any good soil, taken from the open fields or cultivated lands, may be used as a substitute for compost, and a very small quantity will suffice. Even if no fresh matter is applied, I would recommend the removal of the surface soil, and would replace it when convenient. Chip manure, or old 'dung covered with straw, answers well for this purpose.—Correspondent of Germantown Telegraph.

SORE THROAT.—Take one large red pepper, such as are grown for family use; steep in half a pint of water, after which strain in a quart of molasses, adding a little vinegar; boil all together to a thin sirup; use this whenever the throat feels dry or disagreeable. If it be in the dead of night, it will soothe the throat (and not irritate) and warm it up well. If sharper than can be borne in the mouth, put it back near the palate with a spoon, and swallow. Apply outwardly a thin slice of salt pork, warming it up well in a little vinegar and pepper; apply as hot as can be borne on the throat; fasten the bandage that holds the pork over the head, to draw the cold and inflammation up, and not about the neck, as most people do.

BREAD.—The phosphorus which wheat contains in the outer kernel, immediately beneath the husk, is the feeder of brains, and the material substance which provokes to thought, study, reason, and all the forms of nervous energy. But the full value of wheat as a civilizer will never be fully realized until wheat meal takes the place of bolted flour, and the people learn to make bread without yeast or risings. Good bread is emphatically the staff of life, but the commercial article is the way to dyspepsia and premature death.

SHELTER FOR STOCK.—No farmer can be excused for allowing any beast in his care to be houseless during the winter. The least that can be provided for his stock is a shed, open at the south. While cattle will necessarily consume more food in an open shed than in a tight stable, it is a fact that they are more healthy in the former than in the latter. The reason of this lies in the imperfect ventilation of the stable.

Scientific.

THE natural history collections made by the naturalists of the Polaris expedition were mostly lost. The lemming and musk ox give the mammalian land fauna its character, and with the polar bear, arctic fox, four species of seals, and several cetaceans comprise the variety observed. Twenty-one species of birds were obtained, and about fifteen of insects, viz.: one beetle, four butterflies, six diptera, one humble-bee and several lchneumons, parasites in caterpillars.—Further, two species of spiders and several mites were found. In soundings of ninety fathoms in Smith's Sound a naked rhizopod, said to be of lower organization than the Bathybius, was brought up. It was called Protobathybius Robesenii.

THE SNOW PLANT OF THE SIERRAS.—One of the grandest objects, says the San Francisco Bulletin, which meets the eye of the traveler in our mountains is the exquisite plant, the snow plant of the Sierras—the Sarcodes Sanguinea of John Torrey, the botanist. It is an inhabitant only of the higher Sierras, being rarely found below an altitude of four thousand feet, and its glorious crimson spike of flowers may be seen early in May forcing itself through the snows which at that period cling about the sides of our pine forests. The portion of the plant which is visible above the soil is a bright rosy crimson in color, and presents the very strongest contrast to the dark green of the pines and the shimmer of the snow. Its root is succulent, thick, and abundantly free of moisture, attaching itself to the roots of other plants, principally to the species of the pine family. Hence it is among those curious members of the vegetable world which are known to botanists as parasites, and is consequently entirely incapable of cultivation. The deer are extremely fond of it, and it is not an uncommon circumstance to find a number of the plants uprooted and robbed of the fleshy part of their underground growth by these animals. It belongs to the natural order Orobanchaceæ, and is met with through the whole of the Sierra region, becoming rarer as we approach the south.

LIGHT AND THE EYE.—Prof. Tyndall seems to have told us by no means all he knew about light in the lectures lately delivered by him in the United States. He continues his interesting experiments before the Royal Institution of England. From a report of his last lecture, given in the London Telegraph, we condense the important points. He pointed out that the rusting of iron and other metals was nothing but a process of burning, and the faster it took place the greater was the amount of heat developed in a given time. When the zinc plates of a Voltaic battery are rapidly oxidized in a suitable liquid, heat is produced; also a current of electricity which passes freely through any thick copper wire connecting the opposite poles of the battery. When he cut the thick wire in two, and united the severed ends with a thin one, the latter became white-hot, and he explained that the heat observed was derived from the combustion of the zinc in the diluted sulphuric acid of the battery. By this means, then, zinc could be burnt in one place, and the light and heat of the combustion be exhibited at another place. He next removed the thin wire and attached a piece of coke to each of the severed ends of the thick wire. When these two carbon-poles were first made to touch each other, and then gently separated a very small distance, the current passed over the small space between the poles, and the pieces of carbon were ignited so as to produce a light of dazzling brilliancy, the power employed being that of a Grove's battery of fifty cells. The light was so bright as to resemble a small globe, instead of two ignited points, the illusion being due chiefly to the spherical aberration of the lens of the eye. The lecturer added that a long list of indictments might be brought against the eye, such as its opacity, its want of symmetry, its lack of achromatism and its absolute blindness, in part. All these taken together caused an eminent German philosopher to say that if any optician sent him an instrument so full of defects he would send it back to him with the severest censure. But the eye ought not to be judged from the standpoint of theory; as a practical instrument, and taking the adjustments by which its defects are neutralized into account, it must ever remain a marvel to the reflecting mind. Prof. Tyndall next, by experiment, proved the angle of incidence to be equal to the angle of reflection, and explained how the indices of refraction of different substances are ascertained. He finally threw a spectrum upon the screen, by means of a hollow glass prism filled with bisulphide of carbon, and explained how white light may be decomposed into light of many colors. He said that in the phenomena of light and the complexity of the human eye and brain there was prodigality of relation and adaptation, and this apparently for the sole purpose of enabling men to see things robed in the splendors of color. Would it not seem, he said, that nature harbored the intention of educating us for other enjoyments than those derivable from meat and drink? At all events, whatever nature meant—and it would be mere presumption to dogmatize as to what she meant—mankind, as the issue and upshot of her operations, was with capacities to enjoy not only the endowed materially useful, but furnished with others of indefinite scope and application, which dealt alone with the beautiful and the true.—Home and School.

A DUTCHMAN and an Irishman once met on a lonely highway. As they met each smiled, thinking he knew the other. Pat, on seeing his mistake, remarked: "Faith an' I thought it was yon, an' you thought it was me, and it's nathur of us." The Dutchman replied: "Yaw, dat is dhru; I vas anuder man, and you ish not yourself. We both be some vone else."

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

The river is 14 feet 10½ inches below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the thirtieth ultimo:

Mississippi river and bayous	6,931
Red river	1,302
Ouachita river	186
Railroads	5,835
Lake	67
Mobile	1,744
Texas	96
Total	16,221

On Saturday the market opened with a fair supply and only moderate demand, and continued quiet during the morning, when the sales hardly exceeded 1,000 bales, after which parties came together more freely, and the movement exhibited increased animation, resulting in sales of 5,000 bales. There was some conflict of opinion with regard to quotations, but the weight of opinion appeared to favor a decline of ⅛c. in low middling and the grades above. Offers of 14⅛c. were accepted for a style of middling which could not be had on Friday under 14¼c., and so with regard to other grades. On Monday (election day) business was almost entirely suspended, and the sales confined to 450 bales. On Tuesday buyers came forward with renewed spirit, and during the morning no less than 4,000 bales changed hands, at irregular prices, a part of the business being at extreme outside rates, and a part rather more in favor of buyers, after which parties came together more freely, and there were further sales of 5,550 bales, making a total of 9,550, which is the largest business this season, the largest previously being 6,243 bales on the fourteenth ultimo. Nothing transpired to show any quotable variation in prices, but on the whole, if anything, the advantage was on the side of the buyers. Staple kinds continued firm at the previous rates.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 15,000 bales, against 12,050 for the corresponding time last week and 18,850 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 151,088 bales, against 122,302 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 161,580 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 65,386 bales to Great Britain, of 11,017 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 15,966 to France. We quote:

Good ordinary	12 @ 13¼
Strict good ordinary	13⅛ @ 13⅜

Advertisers' Directory

OF THE

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

LEGS

The Christian Advocate.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. J. HARP, FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH.

VOL. 20. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1874. NO. 46.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

MONTGOMERY, Nov. 6.—The State has gone Democratic by not less than 2,000 majority.

The result in the first Congressional district is doubtful. If Haralson (colored,) Republican, has been scratched to any considerable extent, he is beaten by Bromberg.

In the second district Williams, Democrat, has 1,000 majority over Rapier (colored,) Republican. In the third district Bradford, Democrat, beats Betts about 5,000. In the fourth district Hays, Republican, has 6,000 majority. In the fifth district Caldwell, Democrat, beats Sheffield, Independent. In the sixth district Hewitt, Democrat, beats Sloss, Independent, the present incumbent, by about 7,000 majority. The Democratic majority on joint ballot in the Legislature is 29.

Real estate is held twenty-five per cent. higher than before the election.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 7.—The steamship China brings Yokohama, Japan, dates to October 14. The murderer of Mr. Haber, the North German consul, was beheaded on the twenty-sixth of September.

The government of Corea has promised to send to Japan the heads of all persons implicated in the insult to the Japanese government.

The Formosa difficulty has not been settled, and war between China and Japan still seemed imminent.

The ram Stonewall, which was reported ashore in the recent typhoon, has been found to be all right.

The Japanese government has purchased an additional number of transport ships to be used in the event of war with China. They also purchased the French steamer Charles Albert.

NEW YORK, Nov. 7.—Tilden's majority is about 44,000.

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—James Theodore Holly, D. D., of Port-au-Prince, colored, Bishop elect of Hayti, West Indies, was consecrated this morning in Grace church. Bishops Lee, Potter, Kerfoot, and the Bishop of Kingston, Jamaica, officiated. The sermon was preached by Bishop Cox, of western New York, and the act of consecration was performed by Bishop Smythe, of Kentucky.

There was a large congregation present, among whom were many colored men.

The grave of Thomas Paine, near Rochelle, which remained so long undisturbed, has been recently entirely obliterated by Simeon Lester, upon whose farm it was.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 9.—Prof. A. B. Smith, ex-president of the Arkansas Valley Collegiate Institute, says there are fully forty thousand people in Kansas and Nebraska who are either now or will shortly be in absolute want of the necessaries of life, and he earnestly appeals not only to the citizens of St. Louis, but to the people of the whole country to send them aid in the shape of provisions and clothing, and as speedily as possible.

MOBILE, Nov. 10.—Commissioner Gillette rendered his decision to-day in the Wetmore case, saying there was no evidence against the prisoners, and they are therefore honorably discharged.

LOUISVILLE, Nov. 10.—The Episcopal Convention for the diocese of Kentucky meets here to-morrow to elect an assistant bishop in place of Bishop Cummins.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Nov. 5.—A dispatch to the Pall Mall Gazette, from Berlin, says it is reported in diplomatic circles in that city that the relations between the Czar and President Sermno have assumed a thoroughly cordial character, and it is expected Russia will in a short time formally recognize the Republican government of Spain.

PARIS, Nov. 7.—L'Universe says it is reported that Italy is about to issue a memorandum to the European powers, calling attention to the dangers to Italy from intrigues at the Vatican; declaring the government can no longer tolerate a permanent conspiracy in its own capital, and urging the powers to discontinue the custom of maintaining an embassador at the Holy See.

MADRID, Nov. 7.—The great painting of St. Anthony, by Murillo, has been stolen from the Cathedral of Seville.

MADRID, Nov. 9.—It is officially announced that the Carlists have abandoned the siege of Irun.

Don Carlos has arrived at Hendaye, France, accompanied by his staff. The government has demanded that they be returned by the French authorities.

Republican successes over the Carlists elsewhere are announced.

MONTREAL, Nov. 9.—The smallpox is still increasing here. The Hotel Dieu and the general hospital are overcrowded. Another house has been taken possession of, and ten patients have been placed there since Saturday.

IT IS a fact that God's care is more evident in some instances of it than in others to the dim and often bewildered vision of humanity. Upon such instances men seize and call them providences. It is well that they can; but it would be gloriously better if they could believe that the whole matter is one grand providence.—George Macdonald.

"MY BRUDDERS," said a waggish colored man to a crowd, "in all affliction, in all oh your troubles, dar is one place you can always find sympathy." "Whar? whar?" shouted several. "In de dictionary," he replied, rolling his eyes skyward.

The Grand Jubilee of Louisiana.

No other community in the United States ever had so great and precious a civic victory to celebrate, so appropriate an occasion for a general jubilation, exultation and rejoicing of the people, as ours, nor is there any other which could have exhibited the popular joyfulness in a more earnest and enthusiastic manner than in the grand display of last night.

The whole population was out-doors. The sidewalks were packed with sympathizing spectators and jubilants, and the streets were filled with a procession bearing torches, banners, transparencies—of men on foot, and on horseback, and in carriages—which seemed to be without end. It stretched nearly half the length of our very long city. Its march was enlivened by numerous bands of music and illuminated by a continual blaze of rockets. The clubs, led by that chivalric and dauntless brigade, the Crescent City White League, were out in all their strength, and marched with the precision and regularity of drilled soldiers. Each ward had its club, and there were many others bearing the names of prominent citizens. There were clubs of colored men, which were greeted everywhere with the cheers and the waving of handkerchiefs of ladies and gentlemen on the balconies and sidewalks.

So great was the procession that before the rear had filed into Chartres from Canal, the front had reached Canal through Rampart from Esplanade. It had encircled the whole square of the old city.

The houses all along the line of march were illuminated, and the balconies were hung with gaudy transparencies. As the procession swept through the streets the heavens were rent with the wild shouts of the people, of every class, sex, age and degree. It was the great outpouring of the joy and exultation of an emancipated people. The strong man had burst his shackles, had wrenched the iron bars from the walls and crushed the oaken doors that had so long imprisoned him, and once more breathed the pure air and cheering sunshine of freedom.

The procession, as well as the victory which it celebrated, will be a proud reminiscence to all who participated in or witnessed it.—Picayune, November 8.

THE FLEET GOING.—A few of the troops went away yesterday, and now the fleet follows. On Saturday the Powhatan, the largest of the fleet here, the Wachusett and the Kansas left for Key West. They had spent about six weeks here. The officers must certainly give the people of New Orleans credit for being well disposed toward the Federal government. Indeed the relations between the navy officers and citizens were always of the most pleasant and amicable nature. Nothing can be charged of intimidation to them, unless it be the bare presence of the ships in the river, which, we take for granted, disturbed on one's equanimity. It is greatly to be regretted that this cannot be said of the army, at least in north Louisiana.

On the departure we cannot help complimenting the navy officers on their judicious refusal to intermeddle at all in our local struggle.

The fleet will return to Key West or Pensacola, as these places are now freed from yellow fever. One of the main causes of sending the fleet here was the epidemic at these places. It is true that the struggle of September 14 might have served as an excuse for one or two vessels, but hardly for the whole fleet.

Most of the other vessels will leave in a few days. One or two will probably winter at New Orleans, as it has been found a safe and convenient naval station.—Picayune, Nov. 9.

AN EXTREMELY sharp man walked into the office of Dr. Jackson, the chemist. "Dr. Jackson, I presume?" said he. "Yes, sir." "Are you alone?" "Yes, sir." "May I lock the door?" And he did so; then, having looked behind the sofa, and satisfied himself that no one was in the room, he placed a large bundle, done up in a yellow handkerchief, on the table and opened it. "Thore, doctor, look at that!" "Well," said the doctor, "I see it." "What do you call that, doctor?" "I call it iron pyrites." "What!" said the man, "isn't that stuff gold?" "No," said the doctor, "it's good for nothing; it's pyrites." And putting some over the fire in a shovel, it soon evaporated up the chimney. "Well," said the gentlemanly man, with a woebegone look, "there's a woman up in our town has a whole hill full of that, and I've been and married her."

HOUSEHOLD WORDS.—Stop your noise! Shut up this minute! I'll box your ears! Hold your tongue! Let me go! Get out! Behave yourself! I won't! You shall! Never mind! You'll catch it! Put away those things! You'll kill yourself! I don't care! They're mine! Mind your own business! I'll tell ma! You mean thing! There, I told you so! You don't! I did! I will have it! Oh, look what you have done! 'Twas you! Won't you catch it, though! It's my house! Who's afraid of you! Get out of this room directly! Do you hear me? Dear me! I never did see such things in all my born days!

WORDS.—God alone knows the influence of words upon human souls. Every word is a seed that will produce either night-shade or corn.

GASTON CIRCUIT, DEMOPOLIS DISTRICT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The camp meeting at Smith's camp ground began October 2, and closed on the seventh. The meeting was a good one. Between fifteen and twenty conversions, and twenty-four accessions to the church.

CLARK CIRCUIT, MERIDIAN DISTRICT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: We closed a meeting of five days on last Wednesday night, at Cedar Creek church, Rev. Francis Walker, preacher in charge. Truly the Lord blessed his people. Twenty-six were added to the church, with ten or twelve conversions. The membership was greatly revived. The pastor was ably assisted in preaching by Father Wimbish throughout the meeting, and by C. W. Moody, local, part of the time. Great good was accomplished. God be praised. Bro. Walker has been blessed to see the fruits of his labors just on the eve of his departure from us to Texas. May the good Lord ever be with him.

SHELBYVILLE CT., EAST TEXAS CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: About the last of July Bro. M. Donegan, our pastor, commenced a series of protracted meetings, the first of which was held at Brown's schoolhouse. Here the revival flame broke out. The Holy Spirit, manifesting itself in power from the first, has grown, giving the most remarkable series of revivals known in the history of our circuit. Many gray-haired veterans in the service of satan came tremblingly crying: "Men and brethren, what shall we do to be saved?" and many found that "peace which passeth understanding." At the District Conference Bro. Donegan reported the membership of our circuit at three hundred. At this writing it reaches five hundred and fifty, and Bro. Donegan has sanguine hopes that he will double the former membership. The number of conversions fully equals the accessions to the church. All praise to God, for his mercy endureth forever.

BRANDON, MISSISSIPPI.—Mr. Editor: I trust you will not consider it an intrusion on the valuable space of the ADVOCATE to give to our friends in other sections a short account of the abounding work of grace which God has been pleased to bestow in this part of his vineyard. Our faithful pastor, Bro. Leith, assisted by Bros. Hurst, Hayes, Ellis, Kendall, and Rev. Dr. Kline, of the Presbyterian church in this place, has just closed a protracted meeting of eighteen days with the most happy results. Thirty-two have been added to the church, a considerable number converted, and believers edified and built up in the most holy faith. The larger portion of the community seemed deeply interested, as was evidenced by the large congregations attendant upon each service. The word preached was indeed attended by the power and unction of the Holy Spirit. It was truly a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. May God in his own good pleasure and wisdom continue to advance his kingdom upon earth, to the entire destruction of sin and corruption among us, and until all shall know the Lord, whom to know aright is life eternal.

PIPKIN'S CHAPEL STATION, WOODVILLE DISTRICT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: Pipkin's Chapel station is a country church about fourteen miles north of Baton Rouge, and about seven miles east of Port Hudson, in East Baton Rouge parish, Louisiana. The number in membership is about seventy-five. This is its first year as a station. We have just closed the annual protracted meeting, lasting nine days, resulting in the addition of sixteen persons, the conversion of some sixteen or twenty, the revival of love in old members, and the planting of precious seed in soil that will, we believe, bring forth good fruit. Our communion service was noteworthy, as the members of the Plains Presbyterian church—Rev. A. Z. Young, pastor—gathered with us, according to our mutual custom upon such occasions, and at one time the altar was surmounted by some forty male communicants. The year so far has been one of constant care and labor, under many discouraging circumstances. The partial failure in the crop last year, and the light crop this year, hinders the building of a parsonage, and the station in consequence has not developed to that degree of solidity that it otherwise would have done. Yet there is much to be thankful for. God has kept us in peace and in the bonds of love. A healthy influence has been exerted upon the surrounding country. Souls have been converted and sinners warned. The quota for Bishops' fund ($20) has been raised. The assessment for widows ($40) will be met in full, and there is $75 subscribed for missions. The preacher in charge and presiding elder live in hope. Their faith is strong.

ROBT. B. DOWNER, P. C.

PALMETTO HOME, YAZOO COUNTY, MISSISSIPPI.—Mr. Editor: At the request of Rev. H. H. Montgomery, presiding elder of the Jackson district, I took charge of this work in March, and, notwithstanding the many difficulties attending the work at that time, I feel that the effort to establish Methodism in this section has not been in vain. Indeed if the advantage already gained is followed up it will result in a grand success. This is a fine field—unsurpassed, in fact, in point of wealth, refinement and hospitality—and only needs energy and a determined effort to establish a work that the church will have cause to be proud of. In the absence of houses of worship the people generously gave me the privilege of holding religious services statedly at their residences, which added very materially in the furtherance of the enterprise. We have an arrangement on foot by which we hope to build a Methodist church at this place before the close of this Conference year, with a fair prospect of building others on the work at an early date. As to the spiritual condition, while the outlook is not as promising as we would like to see it, yet there is a manifest work of grace going on in our midst.

At our quarterly visitation by the presiding elder on his fourth round, embracing the fourth Saturday and Sunday in September, a few who loved Jesus before were made to rejoice in God our Father, while the thunderbolts of God's truth hurled into the ramparts of iniquity with power and demonstration of the Spirit, resulting in two accessions to the church, thus enabling us, with those who had formerly belonged to our church, to organize a little society. On last Saturday Bro. R. D. Norsworthy, from Yazoo City station, came up and remained with us until Tuesday morning, giving us four stirring sermons, from which resulted one accession and one bright conversion, with a manifest effect upon the neighborhood.

I hope to send you some subscribers before the close of the year.

Yours in Christ,

V. H. NELSON, P. C.,

RUTLEDGE CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: We believe we stand at the head of the list of reports, in the bounds of Southern Methodism, in several respects. First, as to the number of accessions, of which we have one hundred and seventy-four. Second, as to the number of infants baptized, of which we have seventy-nine. Third, as to the number of Sunday schools, of which we have eleven—one more than our number of churches—all of which are using our own literature, and nine of which are in a prosperous condition. Fourth, as to the number of churches built this year, of which we have three which are respectable, and which we expect to preach in before going to Conference. Owing in part to the amount expended in building churches, and in the support of Sunday schools, and in part to the exceeding shortness of the cotton crop and the previous moneyed stringency, we fear our other financial reports will be somewhat meager. One other item of importance is that of the entire number received. Although a large proportion of them are from Baptist families, and a good many of them hardshells at that, only one has chosen to be immersed. The above results have not come along of themselves, but have cost much hard labor and many tears. The writer has more than once waded (on foot) creeks deep and wide, and crossed many others which came over the seat of his buggy, and driven through storms severe.

In looking back through the past four years the writer finds he has received into the church about five hundred members, organized one new circuit and five churches, built five houses of worship, baptized about two hundred and fifty infants, and raised over $200 for Sunday school purposes. What preacher in Southern Methodism has more for which to be thankful? To God's blessed name be all the praise.

RUTLEDGE, ALA., Oct. 28, 1874.

SPRING CREEK CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: Our camp meeting took place, according to appointment, on the eighth of October, and closed on the twelfth. It was our third meeting here. The interest has grown, both as to congregation and results. We had with us the Revs. Messrs. J. H. Stone, presiding elder, R. S. Trippett, C. Keener, J. F. Wynn, A. E. Clay, W. Hart and S. H. Cooper, with Bros. Pilley, Blocker, Cudd, Monroe, Warner, Coodey and others, local brethren. After the first sermon penitents presented themselves at the altar, and as the meeting grew in interest a greater number, who felt their sins to be a burden, came to seek that blessed One who once said, and ever says: "Come unto me." On Sunday night there were from ninety to one hundred at the altar. The preachers preached in great power and demonstration of the Spirit. The congregation sang lustily, and we felt that none but the choir immortal could surpass them either for spirit or melody. Oh! how the woods reverberated at the sound of our inimitable choruses, and the wind itself seemed to assist us as it played its unceasing anthems amidst the heavenward branches of the pines. We had some conversions at almost every service. Twenty-seven attached themselves to the church; probably a greater number converted; also a goodly number of prospectives. Some that had lost their first love were brought into the fold again, and Zion was built up. It was indeed to us Methodism in earnest. Spring Creek camp meeting is now an established institution, which will be seen from the following resolution:

Whereas, The members and friends of the Spring Creek circuit, with a view to promote the spread of pure and undefiled religion among our people by making our camp meeting a permanent institution, hereby request the friends of our church in Alexandria and Evergreen to assist us in supporting said camp meeting by building tents; therefore,

Resolved, That the members and friends of the Methodist Episcopal Church South in Alexandria, Evergreen and Bayou Boeuf circuits, and in Opelousas, be and are hereby earnestly and cordially invited to cooperate with the members on the Spring Creek circuit in establishing a permanent camp ground of said circuit.

We are greatly indebted to the tentholders and friends for their kind hospitality and self-sacrifice in providing for and keeping so many of our people, and that so very bountifully. May the Lord bless them a hundred-fold.

We have had the Master's presence with us throughout the year—had conversions and accessions at every appointment. Up to date we have received about sixty members, the majority by profession of faith, and baptized thirty adults and twenty-five infants. Yours in Christian love,

FRED. WHITE, P. C.

EVERGREEN, October 30, 1874.

Mississippi State Fair.

MR. EDITOR: This is the third day of the fair, and until to-day nothing of special interest to the writer has occurred.

At twelve M. Prof. Gathright delivered the annual address, which proved worthy the occasion and the reputation of the professor as a writer and speaker. It was hoped that the address, or a synopsis of it, would be obtained for your columns; but the speaker was not in accord with such hope. He is a modest man, but one of the ablest teachers and writers in the State. The subject was, of course, on the times, and the great necessity existing for active workers in the field of mind and matter. He iterated the fact that the farmer is nature's true nobleman, and insisted on the dignity, importance and beauty of labor. Further, that many in the so-called learned professions would be more useful to their country and kind were they engaged in manual labor. The latter, however, should be combined with a thoroughly correct theory. He doubted the expediency, at the present time, of establishing agricultural schools and colleges. He was sanguine as to the final success of the South in the various efforts put forth to ameliorate the condition of her children, and thought it unworthy our name and lineage to despond or to remain listless while so much remains for us to do.

A well-deserved compliment was tendered the contributors and supporters of our State fair; but regret was expressed that not more of Mississippi's products were exhibited. The fair, though predicted to be a failure, from present indications will prove a success, all things considered. One very objectionable feature—I may say two—appeared, viz.: horse-racing, with its attendant betting, games of chance, and liquor-drinking. Were all moral and religious people to frown upon these vices, and in every respect discountenance them, more good (D. V.) might be expected to be accomplished on such occasions.

The writer, although an observer of the other doings, did not look upon the racing, notwithstanding better men than he thought it no wrong action to become spectators to that, all of the surroundings of which are only evil. It was hoped that the grangers and the temperance men, by their combined influence, would so remodel public sentiment that the farming interests would be much more largely represented, and that a better moral tone should prevail.

As ever, yours, R. A. N.

Periodicals.

OUR Sunday school periodicals for December are out in good time, and of excellent quality. It is the last set of the year, and about the best. The Magazine, Visitor and Little People are not excelled by anything in their line that we receive. We are sorry to know that some of our schools are not supplied regularly with them. Let them take measures at once to order a full supply. They are worth a thousand times what they cost.

THE American Agriculturist for November is a fine number, splendidly illustrated, and crammed with valuable reading.

THE Little Corporal for November is beautifully illustrated, and filled with the best of reading matter for the children.

IS IT RIGHT for a Bishop to send a single man to a charge able to support a man with a family, provided there are married men competent to the work?

Is it right for a Bishop to send a man of family to a charge, and have a large missionary appropriation made to aid in his support, when a single man could be sent equally competent?

These are questions of much interest to a large number of the members of our Conference, and it is hoped that Bishop Doggett and his cabinet will prayerfully take them into consideration at our approaching annual session. ALABAMA.

A LITTLE good will apologize for a great deal of bad.

Nina Sahib.

THE CAREER AND CAPTURE OF THE HEAD OF THE SEPOY MUTINY.

The following is a sketch of the person and life of Nina Sahib, who has recently fallen into the hands of the British:

Nina Sahib, the title of Dhundoo Punt, a Hindoo chieftain and a leader of the Sepoy mutiny in 1857, was born in 1824. He was the son of a Brahmin of the Deccan, and when a little more than a year old he was taken to Bittoor, where Bajee Row, the peishwa or chief of the Mahrattas, adopted him in 1827. On the death of Bajee, without heir of his body, in 1851, an estate in the neighborhood, which had been bestowed upon him during pleasure by the British was declared lapsed to the East India Company, as they had previously refused to recognize inheritance of lands by adoption, and a pension of $150,000 a year granted to him and his family in 1818 was also stopped. Nina Sahib sent an agent to England to advocate his claims, but without success, and this supposed wrong he never forgave. He lived, however, in apparent friendship with the English, imitating their customs as far as he could, and was permitted to occupy the town of Bittoor, where he possessed great wealth and much influence. When the Sepoy mutiny broke out in 1857 he was fully trusted by the English, who applied to him for a body of soldiers to guard the treasury at Cawnpore, which he immediately granted; but no sooner had the insurrection occurred at the latter place than he put himself at the head of the rebels and killed all the Europeans that fell into his hands, among whom were two large parties, principally of women and children, who were endeavoring to escape down the Ganges from Futtehgurh. The English at Cawnpore, in the meantime, defended themselves until June 27, when they surrendered on the Nina, promising to send them safe to Allahabad. They were permitted to embark, but immediately afterward fired upon, and many were killed, and the rest brought back to land. The men were put to death at once; the women and children, after suffering horrible outrages, were massacred July 15, the day before Havelock arrived at Cawnpore, and their bodies thrown into a well. The Nina retreated to Bitteor, where Havelock defeated him on the seventeenth, driving him out of the town and destroying his army. He soon got together another army, with which he followed Havelock into Oude, but afterward returned toward Cawnpore with the intention of attacking General Neill, who was in garrison there with a small force. Reoccupying Bittoor, he was driven back in confusion by General Neill, August 15; and on the next day Havelock, who had returned from Oude, defeated his whole force after a sharp engagement. Owing to the exhaustion of the victors, and their want of cavalry, the Nina escaped, and without coming directly in contact with the British, except once at Cawnpore, where Sir C. Campbell defeated him, December 6, continued an active and harassing warfare. On the occupation of Gwalior by the rebels, in June, 1858, he was chosen peishwa of the Mahrattas, and his nephew, Row Sahib, was placed in command of the city. His subsequent career is difficult to be traced, for his energies were bent rather upon escaping pursuit than conducting offensive operations. Long after the other leaders had submitted or been captured, he continued, with the Begum of Oude, and about ten thousand rebels, to infest the northern parts of central India and the frontiers of Nepaul. A report that he died of fever, in the latter part of 1859, was generally discredited, and until now it had been uncertain whether he was alive or not. His arrest at this time will doubtless be a pleasant surprise to the British government, who will, no doubt, give him the punishment he fully deserves.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY IN BELFAST.—Our latest advices from Ireland, says the New York Christian Advocate, assure us that the largest houses in Belfast are unable to accommodate the crowds that gather at the revival services conducted by Messrs. Moody and Sankey. October 8 a great open-air meeting, free to all comers, was held in the Botanical Gardens. The railway authorities provided cheap fare, and the attendance aggregated about twenty-five thousand people, many of them of the highest respectability. Numerous business houses closed their establishments for a part of the day to enable their clerks and other employes to be present.

A great platform erected for the occasion was filled with ministers of various denominations—Methodist, Episcopalian, Presbyterian, Congregational and others. Mr. Moody proclaimed with impressive effect the free gospel offered to all, and Mr. Sankey led the congregation in singing the beautiful evangelical hymns which intensify the devotional interest of the revival meeting. At the close of the service the people were invited to repair to the in-door meetings held in various churches.

THE Rev. Charles M. Baldwin, son of the late Rev. Dr. S. D. Baldwin, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, died in Nashville, in great peace, November 3. He had been ill for some months, and in consequence asked to be discontinued (being on trial) at the late session of the Tennessee Conference.

FAR APART.

Beneath the quaint old bridge you hear
The waves make music as they pass;
And, winding to the elm-tree near,
You see the pathway through the grass,
Where we were wont to walk, alas!

The river wanders, as of old,
Beneath the shade of willow-trees;
The sunlit waters gleam like gold,
And ripple to the gentle breeze;
But I am far from thee and these!

The sky bends over, broad and blue,
And in the soft and mellow light
You tread the lane our footsteps knew
In former days, when days were bright;
Do these days bring such sweet delight?

And still that lane with grass is green;
With fragrant flowers the banks are fair;
In golden gloss and silver sheen
The bees still haunt the balmy air;
But you will fail to find me there.

Again, perchance, I may not see
The rustling rows of willow-trees
(Which lent a leafy canopy
When we strolled underneath at ease;)
For I am far away from thee and these!

Our joys forsake us. Soon does Spring
Pass by and for the Summer call;
Soon do the birds lose heart to sing
When fading leaves in Autumn fall;
And Winter is the end of all.

The Quiver.

Presiding Elders and Missions.

MR. EDITOR: In a great many presiding elders' districts there are fields of ministerial labor which are denominated missions by the Bishops who successively preside over our Annual Conferences. The Annual Conference Missionary Boards of the respective Annual Conferences make appropriations of missionary funds to these missions for the support of the preachers who are appointed to them. Sometimes appropriations are made to aid in the support of the presiding elders of such districts as are financially weak. The Missionary Boards, I doubt not, in making their appropriations, do so in view of such facts or information as they have before them. Frequently, however, the boards are not apprised of all the facts. The figures in the reports of our statistical secretaries, showing the aggregate receipts of the presiding elders of the several districts, constitute one class of facts, at least, from which the boards determine whether or not it is necessary to make appropriations to aid in the support of the presiding elders. From the same source (the statistical secretaries' reports) the boards determine what amounts to appropriate to the missions within the districts. A few examples may serve to illustrate how these statistics govern the boards in making their appropriations. For instance, B. district, of Z. Conference, in 1872 pays its presiding elder (collected by the stewards) $299. This the Missionary Board of Z. Conference sees is not sufficient for the support of the presiding elder. So it appropriates $500 to that district to supplement the salary of its presiding elder for 1873. The Bishop assigns to that district, as its presiding elder for 1873, a man with a small family. To C. district, of the same Conference, the Bishop assigns a man with a larger family. This district pays its presiding elder in 1872 (collected by the stewards) $1,370. This the board deems sufficient for the support of the presiding elder of C. district, and consequently makes no appropriation to aid in his support. If the board sees from the statistics that the stewards of a district collect an amount sufficient for the support of the presiding elder it makes no appropriation to aid in his support, and vice versa. Likewise, if the board sees that a pastoral charge does not pay enough for the support of the preacher in charge, it appropriates funds to supplement his salary, and vice versa. Frequently it occurs that a district, taken as a whole, has sufficient financial strength to support its presiding elder, and the board, being apprised of that fact, makes no appropriation of funds to aid in the support of the presiding elder; while within the same district there are a few circuits of such little financial strength that it becomes necessary to supplement the salaries of the preachers in charge by an appropriation of missionary funds. Here the question arises: Have the presiding elders a right to a part of the missionary funds appropriated to weak circuits and missions within their districts? Those who take the affirmative of this question argue (and this is the only argument advanced on that side) that, as the presiding elders render service on these missions, they have a right to a part of the appropriations made to them. But, on the negative side, he it said that it does not follow that the presiding elders have a right to a part of the appropriations to missions within their districts simply because they render ministerial service upon them, else local preachers and supernumeraries are entitled to a part of the same fund. I believe it is commonly understood that the presiding elders must attend four Quarterly Conferences in each pastoral charge within their districts respectively, unless a pastoral charge is bracketed with some other pastoral charge by the authority of the Bishop. And the presiding elders are entitled to share with the preachers in charge the funds collected by the stewards for the support of the ministry during the current year. But they have no right to a part of the missionary appropriations to the weak circuits and missions within their districts. That it is not equitable for the presiding elders to share in the funds appropriated to missions within their districts may readily be seen by the following illustrations: B. district, of Z. Conference, pays the presiding elder in 1872 (collected by the stewards) $299. This the Missionary Board of Z. Conference sees is not sufficient for his support. So it appropriates $500 to that district to aid it in the support of its presiding elder for 1873. The district stewards allow him $500 more, and apportion that amount among the several pastoral charges on the district for collection. Thus it is estimated that $1,000 is necessary for the support of the presiding elder of B. district. On said district there are two missions—the G. mission and the H. mission. To the G. mission the board appropriates $150, and to the H. mission $100. The stewards on G. mission allow the preacher in charge, in addition to the missionary appropriation, $110. Thus it is estimated that $260 is necessary for the support of the preacher in charge of G. mission. The district stewards apportion $25 to G. mission to be collected by the stewards for the support of the presiding elder. Of this $135 the stewards collect $73.50, $60 of which is paid to the preacher in charge, and $13.50 to the presiding elder. The stewards on the entire district collect for the presiding elder $299. The Missionary Board pays sixty per cent. of its appropriations. So the presiding elder receives $599. This amount is small enough—not quite sixty per cent. of his entire allowance. The preacher in charge of G. mission receives $60 collected by the stewards and $90 from the board—that being sixty per cent. of its appropriation to that mission. Thus the preacher in charge receives $150 in all—not quite sixty per cent. of his entire allowance. Between him and his presiding elder this is perfectly equitable, as each receives the same proportion of his allowance. But suppose the presiding elder takes a part of the appropriation to G. mission. If he makes a pro rata division of this fund between himself and the preacher in charge of G. mission, on the basis of their respective allowances by the stewards, his share is $16.66. So the presiding elder (as he takes also a share of the appropriation to H. mission) receives $620 or more, which is more than sixty per cent. of his allowance, while the preacher in charge of G. mission receives only $133.34—considerably less than sixty per cent. of his allowance. All can see that $1,000 for the presiding elder is a more liberal allowance than $260 for the preacher in charge; and yet the presiding elder, by sharing in the appropriations to missions within his district, gets more than sixty per cent. of his allowance, while the preacher in charge of G. mission, having to share with his presiding elder the fund appropriated to his mission, receives less than sixty per cent. of his allowance. This is not equitable.

Again, C. district, of Z. Conference, pays in 1872 (collected by the stewards) for the support of its presiding elder $1,370. E. circuit, on C. district, pays $164.50 for the support of its preacher in charge for the same year. The Missionary Board of Z. Conference, deeming $1,370 sufficient for the support of the presiding elder of C. district, makes no appropriation to that district to aid in his support. But, seeing that $164.50 is not enough for the support of the preacher in charge of E. circuit, the board appropriates $200 to that circuit. The district stewards on C. district allow the presiding elder $1,875 for 1873, and of this amount they apportion $100 to E. circuit. The stewards of E. circuit allow the preacher in charge $500 in addition to the missionary appropriation. Thus it is estimated that $700 is necessary for the support of the preacher in charge of E. circuit for the year 1873. The stewards throughout the district collect for the presiding elder $1,136, $27 of which is collected by the stewards of E. circuit. The same stewards collect for and pay to the preacher in charge of E. circuit $135. In addition to this he receives from the board $120, which is sixty per cent. of the appropriation to E. circuit. His receipts in all amount to $250—a little more than fifty per cent. of his allowance. The presiding elder receives a little over sixty per cent. of his allowance. This is equitable, however, as the presiding elder and preacher in charge each receives twenty seven per cent. of the amounts assessed upon E. circuit for their support respectively. The preacher in charge receives a smaller per centage of his allowance than the presiding elder, yet there is equity between them, as it is the misfortune of the preacher in charge to serve a circuit which pays but twenty-seven per cent. of its assessment, and the good fortune of the presiding elder to serve a district which, taken as a whole, pays over sixty per cent. of its assessment. But suppose the presiding elder lays claim to a pro rata division of the appropriation to E. circuit, and helps himself to $20 of that money. This reduces the receipts of the preacher in charge of E. circuit to $235, which is less than fifty per cent. of his allowance, and swells the receipts of the presiding elder to $1,156, which is largely over sixty per cent. of his allowance.

Suppose, again, C. district has other missions on it, and the presiding elder lays claim to a share of the appropriations to them—his receipts are still further augmented at the expense of sad deficiencies in the receipts of the other missionaries. Thus the missionaries have to support deficiencies which go far toward making up an excess for the presiding elder. This is not equitable. Besides, if the amounts to which the presiding elder helps himself out of appropriations to missions within his district are reported in the column of receipts for the support of the presiding elder, a false exhibit of the financial strength of the district is made, as a part of the sum thus reported as the presiding elder's receipts is money paid by the board, and not collected by the stewards. Again, if these amounts are not reported as his receipts, the board may be deceived, and make an appropriation to the district to supplement the salary of the presiding elder larger than is actually necessary.

The conclusion that the presiding elders have no right to a part of the appropriations to the missions within their districts cannot be avoided. The support of presiding elders is otherwise provided for. The district stewards estimate their salaries and expenses, and if the stewards of any district fail to collect the amount estimated as necessary for the presiding elder, he must support the deficiency as best he can, as many have to do who manipulate no missionary funds at Conference. If the deficiency is so large as to cause distress, he may have recourse to the Preachers' Aid Society, or find relief in some other way; but he has no right to help himself to funds appropriated to particular missions within his district. These appropriations made by the boards are for the express purpose of sustaining the missionaries in their work. The majority of the presiding elders, so far as I have had opportunity to observe and inquire, think as I do, and consequently lay no claim to a share of the appropriations to missions within their districts. The very few presiding elders who entertain the opposite view, and act accordingly, no doubt are sincere and honest, yet I think they are in the wrong. Therefore, Mr. Editor, I furnish you with this communication, in the hope that the presiding elders will see it, and that hereafter there will be uniformity throughout our connection in the practice of presiding elders touching this matter. I am not personally involved in this matter, as I never had a cent withheld from me by a presiding elder to which I thought myself entitled. I only write because I desire that justice be done to men who deserve the sympathy of all—I mean the men who travel missions within the several Annual Conferences. I heard a preacher who had traveled a mission in one of our Annual Conferences expressing doubt as to his ability to move his family to a circuit to which he had been assigned, "because," said he, "I did not get the missionary money to which I was entitled." Two hundred dollars had been appropriated to the mission he had served, and he only received $76. According to the decision of the board, as I understood it, he ought to have received $120.

In conclusion, either the presiding elders who shared in the appropriations to missions within their districts ought of right to pay back to the missionaries the amounts to which they helped themselves, or missionaries on other districts ought of right to pay over to their presiding elders a share of the missionary funds they received. Let there be uniformity in this matter.

SIXTY PER CENT.

Conference Skimmers.

MR. EDITOR: There is a class of preachers in the itinerancy, I think, the above appellation exactly fits, and I will tell you why I think so. They skim off the richest and best cream of the Conference to which they belong, and if they can see any good skimming anywhere else they are awful anxious to get to do the work.

I am not opposed to transferring from one Conference to another, but I am opposed to this skimming for good and preferred appointments. If a preacher has any personal reason for a change, it ought to be allowed, and in that case he should go to take his chances—equal chances—among the brethren to whose Conference he transfers, and should be received as a brother, and treated as if he had always been a member of that Conference.

Or sometimes the Bishop sees proper to transfer men to fill the work as they think best, there being no suitable men in the Conference where the precious boon lies. In this case it is right to welcome them to the new field, or back to the old again; but let the Bishop make the preferment. There are some brethren who, as soon as they hear of some important appointment to be vacated in a sister Conference, draw out their long-handled spoon and begin to skim; and as soon as the cream begins to rise in the old Conference they left, they are right back in it with their ladle.

These Conference skimmers remind me very much of some fortune-hunters in matrimony—any lady is fair if she has money; none are comely without it. So any Conference is fair if it has a few large cities in it, and no suitable men to fill them. Some of these favorites tickle for each other. They interchange pulpits, give the congregation a sugar-stick to suck; and next you hear they are demanded by the people; and a hint is all they need to be manufactured into a demand.

Sometimes when they hear of any good skimming to be done they become wonderfully zealous, and feel that Providence is going to enlarge their field of usefulness. They cannot go into all the world without a transfer; and I have heard of a few in my life who felt that God had called them to a large city mission. "No pent up Utica could contract their powers."

Now, in all seriousness, is this a fair tote? Is it right for one man or set of men, because fortune or accident has once placed them in an important position, that they should run that line through all the Conferences? That is the great reason why they revolve in this circle. They are in it and intend to stay in it. It is easy to stay on the top shelf, but it takes hard scrambling to get there. It is all fudge to say there are no men in the Conference to fill their places. How do you know they cannot fill them? Have you ever tried them? Some men command with equal success a regiment, a brigade or an army; and there are many men in the ranks who would make a general, and there are many men that could fill these places if they only had a trial. But these cream-skimmers keep them forever on blue milk.

Camp Meeting Suggestions.

What is it? thought I. Sure enough, what is it? Just this: Here are persons of intelligence coming to this place of worship with prejudices of the strongest sort—hearts as hard as flies, and strong set in their opposition to the humbling truths of God's word; and behold! in the flight of a minute a great change in their views and feelings has taken place. They know not how it came about, but of the fact that they are not now what they were a few moments ago there is no doubt. This only led the thought a little further. Suppose we give Huxley the benefit of protoplasm (what a word!) as the basis of physical life. Here is a new form of life which certainly did not find its beginning in a nettle. Physically the subject of this new life has undergone no change, and yet he asserts that he is not the same being. He is equally sure that the life he once possessed has been expelled, and a new form of life has taken the place thereof. The original protoplasmic life, which once filled this human form, vanished like a mist-cloud, and still there is vitality, and that of a robust nature. Just so. No change in the anatomy, locomotion or color of the hair is observable of this being; but the current of his thoughts, his tastes and affections are the very reverse of the ones he has just lost. Learned scientists, please solve this problem. If it is a "philosophical impossibility to demonstrate that any given phenomenon is not the effect of a material cause," as you say, here is a nut for you to gnaw. Can a change so sudden, so vast and complete be the result of a material cause? Does the "nettle-sap" theory meet the fact and account for the effect?

These camp meetings give birth to questions too hard for the learned and "wise" of this world to answer. True science all should love; and the wider she opens the space for contemplation, and the more she gives us of the wisdom and power of God as developed by her searches into the hidden treasures of nature, the loftier will be our reach of thought, and the deeper will be our humility.

Another thought: Alongside of this antagonistic fact to the infidel philosophy of the age, as resulting from science, was a beautiful example of the application of science to human wants. There sat one in the vast congregation deprived of hearing, but whose soul was thirsting for the "word" which gives this life unknown to protoplasm. To contrive some instrument, that the speaker and himself might be brought into communication, was the work of many a day. Perseverance, aided by the discoveries of science, enabled Bro. Ayers to attain his wish, and now with his simple metallic box and conducting pipe he can enjoy the preaching of God's word with the congregation.

Let science be used to develop what properly belongs to her department, but drive her back to her place where she invades the sacred domain of her Lord. Her mien is very attractive, her voice sweet, her companionship seductive, and she leads us into lovely fields where flowers please the eye, and their perfume intoxicates the senses; but if we are captivated by her flatteries, and become wedded to her teachings, so as to put aside him from whom she received being, her teachings will lead to hell.

INDAMORA.

October.

The bright days of autumn are ours again. A flood tide of golden glory beams from October's cloudless sky, bathing the earth with impressive beauty, mournfully sweet. The lessons learned from nature's treasures are beautiful and instructive, making bright our being with the essence of joy, casting a melting tenderness, fraught with gleanings from memory's touching pages, over our hearts. Earth's panorama shines with the dress of gold and crimson of the dying leaves that rustle down with stillness so profound that we almost start at the overflowing of the heart's full fountain. The grandeur of the Scripture strikes us: "We all do fade as a leaf." We too must fade and fall. Impressed with this sacred truth, we look through nature up to nature's God, and meekly bow with submission to all his holy dispensations. The mournful beauty that crowns the golden days of autumn fill us with a tender appreciation for all the beautiful in nature. There is a charm, a beauty and a power, an impressive loveliness, in every scene we behold. The gushing swell, the musical murmuring of glittering waters sweeping over shining rocks and pearly sand, with here and there a cluster of crimson flowers drooping their perfumed bells to the amber wave.

The sapphire haze, the rosy light that flows from the sunset throne of burnished gold, painting the evening sky in the richest coloring of changing beauty. Pale flowers of light, whose beamy petals drip with silver dew, and their glittering tints tremble with sweetness distilled from the rosy sea, imparting freshness and fragrance rich and rare, and we bow to the shrine of poetry, while we feast on its enlivening sweets. Autumn days are tinctured with a melting tenderness which language fails to paint, from the glowing flush of jeweled morn to the gray twilight hour, when all nature is hushed in sweet repose, and the mournful chirp of the cricket beneath the purple grass sounds in unison with our own flow of thoughts. As we gaze upward the jeweled fretwork of the sky smiles down through the moon-lit air in golden splendor over nature's charm, so exquisitely wrought.

We can scarcely repress the rising tear as we view the grand and beautiful executions in nature, never attained by mortal skill, the perfections of God's handiwork—types of that immortal beauty which fadeth not away, but will live and brighten through the limitless ages of eternity. If earth, our present abiding-place, fills our souls with lofty conceptions, gilds our pathway with refining beauty, holy aspirations, what will be the effect of immortal joys, living light, celestial beauties, that will burst upon our enraptured sight when the golden gates are opened and we enter eternal joys?

RUTH.

BURNT PRAIRIE, Oct. 14, 1874.

A HOLY life is made up of a number of small things. Little words, not eloquent speeches or sermons; little deeds, not miracles nor battles, nor one great, heroic act or mighty martyrdom, make up the true Christian life. The little constant sunbeams, not the lightning; the waters of Siloah, "that go softly" in their meek mission of refreshment, not the waters of "the river, great and many," rushing down in torrent noise and force, are the true symbols of a holy life.—Bonar.

WHEN God threatens, that's a time to repent; when he promises, that's a time to believe; when he commands, that's a time to obey.

COLONEL CAREY W. BUTT.

Carey W. Butt was born in Norfolk, Virginia, January 17, 1826, and died in Mobile, Alabama, September 30, 1874. His father, a local preacher, came to Mobile in 1836, and immediately joined his family to the church, putting his children into the Sunday school. Carey was converted at fourteen years of age, and received into the fellowship of the church by Dr. J. Hamilton. From this day of his conversion to the day of his death his consistent conduct commanded, in a remarkable degree, the confidence not only of the church members, but of all who knew him. At the time of his death, and for years previous, he was superintendent of the Sunday school, class-leader, steward, and chairman of the board of trustees. When sixteen years old Providence, by the death of his father, laid upon him the care of his mother and five children younger than himself—a responsibility which he discharged to the admiration of his friends, and the entire satisfaction of his mother and the family. In 1848 he was married to Miss Ann Heard (sister of the Rev. James A. Heard, now of the Memphis Conference,) with whom he lived in the happiest union till God took her from his embrace. Circumstances made him a merchant. By diligence he soon acquired a knowledge of the details of business, and, mastering the laws of commerce and trade, he rose to the rank of a first-class business man. His name is to be seen on the boards of trade and of education, and in the lists of directors of railroads and moneyed institutions. In these bodies he was held in high esteem for intelligence and integrity, and his counsel was listened to always with attention and respect. During the war he commanded a company, and was severely wounded in the battle of Shiloh. Afterward he commanded a regiment of State troops, stationed in Mobile, being disqualified by his wound for further field service. After the close of the war he resumed business, and rapidly accumulated wealth, but, removing to New Orleans, lost it all by the failure of his country customers. Returning again to Mobile, he entered into the cotton business, which proved exceedingly lucrative. And again last year the financial calamity, which spread over the country, fell upon him. But again, not dispirited, he made arrangements, and was just entering upon business with excellent prospects of gain. Like all really great men, Colonel Butt was remarkable for variety of intellectual gifts, for fullness and force of individual life, and for a peculiar combination of moral principles which gives character its unique and harmonious expression. In language and imagination he had the gifts of the orator or poet; in the perception of form and color, and the power of original design, those of the painter or sculptor; in delicate appreciation and enjoyment of sweet sounds, those of a musician. These talents all rested upon a strong basis of common sense, solid in its structure, and large in all its proportions. He seemed capable of distinction in almost every department of intellectual labor. A mind so richly furnished made him a delightful companion in conversation, as well as a valuable associate in business. His conversion was satisfactory. He never doubted it, but always spoke of it as a fact of consciousness distinct as his personal existence or identity. He knew when and where he first saw the Lord and heard his word of forgiveness—a fact that made him an excellent religious counselor and guide, in that it gave him clearness of spiritual perception, and furnished him with a test of spiritual judgment. For this reason he filled with efficiency the various offices of the church, keeping his eye on her spiritual life, and guarding that life with jealous vigilance and inflexible resolution. No matter how sin attempted to disguise itself under the pretenses of neutrality or righteousness, he could see it and define it, and would expose it as well in personal conduct as in proposed policies. Gifted in prayer, ready and appropriate in song, scriptural in advice and exhortation, he was of great value to all social meetings. In business meetings also he was no less valuable, being able to discriminate between matters of obligation and matters of expediency, the essential principles of religion and mere laws of taste. The worth of such a man cannot be estimated. And when to all this we add, as we may in truth, that he had enlarged views—loathed everything narrow in church policy as a meanness and a sin, that he devised liberal things, that he freely made large contributions to all purposes of benevolence, that he had the courage to denounce wrong and defend right—we can but mourn his death as a loss almost irreparable. His character was molded by two very simple but very great moral principles—confidence in himself, and trust in God. These seemed to have blended into his very consciousness, and to have modified every movement of his mind and soul. They imparted to his character at once simplicity and fullness, uniformity and variety, buoyancy and gravity. He held himself answerable directly and only to God and his own manhood. As responsible to himself his course was marked by a sustained, dignified self-respect, which delighted to concede all that is due to the personal rights and dignity of others—even the humblest—yet, without offensive self-assertion, indignantly refused to bow to any mere form of human greatness, and despised every appearance of pusillanimity as essential degradation, and in biting scorn denounced it as a villainy. As responsible to God he bowed with reverent and submissive spirit to the will of God, whether written in the Holy Scriptures or expressed in the events of his own life; and years ago reached a point, as he has frequently said to me, where, if in his power, he would not erase a syllable from the holy word or alter a fact in his life. He arranged his business affairs soberly, and then, not calculating on failure, put all his strength to work to accomplish his purposes. And if his plans failed, as sometimes they did, reducing him from affluence to poverty, he cheerfully submitted, and threw himself fully back on Providence, believing with all his heart they would have succeeded had God seen best to break them—best for him and for his, both for the world and the next. Such alternations of prosperity and adversity would have ruined men less perfectly balanced, burst their hearts with pride, or crushed them with despair. But a life regulated as his could not be deranged by these things, because it was hid in God and beyond the reach of disturbing forces. Consequently, in poverty or wealth, in blessing or bereavement, in health or sickness, he was the same humble, hopeful Christian, the same quiet, unostentatious gentleman, the same collected, laborious man of business. When his wife died, for a short time, only a few days, his whole nature rose in meek and resentful rebellion against God. But, except on that occasion, all the incidents of his life, from sixteen years old till his death, he accepted as the conditions of development and preparation for heaven. There was about him no repining, no boasting, no despondency, no presumption. He was satisfied with his life, because God had ordered it, and he met death without a fear. He died of disease of the heart, at the home of his brother-in-law, Mr. D. Y. Ass, and was buried by his friend, Dr. Hamilton, from Franklin Street church. He left to mourn him a daughter, a son and three sisters, besides all the Methodists and hundreds of others in this city. The following resolutions, passed by the Sunday school, you will please publish.

J. W. RUSH.

RESOLUTIONS OF FRANKLIN STREET SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Whereas, It has pleased almighty God in his wise providence to remove out of this world our beloved brother and superintendent, Carey W. Butt, who for thirty-eight years, with only occasional interruptions of short intervals, was actively associated with this Sunday school; And whereas, He was converted to God while a scholar, at the age of fourteen, and in all his subsequent life of boyhood and manhood maintained an unblemished Christian character, and labored with sustained and pious zeal for the interests of this school, as scholar, as teacher and as superintendent, cheerfully and without stint giving it his thought and time and prayer; therefore,

Resolved, That in the death of Bro. Butt we feel this school has lost not only a true friend and bright ornament, but a wise and worthy superintendent; and it is with unfeigned sorrow we think of the fact that we shall never again see his familiar form nor hear his loving voice within these consecrated walls.

Resolved, While we mourn in this deep affliction we can but express to our heavenly Father our devout gratitude for the rich legacy bequeathed us in the memory of his deeds and words while living, and in his triumphant faith when dying, which legacy we will endeavor to cherish by following him as he followed Christ.

Resolved, That with his bereaved family we bow in humble sorrow, and mingle our tears with theirs; and that we prayerfully commend them to him who is the "Father of the fatherless," and the "God of all consolation."

Resolved, That the above resolutions be recorded in the journal of the Sunday school, and a copy of the same be sent to the family of the deceased.

FRANKLIN ST. SUNDAY SCHOOL, Oct. 4.

NORWOOD SAMUEL LIPSCOMB died August 11, 1874, of congestion of the brain. Norwood would have been two years of age September 26. He was out playing in the yard, in perfect health, when the angel of death approached without warning, and in one hour's time after returning indoors he was asleep in the arms of Jesus.

ALDURO COLLINS LIPSCOMB, born March 8, 1866, died August 22, after an illness of two and a half days. His disease was congestion. Alduro had been in delicate health for some three or four weeks, and was greatly afflicted in the death of his baby brother. He remarked that "he wanted to go to heaven to see him." In less than two weeks' time his was privileged to be forever with Norwood. His favorite song was: "There will be something in heaven for children to do." The parents of these loved ones—John N. and Eulora M. Lipscomb, formerly of Clinton, Louisiana—are trying to feel and say, with Job: "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him."

ROBERT B. DOWNER.

PIPKIN'S CHAPEL, LA., October 21, 1874.

SUSIE DAWSON, infant daughter of Americus C. Mitchell Jr. and Susie Dawson Mitchell, of Greenville, Alabama, died on the twenty-ninth of August, 1874. Rest, sweet little one, in the arms of thy Savior.

RATHER MORE THAN ENOUGH.—A story is told of a certain old lady, resident in the country, and owner of a little farm, whose growing crop was suffering for want of rain, who, though not "professedly pious" herself, was still a believer in prayer as a physical force (as Prof. Tyndall is not,) and who therefore joined heartily in the request made by the farmers to the minister of the little neighboring Methodist church that he would at the Sunday morning service pray for rain. The prayer was duly made, and during the latter part of the same day a sweeping and copious shower passed over the place, at once watering and prostrating the growing corn. Then the old lady, looking out upon the ruin, almost in despair exclaimed: "Ah! that is just the way with them Methodists; they never undertake anything but they overdo it."

TO TRAVAIL in spirit is to travel upward, and the highest ascension is only possible from the lowest depths.

"PER CRUCEM AD LUCEM."

BY JEAN RAMSAY.

Ah! the cross! I sink beneath it!
Bitter, bitter is the cup;
Back I shrink with fear and loathing.
God! how can I drink it up?"

Weeping, sad, and full of anguish,
Lonely, weary, thus I sighed;
Until, like a voice from heaven,
Came these words: "Christ crucified!"

Broke the clouds of care and sorrow;
Easier grew the heavy cross;
Shone the ray of light from heaven
O'er my dark soul, tempest-tossed.

His the cross and his the anguish!
His the burden pressing weary!
His the struggle with temptation!
His the loneliness so dreary!

Knowing this—whene'er I falter
Traversing the desert wide,
Sure this thought my soul shall strengthen—
Here he walked: "Christ crucified!"

Blindly stumbling o'er the pathway
Where his pierced feet the glide—
Frightened, trembling, loud I call him:
"Help me! O thou crucified!"

Comes the answer, whispered softly,
At the sound new strength comes o'er me:
Child, fear not! My footprints follow;
In this way I walked before thee."

What though shadows darken round me!
Just before he goes—my Guide.
I'll not fear—no ill can harm me,
Walking with "Christ crucified!"

Prayer Blundering.

Contemporary recommends that e who may be called upon to the devotional exercises of a yer meeting should carefully pree themselves by practice before-
d. Certainly the idea is a good and should be pursued, espely when needed to give a measure omposure and confidence, and in way serve to prevent many of blunders which are so often wit-ed. Besides, it would seem that he use of a wise discretion in the ction of those who are to take in the services much illiterate ndering might be avoided. No itullen that we have any knowl-
e of, requiring the office of public aking, is so replete with illustra-s of the absurd and the grotesque the prayer meeting. But how ch of this a little preparation and ttle care might have prevented.
s at school, the speaker on the form, the minister in the pulpit, e all carefully prepare themselves practice for their respective parts, why should not he who is to lead devotion of an assembly in prayer pare himself for the solemn office?
h preparation would give confi-ce, enable one to use the sacred vilege to edification, would save from much of the meaningless omontade offered up as prayer, prevent much of the blundering often met with. We recall once ring a brother remind the Alghty of his promise that "though sins are as scarlet, they shall be lter than snow." Of course he ant sins, but of course he did not so. Again, we once heard one ying in behalf of some mourning nds who had just suffered bereavent, and who were present: "We y thee to bless them, sinners ugh they are, of whom they are of." Evidently having begun a raphrase of a portion of Scripture, felt bound to finish his quotation.
en there are errors in prayer of ich a brother falling into them uld be kindly told. Thus to pray, earch us and try our reins," is ng the language of Scripture ined, but in a very different way
n what it was used in those times en the seat of the affections
s supposed to rest in the kidneys.
ain, we knew a good brother who d to pray, "May we be held in the ple of thy hand." He was inform-of his mistake, and avoided it.
d still another prayer was: "We nk thee, O Lord, for this spark of ace—we pray thee to water it."
ain, a brother, a good brother be s—and all such blunderers some-w seem to be as eminent for their ty as for their blundering—used premise with: "O Lord, we come thee on the knees of our body;
do not presume to rush into thy esence as the unthinkin' hoss rush-into the battle," etc. There are obably few of our readers who have t heard the stereotyped: "We me to thee with our hands on our uths, and our mouths in the dust,
d cry, 'Unclean; God bo merci-
,'" etc. It is not difficult to un-rstand that one in such a posture uld be "unclean," but it is by no eans easy to comprehend how one th his hand on his mouth, and his uth in the dust, could cry out at
. This we are aware is often oted as coming from the Scripture, t the Bible contains no such senses jargon at all.

When we enter the field of mixed etaphor, absurd trope and figure, are lost in a maze, and could not lp to compress the subject in a wspaper article. Right here one rnicious practice may be noted—
e habit of instructing the Almighty, hich one often meets with. But re we leave the prayer meeting d enter the pulpit, and recall the se of a Boston minister who com-enced a prayer in this wise: "O d, our Father, two hundred and ty-four years ago, where we now
e, the wild whoop of the savage s heard"—a piece of chronological formation of which there is no rea-n to believe the Almighty stood pecially in need. As between a paration for the prayer meeting
d a friendly word when a brother ls into error, it would seem as if ny of the blunders of our prayer etings might be avoided. But as the ministers, we fear they are difult to manage. There is so much ique preaching, so much argunt, so much reminding God of his omises, so much information vol-teered, that prayer has lost much its directness, its simplicity, and all we not say much of its effective-ss as well? The truth is, there is powerful tendency on the part of achers, and not them alone, to olly pervert the sacred office of ayer from that of simple confession, oration and petition to argument
l syllogism, with a bit of philosoy and metaphysical speculation ob-ely thrown in. Next to the won-ful answers which God vouchsafes prayer is the marvelous patience with which he endures these offen-sions offered to him under its sacred name and privilege.

There are many whose strongest antipathies are aroused at the mere mention of a liturgy; but is any such blundering, such manifest impropriety, to be found in the liturgy of the Episcopal or the Lutheran or the Reformed Dutch Church? The remedy for this state of things does not rest necessarily in a liturgy. A better acquaintance with Scripture, careful preparation before taking part in the service—though some are so gifted as not to need any preparation—the entire abnegation of self, coupled with a careful watchfulness on the part of clergy and laity, and a friendly word at the right moment when propriety is violated, will do much to give us simpler and better prayers, and an avoidance of the blunders so often manifest in the prayer meeting and in the pulpit as well.—Christian at Work.

Moths in the Candle.

Every moth learns for itself that the candle burns. Every night while the candle lasts the slaughter goes on, and leaves its wingless and dead around it. The light is beautiful and warm and attractive; and, unscared by the dead, the foolish creatures rush into the flames, and drop, hopelessly singed, their little lives despoiled. It has been supposed that men have reason, and a moral sense. It has been supposed that they observe, draw conclusions, and learn by experience. Yet there is a large class of men, reproduced by every passing generation, that do exactly what the moths do, and die exactly as the moths die. They learn nothing by observation or experience. Around a certain class of brilliant temptations they gather, night after night, and with singed wings and lifeless bodies they strew the ground around them. No instructions, no expostulations, no observations of ruin, no sense of duty, no remonstrances of conscience, have any effect upon them. If they were moths in fact they could not be stiller or more obtuse.

A single passion, which need not be named—further than to say that,
when hallowed by love and a legiti-mate gift of life to life, it is as pure as any passion of the soul—is one of the candles around which the human moths lie in myriads of disgusting deaths. If anything has been proved by the observation and experience of the world it is that licentiousness, and all illicit gratification of the passion involved in it, are killing sins against a man's own nature—that by it the wings are singed not only, but body and soul are degraded and spoiled. Out of all illicit indulgence come weakness, a perverted moral nature, degradation of character, gross beastliness, benumbed sensibilities, a disgusting life and a disgraceful death. Before its baleful fire the sanctity of womanhood fades away, the romance of life dies, and the beautiful world loses all its charm. The lives wrecked upon the rock of sensuality are strewn in every direction. Again and again, with endless repetition, young men yield to the song of the siren that beguiles them to their death. They learn nothing, they see nothing, they know nothing but their wild desire, and on they go to destruction and the devil.

Every young man who reads this article has two lives before him. He may choose either. He may throw himself away on a few illegitimate delights, which cover his brow with shame in the presence of his mother, and become an old man before his time, with all the wine drained out of his life; or he may grow up into a pure, strong manhood, held in healthy relation to all the joys that pertain to that high estate. He may be a beast in his heart, or he may have a wife whom he worships, children whom he delights in, a self-respect which enables him to meet unabashed the noblest woman, and an undisputed place in good society.
He may have a dirty imagination, or one that hates and spurns all impurity as both disgusting and poisonous. In brief, he may be a man, with a man's powers and immunities,
or a sham of a man—a whited sepulcher—conscious that he carries with him his own dead bones and all un-cleanness. It is a matter entirely of choice. He knows what one life is,
and where it ends. He knows the essential quality and certain destiny of the other. The man who says he cannot control himself not only lies, but places his Maker in blame. He can control himself, and if he does not he is both a fool and a beast.
The sense of security and purity and self-respect that come of continence, entertained for a single day, is worth more than the illicit pleasures of a world for all time. The pure in heart see God in everything, and see him everywhere, and they are supremely blest.

Wine and strong drink form another candle in which millions of men have singed themselves, and destroyed both body and soul. Here the signs of danger are more apparent than in the other form of sensuality, because there is less secrecy. The candle burns in open space, where all men can see it. Law sits behind and sanctions its burning. It pays a princely revenue to the government.
Women flaunt their gauzes in it.
Clergymen sweep their robes through it. Respectability uses it to light its banquets. In many regions of this country it is a highly respectable candle. Yet every year sixty thousand persons in this country die of intemperance; and when we think of the blasted lives that live in want and misery, of wives in despair, of loves bruised and blotted out, of children disgraced, of almshouses filled, of crimes committed through its influence, of industry extinguished, and of disease engendered, and remember that this has been going on for thousands of years, wherever wine has been known, what are we to think of the men who still press into the fire? Have they any more sense than the moths? It is almost enough to shake a man's faith in immortality to learn that he belongs to a race that manifests so little sense, and such hopeless recklessness.

There is just one way of safety, and only one, and a young man who stands at the beginning of his career can choose whether he will walk in it, or in the way of danger. There is a notion abroad among men that wine is good—that when properly used it has help in it—that in a certain way it is food, or a help in the digestion of food. We believe that no greater or more fatal hallucination ever possessed the world, and that none so great ever possessed it for so long a time. Wine is a medicine, and men would take no more of it than of any other medicine if it were not pleasant in its taste, and agreeable in its first effects. The men who drink it, drink it because they like it. The theories as to its healthfulness, come afterward. The world cheats itself, and tries to cheat itself in this thing; and the priests who prate of "using this world as not abusing it," and the chemists who claim a sort of nutritious property in alcohol which never adds to tissue (?) and the men who make a jest of water-drinking, all know perfectly well that wine and strong drink always have done more harm than good in the world, and always will until that millennium comes whose feet are constantly tripped from under it by the drunkards that lie prone in its path. The millennium with a grog-shop at every corner is just as impossible as security with a burglar at every window, or in every room of the house. All men know that drink is a curse, yet young men sport around it as if there were something very desirable in it, and sport until they are hopelessly singed, and then join the great, sad army that, with undiminished numbers, presses on to its certain death.

We do not like to become an exhorter in these columns, but if it were necessary we would plead with young men upon weary knees to touch not the accursed thing. Total abstinence, now and forever, is the only guarantee in existence against a drunkard's life and death, and there is no good that can possibly come to a man by drinking. Keep out of the candle. It will always singe your wings or destroy you.—
Dr. J. G. Holland, in Scribner's Monthly.

Scientific Dabblers.

What the Nation, in an article on Science and Religion, seems to regard as a mere danger, is an actual catastrophe, judging from the number of scribblers and talkers on science, who seem to cherish the apprehension that wisdom will die when they pass away. The Nation says:

"The danger to society from the men of science does not, we imagine, lie in the direction in which the theologians look for it. We do not think they need feel particularly troubled by Prof. Tyndall's speculations as to the origin of things, for these speculations are very old, and have, after all, only a remote connection with human affairs. But there are signs both in his and Prof. Hux-ley's methods of popularizing science, and in those of a good many of their followers, that we may fear the growth of something in the nature of a scientific priesthood, who, tempted by the great facilities for addressing the public which our age affords, and to which nearly every other profession has fallen a victim, will no longer confine themselves to their laboratories and museums and scientific journals, but serve as 'ministers of nature' before great crowds of persons, for the most part of small knowledge and limited capacity, on whom their hints, suggestions and denunciations will have a dangerously stimulating effect, particularly as the contempt of scientific men for what is called 'literature'—that is, the recorded experience of the human race and the recorded expression of human feelings—grows every year stronger, and exerts more and more influence on the masses. The number of dab-blers in science—of persons with a slight smattering of chemistry, geology, botany, and so on—too, promises to be largely increased for some time to come by the arrangements of one sort or another made by colleges and schools for scientific education;
and though there is reason to expect from this education a considerable improvement in knowledge of the art of reasoning, there is also reason to fear a considerable increase of dogmatic temper, of eagerness for experimentation in all fields, and of scorn for the experience of persons who have never worked in the laboratory or done any deep-sea dredging.

The following historical facts will give an idea of the enormous magnitude sometimes attained by migrating swarms of insects. After the defeat of Poltava, while retreating through Bessarabia, Charles the Twelfth's army was marching through a defile, when suddenly the men and horses were brought to a halt, being blinded by a living hail precipitated from a thick cloud which intercepted the light of the sun. The coming of the locusts was heralded by a whizzing sound like that which precedes a storm of wind, and the noise of their wings and of their bodies as they clashed together was greater than the roar of breakers on the sea-shore! General Lavalliant saw, at Philippeville, Algeria, a cloud of locusts twenty to twenty-five miles in length, which, when it descended to the earth, formed a layer over an inch in thickness.

Toward the close of 1861 the cotton plantations of Senegal were destroyed, and a living cloud was seen to pass over the country from morning till night; the rate at which it moved showed that it was about fifty miles long; and this was only the vanguard, for when the sun went down a still denser cloud was moving on. The English traveler, Barrow, states that in southern Africa, in the year 1797, these insects covered the ground to the extent of two square miles, and that, having been driven by the wind toward the sea, they formed a drift near the coast nearly four feet in depth and fifty miles long! After the wind changed the stench of their putrefying carcasses was recognized at the distance of a hundred and fifty miles.

The famines produced by the voracity of these acridians are not the only evils they cause to men and animals; a pestilential epidemic is oftentimes the result of the foul emanations from their rotting bodies.
The invasions of these insects are veritable national calamities. In 1835
China was ravaged by them, and the sun and moon were obscured.
Wherever they alighted the finest and richest crops were instantly devoured and the fields left bare; even the contents of the barns were to a great extent consumed by them.
The people fled in alarm to the mountains. In the submerged districts, where there were no crops to devour,
the locusts penetrated into the houses and destroyed the people's clothing.
These ravages, which began in April, continued without interruption till the season of frost and snow.—Popular Science Monthly.

What Affliction Does.

The Greek sculptor, Phidias, is walking in a marble-quarry in search of a block out of which to carve an ideal of beauty that he has long carried in his mind. It is now ready to take shape and form and beauty in marble, and become a work of art.
One block, more than all the rest, pleases him, and that block is to have more glory than all that lie in the quarry, and more affliction too. Its affliction must come before its glory, and the greater its affliction the greater will its glory be. How, think you, is Phidias going to make a thing of beauty out of that ill-shaped block of marble? With kid gloves and a gold-headed cane? Nay; but with chisel and hard blows he is going to do it. That Phidias is going to do rough work. Dost thou complain, O block of marble! that thou must lie on the stocks long years, and cry out under the heavy and repeated strokes of the sculptor? Dost thou say:
Why am I more afflicted, cut and broken than all the other blocks in the quarry? Wait a little, O smitten marble! thou art blind, and knowest not what is being done unto thee and for thee. He that strikes thee strikes not to break, but to make thee honored and beautiful. Well, the last stroke is made and the last touch is given, hammer and chisel are laid aside, and behold! what was once an unsightly and ill-shaped block now stands erect, surpassing all the creations of human genius—
the Apollo Belvedere.

Rejoice now, O marble! that thou wert smitten and taken from the quiet and luxurious but unhonored bed in the quarry. O afflicted Christian! God thy Savior is the sculptor, and thou art the unsightly, ill-shaped marble. These afflictions, trials, pains, sorrows and sufferings through which thou art passing are his hammer and chisel to make thee beautiful by making thee holy. The longer thou art on the stocks, and the more and heavier thy strokes, the more perfect and beautiful wilt thou be.
God has choice places in heaven, but they are not for those who lie all their days here in this world on "flowery beds of ease," but for those who have lain long on the stocks, and have seen days and nights of sorrow. Bear, O afflicted one! for the sake of the glory to come; the long-continued chastenings of thy Father.
The most afflicted on earth shall be the most glorious in heaven. A poor, sinful soul, washed in the blood of Jesus and made perfect by God's chastening hand, is an object that angels will delight to behold.—Working Christian.

How to Get Money for God's Work.

At the inauguration meeting of the Pastor's College, in connection with the Metropolitan Tabernacle, in the course of the evening Mr. Spurgeon said he saw the necessity of erecting such a building, but did not say much about it, but he resorted to what he considered the proper plan for getting money, namely: asking God for it. He did not ask the congregation; and he did not think he mentioned it to any one, except the few who gave the money, till he got £9,000. One woman wished to give a sum as a suitable memorial to her husband, and she gave £3,000 for the college. In all he had received £12,- 500, and he wanted about £2,000 more.

They had, he said, unlimited funds. Money was always to be had by asking God for it. The other day a person told him that he supposed he must be very rich. He told him in reply that he was richer than any Jew; that he had got more money than the Rothschilds, for when he required any money he had nothing to do but to ask God for it: that if it were good for him that he should have it, he had it; and if it were not good, he was the better for not having it. It was very singular how God did move people to give. How could he have carried on this and other work without? Three weeks ago at the Orphanage there were the bills to pay, and they had no money.
He said they could not ask God for it until they could themselves, and he put down £25, and several others did the same. He then prayed to God, and said: "These are thy children and this is thy work; send us this day a considerable sum of money, if that be thy will."

He went home and wrote a letter and sent it to be lithographed, but within twenty-four hours the £800 that they wanted came, and he had to send to stop the printing of that letter, and it never was printed.
God had sent it all. There was not a man among the trustees but who would bear witness that no one knew about that till the money came.
They did not tell anybody. One gentleman sent him a post-card requesting him to see him at the postoffice. He went, and the gentleman said he thought he ought to give something to the cause of God, and he handed him £300. And yet there were a set of wretches who told them that God never answered prayer, but these were persons who never prayed themselves.

How many troubles might mankind be spared if they would only stop to hear each other's explanation? How many ailments, both of body and soul, if explanations only came more frequently and freely!—

Religious Intelligence.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey are about to pay a brief visit to Ireland.
Shortly afterward they purpose to go for a short time to England before their return to America.

Later reports contradict the statements that Turkish authorities have actually forbidden the sale of Turkish Bibles. They have only talked of doing so, and the sale of Bibles still continues.

Three years ago there was only a ten-by-twenty log shanty at Erin,
Iowa, for a Catholic church. Now there is one of the finest churches in the State, a parochial residence and a school, almost completed, entirely free from debt.

Congregationalism in the United States shows an increase for the last three years of 204 churches and 17,161 members. The four States of Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska and Wisconsin furnish more than half the increase of churches.

The Independent says: "Perhaps the largest thank-offering ever made by any individual to the cause of foreign missions was the gift of £20,700, or more than $100,000, sent by Mr.
Walter C. Jones, of Manchester, to the Church Missionary Society."

In the catacombs of Rome it has been found that baptism is always represented as performed by sprinkling or pouring, and administered to infants as well as adults. Several baptistries have been found, but they are all too small to admit of immersion.

While Boston is sending missionaries to preach the gospel in China, there comes a Chinaman to preach
the religion of Confucius to Boston.
Wong Chin Foo is the name of this sanguine Oriental who thus seeks to turn the tables on the irrepressible
American.

Dr. George F. Pentecost, of Boston, recently assisted Mr. Spurgeon in the administration of the Lord's Supper to three thousand communicants in his mammoth tabernacle. Six thousand persons had previously listened to a sermon by Spurgeon.

It is said by one who has much personal knowledge of the Parsees, of whom there are forty thousand in Bombay, that hundreds of them are convinced of the truth and authority of Christianity, though they do not yet enroll themselves among Christian believers.

The Methodist Recorder claims that there are about 750,000 children in the Wesleyan Sunday schools, 180,000 in the day schools, and more than 100,000 teachers, paid and unpaid. "This care of the young," it says, "is one of the specially hopeful signs of the times."

The Minutes of the late General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland have just been published.
The statistics are as follows: Synods,
5; presbyteries, 36; families, 78,427;
communicants, 109,395; stipend payers, 66,238; ministers, 627; licentiates, 69; congregations, 555; total contributions, $680,745.

In the State of New York ministers of the gospel are exempt from taxation (their income we infer) to the extent of $1,500, but none are construed to be "ministers" under that exemption except those who are regularly ordained, have a regular charge and regularly preach. That is as it should be, if it should be so at all.

The third Sea Cliff camp meeting, which commenced August 27, has been successful and profitable. Drs.
C. K. True, E. O. Haven, T. M.
Eddy, J. F. Hurst, C. D. Foss, of our church, Dr. Stephen H. Tyng, Jr., of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and Dr. Antliff, of England, with many other ministers, were present and took part in the services.—*Meth-

About $12,000 was received by the treasury of the American Board on Monday, September 1, and $7,000 came in on Tuesday. This makes the entire receipts for August $48,866.
The amount needed for that month was $120,000, but as the books were to be kept open for a few days longer, it is to be hoped that a considerable amount will yet be received. Whatever more is to be counted in last year's receipts should be sent in immediately.

The Baptists of Philadelphia are moving in the matter of a sea-side camp meeting. They are offered four hundred and thirty acres of ground four miles south of Atlantic City, and two hours' ride from Philadelphia by rail, for $100,000, and it is believed that they will speedily complete the transaction, and early next spring will commence the improvement of the grounds and the erection of cottages.

The vast influence of the American Tract Society is in some measure to be estimated by the fact that it has prepared five thousand three hundred distinct publications, which by means of voluntary and employed agencies it projects into the habitations of the people in the remotest corners of the land, in all the languages of this diversified nation, so that each in his own tongue may read the wonderful works of God. Of their power for good no estimate can be made, nor will the records of time fully unfold.

Some time ago the Inferior Catholic clergy of the Province of Posen, alarmed by the severity of the Prussian government, started an anti-Ultramontane movement, which rapidly grew in strength. A priest, Dean Bashinski, now openly goes about gathering adherents. The plan of the leaders is first to urge the Pope to recognize the Falk laws, or in some way to arrange matters so that they may live in peace. In case of refusal they threaten to elect a bishop and form a Posen Catholic Church, not, however, breaking off all connection with Rome.

A friend sends us the following figures on salaries of missionaries, and vouches for their correctness: The American Board pay their missionaries in India $1,000 a year, the Presbyterians pay $1,600 to $1,970, the Reformed $1,100, the Methodists $1,200. In China the American Board pay $900, and in southern China $800; the Presbyterian Board $1,000, except in Canton, $900; the Methodist, $950; Baptist, $800 and house; Episcopal, $1,000. In Bulgaria and western Asia the American Board pay, according to size of family, from $650 to $750; Presbyterian Board, from $800 to $1,500, and no house; Methodist, $850.

At the late session of the National Unitarian Convention the association asked for $100,000 to aid in its literary and missionary labors. In the nine years preceding 1873 the annual contributions reached the sum now asked; but last year they had fallen to $40,000. Mr. E. E. Hale made an urgent appeal for the liberal churches in Hungary, which realized $458.25. A proposition to send fraternal delegates to the next annual meeting of the Free Religious Association was discussed at length and tabled. Able papers on temperance, the causes of crime, the punishment of criminals, and kindred topics, were read.

The Jacobite patriarch of Antioch is now on a visit to Jerusalem, where he was entertained the other day by the Archbishop of Cantorbury, who made a gracious speech to him, expressing the hope that he would receive and carry back to the East such an impression of the church and people of England as may conduce to the spread of pure apostolic Christianity and advance the cause of enlightened "education" in his own country. These Syrian Jacobites are the remnants of a sect founded by Jacob Bordai, Bishop of Edessa from 541 to 578. They are monophysites in doctrine, holding that the human nature in Christ was absorbed by the divine, so that he possessed but one nature, instead of two, according to orthodox creeds.

Baptist Publication Society.—The annual report of the American Baptist Publication Society for 1874, being the jubilee year, contains some important information. In 1824 the receipts of the society were $372 80. In 1873-4 they were $430 854—approaching $500,000. The society's work is divided into two departments, the accounts of each being kept in separate books. The missionary department shows a collection and disbursement during the fifty years of $799,224.86. The business department $3,162,038.85. Total, $3,961,263.71. It has printed during the years of its existence between three and four thousand millions of pages in many languages. To carry on its extended operations the society is about to build an edifice covering a lot 49 by 235 feet, from Chestnut to Sansom street, Philadelphia. The mission work proper of the society is colportage, commenced in 1840. Its colporteurs are found in almost every State and Territory in the Union, in Canada and in Europe. In the German States and Sweden much work has been done, and recently the society has extended its operations to Rome, under the superintendence of Rev. W. C. Van Meter. The society regards this part of its work with intense gratitude for past success and confidence for the future.

The field of the Western Turkey mission has been visited with drouth, with a severe winter without parallel, and with flood, together creating a real famine. The Armenians at Marsovan betook themselves to animal sacrifices. The Protestants showed such readiness to help the poor that their example was quoted in the community. The Sunday morning congregation at Marsovan numbers about five hundred, old and young (many of the latter children of non-Protestant parents,) and in the afternoon the same congregation is gathered around some forty teachers, studying the International lessons. At the out-station of Vezin Koprn there is an interesting state of affairs. One-fourth of the Armenians of the town have become Protestants, over one hundred souls having been added to the church within the last eighteen months. An influential Armenian has evinced so decided a leaning toward Protestantism that, in order to retain him, the Armenians have made him superintendent of their religious affairs, and receive his biblical instructions every Sunday. In order to retain their people the Armenians have also appointed a Bible reader and a preacher to the women. The whole movement commenced with a New Testament procured at Marsovan and read in the hearing of a man unable himself to read, but who was converted by the hearing of its truths.

From the late Old Catholic Congress, says the Independent, we get the timely intelligence that one hundred and thirty delegates were present, that Prof. Von Schulte was president, and that addresses were made by Bishop Reinkens, Prof. Huber, Judge Bleh, of the Old Catholics, Prof. Holzman in behalf of German Protestants, the Dean of Chester in behalf of the Anglicans, and the Rev. William Chauncey Langdon in behalf of the American Episcopalians. The meeting was at Freiburg, in Bresgau, which is the headquarters of Ultramontanism, and was thus by its very assembling a palpable challenge to the Infallibilists. Bishop Reinkens reported that the Old Catholic cause is making remarkable progress. The whole of Westphalia and large districts on the Rhine are now almost wholly in their hands. In Bavaria, on the other hand, the movement has as yet made scarcely any headway. Commissions had been formed for the promotion of friendly relations with the Greek and the Anglican churches. A resolution was passed stating that "the Old Catholics maintain their claims to their share of the church property and demand the protection of the State for their rights. Rejecting the Romish doctrine that the church property belongs to the Pope, they do not intend to hinder others in the celebration of divine service, and ask only for their share in the use of the churches, church vessels, endowments and benefices. It is the duty of the State to ascertain the strength of the new Catholics by making the Catholic electors of all communes vote on the question whether they recognize the dogmas of the tenth of July, 1870, concerning the infallibility and omnipotence of the Pope."

The Young Preacher.

In Methodism preachers generally start at an early age. The privileges of a collegiate education, and the growing opinion that a theological course, post collegiate, is desirable, tend to give us in these days a more mature material for admission on trial; but still the classes received are usually made up of very young men, some of them not yet having reached their majority. Thousands of our middle-aged preachers were in the saddle and riding circuits before they were old enough to vote; and of the fathers and the old men fast passing away, the most of them began before they needed a razor, which the fashion of the times required beard-growing men to use. Our system of circuits and frequent changes is exceedingly favorable to the safe and advantageous employment of a youthful ministry. There are safeguards thrown around it in the presiding eldership, and the senior preacher, and in the wise ordering of the appointing power, against faults and errors in administration; and an undue strain upon the mind and its resources is obviated by the brief term of an annual pastorate, usually over a work of several appointments.

Not many sermons are needed at the beginning, and comparatively few are demanded to serve through the first Conference year. The horseback travel gives due exercise, promotes the flow of healthful spirits, and is a preventive of dyspepsia. It is killing work for a young man of limited education, and without experience, to maintain himself in a station during the first years of his ministry. The circuit is the best gymnasium in the world, and the most healthful school for the development of the ministerial character. It has given soundness of body and mind to our preachers, improved their common sense, and secured that practical qualification for the work which neither books nor lectures can afford. As a rule the circuit should be the young preacher's first work, whether he comes from college, the theological seminary or the plow. Collegians can never be well-educated Methodist preachers until they have gone to this most important finishing school, and the willingness to matriculate in Brush College is a tolerable test of prospective fitness for their calling. The youth who begins with a high estimate of his claims to appointments, and is offended by the roughness and obscurity of the work to which he is sent, will hardly turn out well. He will probably be a dissatisfied man all his life, and will finally quit the ministry or seek a place in some other church. As an itinerant the element of failure is in him, and it will sooner or later develop into disaster to his standing and character.

In no other ministry does real merit sooner obtain fitting recognition, and in no other does the man more surely reach the place to which he is best adapted. The Bishops, as wise master builders, are likely to put the living stones where they will most strengthen and adorn the temple, and the people will not be slow to see and appreciate the gifts and graces of those who minister to them in holy things. It is barely possible that some "gems of purest ray serene" may never come to the surface, and that some exquisite flowers may be left to "blush unseen," but, for the most part, with the fields and the laborers given, the man will reach the position for which he is best fitted by character and attainments. In no other ministry does a young man get on faster than in ours. His advancement is more rapid, and the ground of his elevation broader than in other churches. Our connectional system puts its preachers into a field not limited by Conference boundaries, but as wide as the entire denomination, and his transfer to more important appointments is effected with facility, without detriment to the church and without damage to himself.

Woe to the man, however, who in the beginning seeks great things for himself, or who, in the maturity of his powers and experience, disparages his brethren and overestimates himself. The worm is in the bud, and blight will follow. To aim at greatness and usefulness for Christ is right, but there must be care, lest a wicked and selfish ambition come to be the overmastering passion. It requires a great deal of grace to begin, and still more of grace to continue in the work of the ministry. The simple and glowing piety of the first year, instead of being allowed to cool, must be fed and increased as the years roll on. There is no need for a man to think much about his position and appointments. Let him make himself the greatest and best of men, an effective preacher, a good pastor, and show himself "a workman not to be ashamed," and the rest will take care of itself. The finest-looking apple in the dish often has a blemish—there is a speck which tells of something wrong at the core. Many men feel that they are not appreciated, and wonder why they are kept in the background, while others are advanced. Not always is the apple specked or decayed, but sometimes it is, and if not, it may not be as large as some others. Where a man's estimate of himself differs from that of his brethren he should at least moderate his views, or keep them to himself.

The young preacher, filled with zeal and love, is hopeful, and the freshness of the dawn is on his heart. If he has a modest opinion of himself, has made up his mind to endure hardness, and feels called to save souls, he will be thankful and satisfied with any appointment, and the first years will be the happiest of all in many respects. After thirty or forty years of faithful, and possibly of eminent and honored labor, he will think of that first circuit as the toiler at evening remembers the blush and dew of the morning, and he will probably conclude that he has all along been appreciated and blessed far beyond his deservings.

The ministry of young men has its special value. We do not see how the church could well do without it. This element of youth, this young blood, this almost beardless presence, in spite of its crudeness and incompleteness, puts color into the picture, and gives healthier tone to the canvas. Gray hairs we must have, and the wisdom of years, but we also need the ruddy cheek, and the locks that are not frosted. The gardener, the florist, the fruit-grower, understand that there must be a succession in their planting and culture. There is utility as well as beauty in it. Some crops yield their best results before they reach maturity. They are ripe for use long before they go to seed, and have a worth because they are immature. For some purposes there is virtue in the tender shoot and the fresh-blown flower, even more than in the stalk and ear. The ministry of young men carries with it influences and sympathies of its own, and in its sphere is productive of results of the greatest value to the church. It has a temperament, a faith and an elasticity which bring success, and effect results peculiar to itself. The field of usefulness is not alone before the young man, and for which he is preparing, but it is around him, and he is gathering his best sheaves while he feels, perhaps, that he is only getting ready to sow. While he sharpens his sickle he is amidst the waving corn, and thrusting it in. The first fruits of our ministerial life are often the choicest, as they should be the earnest and promise of abundant usefulness in the future.

The young preacher must make himself. The kingdom is within him. Prayer, study and work will develop and bring it out. After all the advantages of education, and after all the advice sought, the preacher must be self-made. Let him make the most of what he is, and of what God has given him, and he will reach the highest round to which he is capable of mounting. He must grow like a tree, rather than be built up like a wall. Let him take care about the too close imitation of admired models, and avoid dependence upon published skeletons. Above all, do not preach other men's sermons. The mind and heart will suffer from such a course, and the preaching will be barren and unfruitful. Some young men have fallen into this evil—this dishonest practice of supplying themselves with custom-made sermons, such as the English market supplies for a shilling apiece, and others use the stenographic reports of the popular preachers of the day. No matter whether the theft is found out or not, the man who forms this habit curses himself, and when detected he forfeits the respect of his hearers.

God bless the young preacher who sets out this year, in whatever Conference, and under whatever conditions of weakness or strength. It is the beginning of a path that has many rugged passages, many dark defiles of temptation and sorrow, and many conflicts with the powers of darkness. But it is also a course which has large and gracious compensations, and one that, if faithfully pursued, brings him to an incorruptible crown.

Money Due.

The publisher of the ADVOCATE wishes us to say a word to subscribers and agents about money. Large sums are due, very large sums, of which he stands in great need at this time. All of his bills have to be met promptly—the paper-makers, the printers, the pressmen, the clerical force must have their money every week. They cannot live without it, and the publisher must borrow if the regular receipts are inadequate. There is abundance due from subscribers to more than meet all, but there is backwardness on their part, and this occasions embarrassments. Owing to the exceptionally hard times of the past two years the agent, at the request of many subscribers, has extended their accounts, but it is hoped that they will soon be able to remit the amounts due. Publisher and editor have done their work pretty much as a gratuity to the church thus far, but the means to meet other expenses must be forthcoming. The amount to the subscriber is small, and can be met by the most with comparatively little trouble, while the aggregate would afford the needed relief to the publisher. Bills are being prepared, and will be shortly sent out to the subscribers, and lists will be sent to agents as soon as possible. Meanwhile, without waiting, we would urge subscribers to pay, and agents to collect, as much as possible at once. All things considered, we have got along wonderfully well during the past years of financial stringency, and if even a moiety of what is due can be realized, we shall be placed in circumstances of comparative ease. The paper is certainly worth all it costs to those who read it, and to the church at large. With brightening skies politically, and with more hopeful prospects for the material interests of the country, we feel that this note of appeal to our friends will not be made in vain. The extensive revivals of this season should result in a large increase of new subscribers. AN ADVOCATE and a Discipline should by all means be put into the hands of every young convert, and every Methodist family should have a weekly visit from one of our church papers. Let us resolve to pay up, and also to extend the circulation.

The Gospel in Madagascar.

There is no part of the world, says the New York Observer, in which the displays of divine grace in modern times, or indeed at any time, have been more wonderful than in the Island of Madagascar. We have often referred to the history of the introduction and success of the gospel in that lately savage region of the earth. In order to ascertain the actual state of religion in the island, and to encourage the thousands of Christian hearts there, the London Missionary Society, through whose instrumentality chiefly the work has been carried on, nearly two years ago appointed a committee, consisting of the Rev. Dr. Mullens, the well-known missionary worker, and Rev. J. Pillaue, to visit Madagascar. They have recently returned after a prolonged stay in the island, and were formally received at a large meeting in London, at which they made a report of their visit.

Dr. Mullens said that on arriving at Madagascar his colleague and himself at once proceeded to visit the mission stations scattered all over the island, and they found so many indications of real spiritual life among the native population that their hearts were rejoiced, and moved to thankfulness for so great blessing. It was not, however, to be expected that the whole of the three hundred thousand idolators, who had suddenly abjured heathenism by destroying their idols, would at once become matured and exemplary Christians. About sixty thousand of them had been enrolled as nominal members of the Christian church, but even among these there were doubtless many who were not ripe for membership, the same as is the case in the churches at home, although he believed nearly the whole of the three hundred thousand were open to receive instruction, and to be guided in their lives by the doctrines of Christianity. After all, there were at least twenty-five thousand real trustworthy Christians, in whom the missionaries had every confidence. Such was the work of only five or six years—a phenomenon which he believed had never before been seen in the history of the Christian church, and he looked upon it as a great gift of God's loving favor, not only to Madagascar, but to all the evangelical churches at home which had taken part in Madagascar missions. While he was in the island he had esteemed it a great honor to attend the opening of a memorial church erected on the spot were fourteen Christian missionaries had been martyred in 1849, and he thought it was a remarkable coincidence that the church dedicated to their memory should have been opened on the twenty-fifth anniversary of their martyrdom. The speaker then referred to the attitude of the government toward mission work. His colleague and himself had been most cordially received by the Queen and her husband, the prime minister, and he believed they were both real and earnest Christians, and extremely anxious for the progress of their people in all that was wise and holy and good. But he could assure the meeting that what had been stated by public lecturers at Manchester and other places about the commingling of religious and State affairs in the island, and the advocacy abroad by the society of the principles they condemned at home, had no foundation in fact.

By far the larger number of people in the island felt that the affairs of the church should be kept within the church's bounds, and conducted entirely by church officials. Toward the conclusion of his remarks Dr. Mullens exhibited an illuminated address of thanks from the native Christians to the London Missionary Society, in reply to an address which the deputation had taken out, and which, beautifully engrossed as it was, served as a copy for the Malagasy artists in preparing the reply, which was very successfully and creditably produced.

Dr. Guthrie on Preaching.

Dr. Guthrie was inducted to the living of Arbilot, near Arbroath, in 1830, and was removed, in 1837, to old Greyfriars church, in Edinburg, in the ministry of which he had a colleague. Placed thus in the co-pastorate of a large city parish, he says:

"I found that the hours of the day were exposed to constant interruption while I was at home; but most of the day was spent among the people; and by the evening I was tired and exhausted. But I had resolved, on coming to Edinburg, to give my evenings to my family; to spend them not in my study, but in the parlor among my children; and thus to avoid the sad fate of many ministers, whose children's after ill-doing showed that they had been sacrificed on the altar of public duty. Thus the only time left me for preparation for the pulpit was to be found in the morning. I rose, summer and winter, at five o'clock. By six I had finished my dressing and private devotions, had kindled my fire, had prepared and enjoyed a cup of coffee, and was set down to my desk, having, till nine o'clock, when we breakfasted, three unbroken hours before me. This gave me eighteen hours in each week to ruminate on and digest my sermon. This practice keeps the sermon simmering in the mind all the week, until the subject takes full possession of the preacher, and, as a consequence, he comes into the pulpit on Sunday prepared to preach with fullness, feeling and power."

On which a writer in the London Record remarks:

"Dr. Guthrie treated the duties of the pulpit as his first and chiefest duties, and he was rewarded as such preachers will be usually rewarded. He did not neglect his other obligations; in fact, his days were spent among his people; but preparation for the pulpit he regarded as the first thing to be thought of. Nor was he singular in his view. I remember well that when a friend asked Daniel Wilson, while occupying the pulpit at St. John's chapel, in Bedford Row, 'when he began his sermons?' the answer he received was: 'On Monday morning, of course.' One natural result was that his chapel was always crowded to the doors. I remember, too, that one of his successors (he had four or five) said to me one day, in the afternoon, 'I must leave now, and get home, for I have to preach to-night,' signifying that he had a sermon to make, and had only two or three hours in which to make it. And it very naturally followed that under such circumstances the chapel soon was found too large for the congregation that came to it, and finally it vanished away. I fear that too many of the clergy nowadays take a different view from Dr. Guthrie of their several duties, believing that pastoral work, committee work, and 'the demands of society' must be first attended to, and that then such spare time as remains may be given to sermon-making."—New York Observer.

A Common Mistake Corrected.

In the Journal of Commerce of October 20, says the Methodist, we find the following:

"Editor of the Journal of Commerce: Will you be kind enough to state in your next issue, if possible, the number of Roman Catholics and Methodists respectively in the United States?

Respectfully, etc.,

"Reply.—The Methodists of all classes and colors are to the Catholics about one to five. The Catholics number from five to seven millions, and the Methodists about one-fifth as many."

The question and reply are printed in the financial column of the Journal, which may help to account for the great blunder into which that paper falls. We hardly expect to find financial writers well up in church statistics, but they should take a little pains to be sure of their facts before they put their statements into print.

According to the minutes of 1873 the total number of members and probationers in the Methodist Episcopal Church is 1,464,027; the latest returns of the Methodist Episcopal Church South show for that branch 676,609 members. There are enough in the other branches of Methodism to make the total of Methodist communicants in the United States 2,500,000. These are mostly adults. If we estimate one adherent for each communicant, the Methodist population of our country would be 5,000,000; if two adherents to each communicant, 7,500,000.

Roman Catholic statistics always include the entire Catholic population; and when they are compared with the statistics of Protestant churches, this difference of practice must always be considered. That the Journal of Commerce is in error will also appear from the United States census for 1870. The census gives for the whole Union 72,459 religious organizations, 63,082 edifices, and 21,665,062 church sittings. Out of this total the Methodists have 25,278 organizations, 21,337 edifices, and 6,528,209 church sittings. The Roman Catholics have 4,127 organizations, 3,806 edifices, and 1,990,514 sittings. The Methodists have $69,000,000 of church property, about $9,000,000 more than the Catholics. The Methodists have six times as many organizations as the Catholics, more than five times as many edifices, and ten times as many sittings. Methodist churches accommodate two congregations each day and the Roman Catholics from four to six. Allowing, however, for this disparity, all the figures point to a larger Methodist than Roman Catholic population in the United States; the Methodists certainly do not stand to the Catholics in the ratio of one to five. The Journal of Commerce would do well to correct its figures.

High Claims.

Everybody is familiar with the lordly tone assumed by many of our Episcopalian brethren in this country, says the Watchman and Reflector, and with their talk of other denominations here as dissenters. Of course it strikes all outside of their little pale as decidedly funny. We had supposed that the explanation was to be found in their pride of pedigree. It seems, however, that we were mistaken. The discussions in the Triennial Episcopal Convention in New York throw light on the matter. They show that this small denomination claims the Western world as its own, solid—one whole land as its parish, the census of the United States as the enumeration of its laity. Said Hon. Samuel B. Ruggles, during the debate:

"I am willing to go as far as he (Bishop Selwyn) goes, to say that we will not alter it except with the general consent of the two great English-speaking churches—the great church of Old England, and the greater church of New England. Old England has a laity of 30,000,000, but we represent a laity of 40,000,000, and we have a larger church than they have; therefore I do not want to make this church subordinate to the Church of England in any way."

We don't wonder that another, Dr. Adams, of Wisconsin, proposed the following resolution:

"We hereby solemnly and emphatically declare that the church of these United States is not in any sense a member or branch of the Anglican communion (roars of laughter,) but is a sister church, which in our faith and belief is in the future to be the church of the whole people of this great land."

It is now the faith of 40,000,000; it will by and by be the faith of 140,000,000. How absurd to think it a branch of the Church of England—the branch many fold times bigger than the trunk and all the rest of the tree!

THE MEDICAL SCHOOL.—The formal introductory lecture in the regular course of instruction in the Nashville Medical School, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, was delivered in the Hall of Representatives by Prof. Callender, on Monday night, before a large and appreciative audience. For certain reasons it had been postponed, the course having been going on through this month. Dr. Callender is one of the most accomplished men of the profession, and this was evinced in the noble lecture which he delivered. He gave the students to understand that man's higher nature is not to be ignored in medical science—that "an undevout anatomist is mad"—that there is no conflict, but perfect harmony, between science and Christianity. He magnified the profession, whose principles he delineated in the most eloquent and felicitous style. We will not attempt a synopsis of his admirable lecture, hoping soon to see it in print. The doctor paid a handsome tribute to the munificence of Commodore Vanderbilt—as befitted the occasion. The band discoursed some excellent music, and the exercises were opened and closed with appropriate prayers by Bishop McTyeire and Dr. Young, the president and secretary of the board of trust of the Vanderbilt University.

REV. J. F. SCURLOCK, of Missouri, gave us a call on Tuesday last. Bro. Scurlock is suffering somewhat from disease of the throat, but otherwise is in good health. We trust that his return to the South may prove beneficial.

REV. JOHN PAYNE, D. D., late missionary Bishop of Cape Palmas, Africa, of the Protestant Episcopal Church, died October 25, of the effects of a paralytic stroke, at his home in Westmoreland county, Virginia.

THERE are chords in every soul, though covered with dust, that stir with music when the wings of Truth stir the air.—Duff Porter.

Missions of the M. E. Church in Japan, China and India.

Bishop Harris, who has recently returned from his tour of visitation, speaking in the New York Preachers' Meeting, gave the following account of his observations:

He said he was favorably impressed with the condition of our mission in Japan. He received a special permit through the agency of the American minister, and went to some distance into the interior beyond the limits assigned to our missionaries. He found great numbers of heathen temples along the route, which were kept so scrupulously clean that when a visitor took off his shoes, as he was expected to do before entering them, there was not the slightest danger of soiling his stockings. He observed that the people always dropped their contributions into the box before engaging in worship, and he thought that might be a good rule to observe in our churches in America. He spoke highly of Minister DeLong, whose removal he thought was a great mistake, as he had great influence with the Japanese government, and was moreover a strong and helpful friend of the missions. In the absence of the prime minister the minister of education, who was unfriendly to the missionaries, issued a decree by which Christians were excluded as teachers from the schools, and the scholars were ordered to observe every sixth day as a day of rest. Upon the return of the prime minister our embassador told him that this was a great mistake, and advised him to revoke the decree, which he did.

In China the Bishop was impressed with the earnestness of the native preachers, and the strict discipline which they maintained. He described a sermon that he heard one of them preach, who for his piety and saintliness was called the John Fletcher of the mission. The audience were most profoundly stirred, and a missionary of the American Board, who sat next to the Bishop, remarked to him that it was the ablest sermon he had heard. The preachers show a great anxiety to make the missions self-supporting, and hold meetings every year to discuss the question. One of them said the reproach of being a Christian was enough for him to bear, without being reminded that he was "eating foreign rice"—that is, receiving money from abroad. They have long circuits on which there are a number of preaching-places, and the preachers occupy a month or more in their rounds. They make their home with the people, who willingly entertain them. One minister lived on seventy thousand cash a year, one thousand one hundred and forty of which are required to make a dollar.

He spoke of the cruelty of binding the feet of the girls, and said the native Christians now felt strong enough to omit this practice. In consequence, however, their children were ostracised; they could make no matrimonial alliances with the heathen Chinese, and were shunned by everybody. Many of them, when they grew old enough to realize the position they would be placed in, would beg their parents with tears to bind their feet. In India the chief obstacle the missionaries met with was that of caste. Our great successes in northern Europe were described by the Bishop in glowing terms.

Thanksgiving.

The Committee of Seventy have requested our Louisiana people to observe Thursday, the nineteenth, as a day of thanksgiving and prayer. In view of the recent signal manifestations of providential deliverance, this is eminently fitting and right. The late elections have brought joy and hope after a long night of trouble and oppression. Let every church be open, and let all the people assemble to worship and give thanks on the nineteenth instant. The interests and principles involved in the recent elections were such as to lift them out of the ordinary sphere of partisan questions, and the results should be recognized as of God, and as evidences of his abounding goodness.

OUR CHURCH in Algiers has lately sustained a great loss in the death of Mr. Louis Todsewer, one of its oldest and most useful members. Bro. Todsewer was a native of Blois, France; born in 1816, and converted in the city of Baltimore in 1841, and for the last fifteen years a resident of Algiers, now known as the Fifth District of New Orleans. He was a devoted Christian, warmly attached to his church, and always at his post. For years he superintended the Sunday school, and at his death was a steward and trustee. We condole with his bereaved family and the church. An obituary notice will be furnished.

WE REGRET exceedingly to hear of the death of Mrs. Emma J. Alexander, wife of Rev. William F. Alexander. She died in Dallas, Texas, but we do not know the exact date. Bro. Alexander was formerly a member of the Louisiana Conference, and his brethren and many friends here will share with us in our sympathy for him in his bereavement. An obituary of Sister Alexander will appear next week.

REV. JOHN H. ST. CLAIR, of the St. Louis Conference, died near St. Louis on the thirtieth of October. His end was eminently triumphant. We have a very pleasant remembrance of Bro. St. Clair's visit to New Orleans about a year ago.

Terms of the Advocate.

I have received the following communication:

The Rev. A. H. Redford, D. D., Agent of the Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn.:

DEAR BROTHER—You will remember that at our late General Conference you, as the publisher of the Christian Advocate, agreed with the publishers of other church weeklies in favor of a uniform subscription price of $2 50 per annum, provided the agreement should be sanctioned by the General Conference.

You will remember also that it proved to be the sense of the General Conference that not upon it, but upon you, as the publisher, devolved the duty of fixing the subscription price of the Christian Advocate—the subscription price of other church weeklies to be fixed by the publishers thereof.

The reasons for a uniform subscription price, say $2.50 per annum, recognized by you, as well as by ourselves, last May, remain in full force. And additional reasons can be adduced now; first, in the requirements of the new law on postage; and secondly, in the fact that the financial pressure throughout the country threatens to diminish receipts from subscriptions and advertising to such an extent, if this has not already been done, as to make it impracticable to publish any one of our church weeklies at less than $2.50 per annum without embarrassment.

In view of this state of things, and for the promotion of our general publishing interests, as well as local, we, the undersigned, propose that you agree with us in favor of a uniform subscription price of $2 50 per annum after the present calendar year.

Yours fraternally,

In conformity with the foregoing, I propose at once to make the subscription price of the Nashville Christian Advocate two dollars and fifty cents per annum. Subscriptions, however, received previous to the close of the present year will not expire until the close of the year 1875.

By this arrangement the Advocate is sent free to all new subscribers, or to those who may renew, until the close of the present year.

Preachers, local and traveling, will hereafter be charged one dollar and twenty-five cents.

Episcopal General Convention.

The Congregationalist gives the following results:

The Episcopal General Convention adjourned on Monday night, the second of November, having occupied its last days with the discussion of the most important matters before it, namely, legislation on ritualism and the modification of the rubric for infant baptism. The expectations raised by the rejection of Dr. Seymour have hardly been realized in the action taken on the question of ritualism, which is virtually a compromise. The committee on canons reported a canon empowering a bishop and standing committee to bring to trial any minister within his jurisdiction who is complained of as making use of ceremonies or practices which set forth or symbolize erroneous doctrines, such as "a. The use of incense.

"b. The placing or carrying or retaining a crucifix in any part of the place of public worship.

"c. The elevation of the elements in the holy communion in such manner as to expose them to the view of people as objects toward which adoration is to be made.

"d. Any act of adoration of or toward the elements in the holy communion, such as bowings, prostrations, genuflexions, and all such like acts not authorized or allowed by the rubrics of the Book of Common Prayer."

This canon was finally adopted in the House of Deputies by an overwhelming majority, but was rejected by the House of Bishops, the final result, as reached by a committee of conference, being the adoption of the canon as reported, except that the first two specifications, forbidding the use of incense or crucifixes during the celebration of the holy communion, were stricken out, with one or two slight verbal changes. This action will generally be interpreted as indicative of a mild temper toward the ritualistic tendency. As the Springfield Republican says: "We may yet see, under the present dispensation of the Protestant Episcopal Church, stately processions of enrobed ecclesiastics, headed by the cross, and moving amid clouds of incense to the music of surpliced choirs."

In the matter of the rubric respecting the office of baptism, an earnest effort was made so to amend it as to exclude the idea of baptismal regeneration. The change was warmly urged by the low church brethren, and was warmly opposed by others, some of the latter claiming that it would be a virtual concession of the position taken by Bishop Cheney. It was finally voted, though by a very small majority, to leave the rubric as it is.

Besides these matters the convention confirmed the following missionary bishops: Rev. Dr. A. C. Garrett for northern Texas, Rev. W. B. Elliott for western Texas, Rev. W. B. Wingfield for northern California, and Rev. Dr. Orrick for China. Further, it voted the present hymnal not a finality, and declined to approve either the proposed provincial system or the order of deaconesses. The next meeting, three years hence, will be held in Boston, invitations having been received from Philadelphia, New Orleans, Minneapolis, St. Louis and San Francisco.

Indian Mission Conference.

We are obliged to Bishop Kavanaugh, says the Western Methodist, for the use of his minutes, from which are drawn the following items. The Indian Mission Conference was held at North Fork, October 22-24—Bishop Kavanaugh, president, and E. R. Shaperd, secretary. Admitted on trial, William M. Keith, Henry P. Clay. Remaining on trial, Nathaniel E. Parsons. Admitted into full connection, William S. Derrick, Joseph F. Thompson, both deacons. Readmitted, none. Deacons of one year, none. Traveling preachers elected deacons, none; ordained, none. Local preachers elected deacons, Frank Gooden, Jesse Peter, William Jones, Walter Collins, Cow Ete Micco, William Burgess, James Jofersan, Jacob Marshall; ordained, the first four named, and William M. Keith, Sampson Colbert, previously elected. Traveling preachers elected elders, none; ordained, none. Local preachers elected elders, none; ordained, none. Wesley Joseph Spaugh, recognized in elder's orders from the Moravian Church. Located, none. Supernumerary, S. P. Willis. Superannuated, Thomas B. Ruble, D. B. Cumming, J. C. Robinson. None of the preachers died during the past year. The characters of all the preachers were examined and passed. The statistics are to be furnished hereafter by the secretary. Vote on the proposed change of the temperance rule: For the change, 7; against, 14. Next Conference at Atoka, Choctaw Nation.

BISHOP MILES, of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America, says the Western Methodist, dropped in October 30, on his way from Missouri to Terry, Mississippi, where he holds his next Conference. He reports his branch of the great Methodist family gaining ground in Missouri. The prospects, he says, are much better than last year. He thinks much more satisfactory reports will be made this year than at any previous time since the organization. He thinks the preachers generally have been liberally supported—made about as good a living as they could have obtained at anything else. His own salary is behind, but he acknowledges that it is his fault. He urged the necessities of the Book Concern, school and other enterprises of the church, and recommended that attention be first given to them. We think that was a noble spirit manifested by the Bishop, but we question seriously its wisdom as touching the proper education of the church in the matter of systematic managing of finances. "The laborer is worthy of his hire." The preacher and his family should first be supported; then, if there is anything left, scatter it among as many enterprises of good as may seem fit.

THE Berlin Academy of Sciences has granted a subsidy of two thousand thalers to the African traveler Hildebrand, to aid him in his explorations in central Africa. This is the largest sum which the academy has ever voted for such a purpose. According to last advices, Hildebrand was still detained at Zanzibar for want of supplies.

A NEW method of embalming is described in Les Mondes, the injection of some fluid, supposed to be carbonic acid, through the mouth, causing the body operated upon to become mummified, and to acquire a durability equal to stone or wood; the color of the face meanwhile remaining as at the moment of decease.

WHEN the heart is in loving agreement with God, then is it not grievous for the life to be in accord with the commandments of God.

A. BOITEL, watchmaker and jeweler, No. 58 Royal street, has his card in our paper of to-day. Mr. Boitel has been for a number of years past in the employment of S. Fournier, at No. 60 Royal street, at which place we have been in the habit of having our work done, and done satisfactorily. We have no doubt Mr. Boitel will fully keep up his reputation as a skillful jeweler.

MESSRS. E. C. PALMER & CO., 97 Camp street, are closing out their large stock of carpets, rugs, mats, etc., and propose to sell them at cost. The goods are unexceptionable in quality, and we can recommend any of our friends wishing to purchase to this house. See advertisement for particulars.

WE CALL the attention of the ladies to the advertisement of Mrs. Fricke & Williams, milliners, over Braselman & Adams' dry goods store. They refer to their numerous customers in proof of their skill and punctuality in filling orders in their line.

SAM. SMITH, dealer in wood and coal, No. 351 Dryades street, offers extra inducements to any one purchasing from him, as will be seen on referring to his advertisement. Orders may be left at No. 282 Calliope street.

MESSRS. BRASELMAN & ADAMS are continually adding to their already large stock of dry goods. Samples and price lists are forwarded on application.

WE WOULD call attention to the card, in another column, of Mr. Thomas I. Dix, stock, note and exchange broker, 31 Carondelet street.

THOSE who may be in want of spectacles and eye-glasses should always apply to a professional man, as by the bad selection of glasses the sight is often ruined, instead of preserved. Mr. Waldstein, as well as his chief assistant, Mr. Mundorff, have gained in their many years' practice such experience that, with the endless variety of glasses, they can suit the most peculiar eye. This firm have opera, field and tourists' glasses, telescopes, and other optical instruments, of the best quality, as the many medals which have been received will confirm.

WE TAKE PLEASURE in directing the attention of our readers to the advertisement of the Cincinnati Gazette, which appears in another column. It offers unusually strong inducements to subscribers. The Gazette is too well known to need any introduction for 1875. It is Republican in principle, but exposes wrong in all parties, without fear or favor.

MISS M. HAYES' fashionable dressmaking and millinery establishment, 139 Royal street, is advertised in to-day's paper. The ladies would do well to inspect her goods before buying elsewhere.

DR. C. B. WARRINGTON'S
RENOVATING BITTERS!!
Purify the Blood.
STRENGTHEN, INVIGORATE AND RENOVATE THE SYSTEM.

One of the best remedies known for the speedy cure of

DYSPEPSIA,

Loss of Appetite, Sour Stomach, Flatulence, Heartburn, Nausea, Fluttering of the Heart, Fainting Sensations, Sudden Flushes of Heat, Depression of Spirits or Melancholy, Water Brash, and Chronic or Nervous Debility. They are Diuretic, Tonic, Alterative and Stimulant. They perfectly eradicate all Bilious disorders arising from a foul stomach, strengthening the system and regulating the functions of the Liver.

Any one suffering with Weak Nerves, Deranged Liver, Kidney Complaint, Loss of Appetite, Fever and Ague, or any of the diseases or symptoms enumerated above, can be materially benefited and entirely cured by the use of these Bitters.

FOR FEMALES.

It is an established fact that fully one-half of the females are in bad health; or, in other words, never feel well. Many suffer with inward weakness. They feel languid, devoid of energy, extremely nervous, and have no appetite. To this class the Renovating Bitters are especially recommended. Such patients should resort to the use of these Bitters, the inevitable result of which will be a strong and healthy constitution, a disappearance of all nervousness, a good appetite and a perfect restoration to health.

Thousands have testified to the merits of these Bitters. I would strongly advise all suffering with the above-named complaints to try them and be convinced.

Full directions accompany each bottle. Price, $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5.

Ask your druggist for either of the above medicines, and if he does not have it he will send and get it for you; or can be sent by Express to any part of the United States by addressing

DR. TUTT'S VEGETABLE LIVER PILLS.

THE STARTLING DRAWBACK ON nearly all medicinal agents has ever been that in their process of purgation and purification they have also debilitated the system. To obviate this difficulty physicians have long sought for an agent that would

PURGE, PURIFY AND STRENGTHEN
AT ONE AND THE SAME TIME.

Their research has at last been rewarded by a discovery which fully realizes the fondest desires of the medical faculty, and which is justly regarded as the most important triumph that Pharmacy has ever achieved. This important desideratum is

Dr. Tutt's Vegetable Liver Pill,

which purifies the blood, and removes all corrupt humors and unhealthy accumulations from the body, and yet produces no weakness or lassitude whatever, but, on the contrary, tones the stomach and invigorates the body during the progress of its operation. It unites the heretofore irreconcilable qualities of a Strengthening Purgative and a Purifying Tonic.

Dr. Tutt's Pills are the most active and searching medicine in existence. They at once attack the very root of diseases, and their action is so prompt that in an hour or two after they are taken the patient is aware of their good effects. They may be taken at any time without restraint of diet or occupation. They produce neither nausea, griping nor debility, and as a family medicine they have no rival.

Price, 25 cents a box. Sold by all druggists.

The Child's Corner.

THE ACORN.

An acorn swung
On an oak tree bough;
So long it had hung,
It would fain fall now
To the kindly earth,
That its germ within Might burst into birth,
And its life begin.

And the Autumn came
With its burning hand;
And each leaf grew a flame,
And each bough a brand.
And a worm came up
And began to eat
Through the hard, dry cup
To the acorn sweet.

And the acorn thought:
"I shall soon see now
The life I have sought,
When I fall from the bough;
For the worm gnaws through
Each tendon slight
That about me grew,
And bound me tight."

And with dying day
Came the zephyr's sound;
And the acorn lay
Next morn on the ground;
But its germ was gone
By the worm's sharp teeth;
And the ground it had won
Was its grave in death.

Letter from China.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, Sept. 1, 1874.

My Dear Young Friends of Felicity and Moreau Sunday Schools Missionary Society:

I fear you will think it a very long while since my last letter to you; but I have been so occupied for several months that I have scarcely had time to write you, as I should have done. I have not, of course, told you of the erection of our little church in our mission compound in Shanghai. It is now nearly completed, and will be dedicated on Sunday, September 13. It will be a day of joy and rejoicing with us all, and I do hope you will pray that the fifth and sixth verses in the eighty-seventh psalm may be fulfilled in regard to our little church. You shall have a photograph of it as soon as one can be taken. We are also erecting another building, which is to be known as the woman's reading-room. There are many of these poor heathen women anxious to learn how to read, and we are glad to be able to have a room where they can come and learn what Jesus has done for them. These women often bring in their children with them, and many of them have been led to come in to preaching on the Sabbath. But they are very ignorant, and we have to be very patient in trying to teach them about their souls' best interest. When we have taught them, and tried to impress upon them the necessity of repentance and faith in Christ, many times have we feared that they understood but little of what was said; but all we can do is to present the truth to them, and then pray that the Spirit of the Lord might come with convincing and convicting power to their minds and hearts.

This work is one which Mrs. Lambuth has recently commenced, and one in which we take a deep interest. From ten to fifteen women are brought in three times a week, and for two hours they listen to Bible women reading the New Testament or some Christian tracts. During this time they are sewing on some work they have brought or which has been given them. Before they separate these Bible women pray with them. It is not often you can find a Chinese woman who can read. By this means many of them will learn to read, and they will obtain a great deal of information about the Christian religion and the love of the Lord Jesus. It is impossible for any one to know the extent of the ignorance of these poor women. If the women can be educated there is hope for China. I do hope the Christian ladies of New Orleans will take an interest in this work, and send us some help. The mothers of China must be taught, educated and brought to know Christ before we can expect many of their husbands and sons will be brought to know the Lord. We have now within our compound a church, the girls' school (boarding,) a printing-room, and the woman's reading and work-room. The boarding school for boys is doing well. There are now eleven boarders and some five or six day scholars. Some of the boys of the former school are still pursuing their studies, and are consistent Christians. Some four of the number have an earnest desire to devote their lives to the service of God. They have something over two years yet before they complete their course in school. They will then be prepared to enter upon the study of the Christian doctrine more thoroughly and in earnest. Some of the boys we now have in school promise to be good scholars. Two of them were baptized when their father was baptized, and we hope they may become Christians and prove themselves to be useful men. They are all young yet, but they are being well trained and taught. I hope you, my dear young friends, will continue to take a deep interest in the education of these Chinese children. Some of them are the children of Christian parents and some are orphans. Pray that God may give them his Holy Spirit to direct and guide them.

It is now very dry, and vegetation is suffering for the rain of heaven. Many of these poor heathen are worshiping their gods of wood, and beseeching the dragon (an imaginary animal) to send them rain. Men are employed to go along the street beating gongs, making a fearful noise, hoping thereby to arouse the dragon to come to their help. If a storm should arise they go and pray to the god of thunder and lightning for protection and security! O the ignorance and superstition of thousands around us! It is beyond anything we could possibly conceive of! Their condition cannot be changed for the better unless they know Christ as their Savior and Redeemer.

A few days since three Chinese men were beheaded in Chingkiang, in front of foreigners' houses, amid the yelling of hundreds of Chinese who followed. As soon as the heads of these men were severed from the body hundreds of the people rushed forward, with strings of five and ten cast each, to dip into the blood of these men before it could be devoured by the dogs. These cast, covered with the blood, are carefully preserved and worn about the body to drive away evil spirits and cast out devils. Any one thinking himself bewitched has only to place the blood of the criminal in contact with the body, and they are healed at once.

My dear young friends, we need to feel deeply the condition of these poor heathen around us, that we may pray in earnest for them, and work faithfully for their salvation. Pray for us, that we may be faithful, and leave nothing undone to bring them to Christ. That the blessing of the Lord our God may rest upon you all, and upon your work of love, is my sincere prayer.

JAMES WM. LAMBUTH.

Popping the Question.

BY GRANDPA WILLARD.

Will you tell us, grandpa, what they mean by "popping the question?" You wish me to tell you what the question is, and how to pop it. You are like King Nebuchadnezzar, who required the wise men to tell him what his dream was, which he had forgotten, and likewise the interpretation of it. I for once will indulge your inquisitiveness.

The question may be put in five words: "Will you be my wife?" or turning it, "end for end:" "Will you be my husband?"

Why, grandpa! Do women ever pop the question?

Yes, sometimes. Read the Book of Ruth, and there you have an example of a young widow asking Boaz, a clever old bachelor, we suppose, to marry her, and he, being a law-abiding man, accepted the situation.

In the twenty-fourth chapter of Genesis we read an account of Isaac, who, though forty years of age, waited for his father to send his faithful servant five hundred or six hundred miles, with ten camels loaded with presents; and when the servant had found Rebekah, he would not eat till he had told his business, which was to take home a wife for Isaac. Read the chapter and see how he popped the question.

Read also the twenty-fifth chapter of First Samuel. David sent his servants to say to Abigail: "David sent us unto thee, to take thee to him to wife." And she went—not riding on a camel, as Rebekah did, but on a much smaller animal.

I like the plain-spoken address of the Quaker: "I am come to see if I can agree with thee to be my wife."

You boys may think it would be very easy to ask a question so simple. When you are a little older you may try it, and very likely you will begin: "Would you be willing—. Mother says I might—. May I hope—. I would like—," and then the words stick in your throat.

Well, grandpa, will you please tell us how you popped the question?

Pshaw! children, if you think I did not pop it right, go and ask Grandma Willard.—Interior.

TOM'S GOLD-DUST.—"That boy knows how to take care of his gold-dust," said Tom's uncle often to himself, and sometimes aloud.

Tom went to college, and every account they heard of him he was going ahead, laying a solid foundation for the future.

"Certainly," said his uncle, "certainly; that boy, I tell you, knows how to take care of his gold-dust."

"Gold-dust!" Where did Tom get gold-dust? He was a poor boy. He had not been to California. He never was a miner. Where did he get gold-dust? Ah! he has seconds and minutes; and these are the gold-dust of time—specks and particles of time—which boys and girls and grown-up people are apt to waste and throw away. Tom knew their value. His father, our minister, had taught him that every speck and particle of time was worth its weight in gold; and this son took care of them as if they were. Take care of your gold-dust! Little American.

A BABY MISSIONARY.—Baby is only six or seven months old; but she does real missionary work. Would the children in America like to know how she does it? She goes up the Bosphorus with her mother on a steamer which stops at various places for passengers. A through passenger like our baby missionary can do much good in her way. Her way is to open her large blue eyes, and look with interest and smiles on those around her; and her fair skin, her sweet face, her neat dress, and her loving ways are sure to attract attention. People soon begin to talk to the mother, who improves this introduction to tell them about him who was once an infant in Bethlehem. When these friends that the baby finds leave the steamer, their looks of awakened interest call forth a prayer from the mother's heart that must be recorded in heaven, and must some time bring a blessed reward to the little innocent worker. Life and Light for Women.

WHAT EFFIE IS DOING.—Effie Taylor lives in a great house in the city. A good many people beside her papa and mamma and her little brother live in the same house.

One day two ladies called. Effie was leaning over the stairs to see who had come, and one of the ladies asked her: "Do you come to our Sunday school, little girl?"

"Yes, ma'am," answered Effie.

"And this little girl, does she come too?" said the lady, pointing to another child standing in the entry.

"Yes, I bring her too."

"Any more?"

"Yes, all the children in the house, seven, and my little brother, and papa too!"

Effie is only seven years old, but she takes nine scholars to Sabbath school beside herself. They go because she asked them to.

IT WAS after the breaking of bread that the disciples at Emmaus had their eyes opened and knew him.

TO WAIT patiently until one's turn rightly comes is proof of good breeding.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Butter-Making.

1. For making good butter, the first thing is to have good, sweet pasture, free from weeds or any growth that will give a bad taste to the milk. Good upland grass is better than coarse grass growing on wet places. Some dairymen think that limed is better than unlimed land, but this is a matter of minor importance. Others regard the practice of sowing plaster in spring, and repeating it early in autumn, as tending to sweeten grass.

2. Good, well-selected cows are the next requisite.

3. Perfect cleanliness, from beginning to end, is indispensable—the most so, perhaps, of any one thing. No dirt or dust must drop into the milk, for which reason the animals should have a clean place to lie on, and never be allowed to stand in mud or manure; vessels all thoroughly washed—scalded when necessary to preserve perfect sweetness—including pails, pans, pots, churns, workers and tubs or firkins. They must be first washed clean with cold water, for if hot water is used first it will curdle the milk in the cracks or corners, and prevent its washing out.

4. A perfectly pure air is of great importance. Bad odors will taint butter. The dairy-house should therefore be far away from manure-yards and everything else of the kind. Keep tobacco smoke off the premises.

5. Let the butter be well worked, so as to press out all the buttermilk. It is impossible to have a good article if this is not done. Perhaps this is the most common cause of failure. If much milk is left in it soon ferments and makes rancid and worthless butter.

6. In laying down for winter, use new firkins—never use them a second time; and pots or jars must not be used if they have ever had butter in them, or pickles or anything else that will taint them; the taint can never be wholly removed.

7. The best dairy salt is important. Butter in hot weather must be covered and excluded from the air with saturated brine.—Country Gentleman.

CARE OF HORSES.—All horses must not feed in the same proportions, without regard to their ages, their constitutions and their work. The impropriety of such a practice is self-evident; yet it is constantly done, and is the basis of disease of every kind.

Never use bad hay on account of its cheapness, because there is no proper nourishment in it.

Damaged corn is exceedingly injurious, because it brings on inflammation of the bowels and skin diseases.

Chaff is better for old horses than hay, because they can chew and digest it better.

Mix chaff with corn or beans, and do not give the latter alone, because it makes the horse chew his food more and digest it better.

Hay or grass alone will not support a horse under hard work, because there is not sufficient nutritive body in either. When a horse is worked hard its food should be chiefly oats—if not worked hard its food should be chiefly hay—because oats supply more nourishment and flesh-making material than any other kind of food; hay not so much.

WHAT I KNOW OF HOUSEKEEPING. A lady correspondent of the Maine Farmer gives the following valuable hints to housekeepers: "If you wish short biscuit without much shortening, do not knead them. Do your husband's and brother's boots let water through them? Then apply tar and oil, after being thoroughly mixed, and you will have no further trouble. Patent not applied for. One cup of sugar, one of buttermilk, one egg, one-fourth of a nutmeg, one and one-half teaspoonfuls saleratus, three tablespoonfuls of melted lard, will make just as good doughnuts as any editor ought to eat. Some cooks are invariably troubled with 'saleratus biscuit.' By allowing just one even teaspoonful of saleratus the trouble will be obviated. If brimstone is offensive, use strips of paper one inch wide, rolled into a lengthy cylinder, for lighters. If you wish to save your papers, a bit of split pine will answer better, and, when stuck in a lava vase, make a very conspicuous ornament."

INFALLIBLE AND QUICK CURE FOR DIPHTHERIA.—The Hamilton Spectator (South Australia) publishes details of the "Greathead" cure for diphtheria. The disease is declared by Mr. Greathead to be of hydrated growth, and that the germs of it flowing about in certain impure atmosphere were inhaled by human beings.

For a grown person four drops of sulphuric acid diluted in three-quarters of a tumbler of water; with a smaller dose for children. The effect of this treatment was instantaneous, the acid at once destroying the parasites and the patient coughing up the obstruction. The papers have teemed with accounts of sufferers who had recovered in a few minutes by adopting the "Greathead" treatment. Children, almost previously in a dying state, were declared to be playing about within ten minutes, and at a computation some forty or fifty of these sudden recoveries have been placed on record with full particulars.

TO PRESERVE GRAPES WITH HONEY.—Take seven pounds of good sound grapes on the stems, the branches as perfect as possible, and pack them snugly, without breaking, in a stone jar. Make a syrup of four pounds of honey and one pint of good vinegar, with cloves and cinnamon to suit (about three ounces each is our rule.) Boil them well together for twenty minutes, and skim well, then turn boiling hot over the grapes, and seal immediately. They will keep years if you wish, and are exceedingly nice. Apples, peaches and plums may be done in the same way.

A BIT of soap rubbed on the hinges of doors will prevent them from creaking.

SPLIT a twig of the elder bush lengthwise, scoop out the pith, fill each compartment with different kinds of seeds which bloom at the same time, surround them with earth, and tie the two parts together, and plant in a pot filled with earth. In this way the stems of the different seeds, as they germinate, will appear like one stem.

A YANKEE paper has discovered that hogskin and cowhide bags hold ten times as much corn as canvas bags do, and cost only about one-tenth as much to get to market. The corn should be put into the bags before the skins are taken off the animals.

NO BETTER plan has been devised to keep butter sweet than to put it in clean jars and cover it with strong brine. No kind of vessels, cask or tub will answer as well as a jar. In this way it can be kept fresh and sweet for twelve months.

TO CLEAN VELVET.—Wet a cloth and put it over a hot flat-iron, and a dry one over that, then draw the velvet across it, brushing it at the same time with a soft brush, and it will look as nice as new.

A BIT of glue dissolved in skim milk and water will restore old, rusty crape.

IF FLAT-IRONS are rough, rub them well with salt, and it will make them smooth.

THE teacher of an infant school had her attention called to one little fellow who was listening to what she said. She had been teaching her class the elements of English history, and wishing to see if he knew what she had been talking about, she suddenly asked: "Johnny, who killed King Rufus?" With a surprised look he replied: "Why, I didn't know he was dead!"

JEFFERSON says that "war is an instrument entirely inefficient toward redressing wrong, and multiplies instead of indemnifying losses."

REMOVAL OF CARBONIC ACID FROM WELLS AND CELLARS.—Recently-ignited charcoal absorbs about 35 times its volume of carbonic acid in 25 hours. A pan of glowing charcoal, therefore, lowered into a well or cellar containing carbonic acid, soon ceases to glow and begins immediately to absorb the gas. By testing the air from time to time by lowering a lighted taper into it, and renewing the coal from hour to hour as long as necessary, all the carbonic acid may be rapidly removed.

ARSENIC COLORS.—Since the publication of our article on arsouic pigments, we have received numerous letters inclosing specimens of calico, wall paper, etc., asking our opinion in reference to their poisonous character. We have had some of these examined by competent chemists, and in all instances sufficient traces of arsenic have been found to prove the dangerous character of the articles presented. From Lee, Massachusetts, we have a sample of calico in which the green band is colored with arsenic, and no washing would render it safe to wear such goods. The misfortune is that some of the aniline colors are so impregnated with arsenic that they are as dangerous as the older Scheele's green, of which we recently complained. Toy-books with green covers are always to be suspected, and in fact the only absolutely safe thing to do is to avoid green colors altogether. The detection of arsenic is so simple that any one can perform the experiment in a few moments. We cut off a piece of suspected calico and immersed it in some strong ammonia, which we had poured into a tumbler; a blue color at once indicated the presence of copper. A drop of iodo liquid put upon a crystal of nitrate of silver turned immediately canary yellow, which reaction denoted arsenic. This is an experiment that anybody can try. To confirm our suspicions we poured some of the liquid into a Marsh apparatus, and easily obtained the well-known deposit of metallic arsenic on glass or porcelain. With wall paper a neat and easy way is to put a drop of nitric acid on the green spot, then a drop of ammonia, when the color will turn blue, and on the addition of a drop of nitrate of silver, if arsenic be present, a yellow stain will spread in a ring to the outer extremity.—Sci. Am.

IT IS CURIOUS to speculate upon the condition of things which must have existed in past geological periods, when the composition of the atmosphere differed widely from that of the present time, and must have been much more highly charged with carbonic acid than now. Such a conclusion is inevitable from many considerations. It is well known that growing plants obtain all their carbon from the atmosphere by the decomposition of its carbonic acid; and, inasmuch as the beds of fossil coal found in the solid rocks are but the remains of a former vegetation, it follows that there was a time when all of this carbon must have been diffused in the atmosphere in the shape of carbonic acid gas. We have here the elements of a calculation which is not without interest. If we assume the proportion of carbonic acid in the air of the globe to be four parts in ten thousand by volume—a number which, as has been shown, is somewhat above the truth—this will equal .0612 per cent. by weight. Now the total weight of the atmosphere surrounding our globe, calculated from the barometric pressure of 30 inches of mercury, is equal to about 5,260,000,000,000,000 tons, and hence the weight of the carbonic acid therein would be 3,220,000,000,000 tons. It is not so easy to calculate the amount of carbonaceous matter in the rocks; but the following figures are not without interest. Mr. Hull, in his work on the coal-fields of Great Britain, has estimated the available coal of that region at 60,000,000,000 tons, and puts down that of all the coal-fields of North America at seventy-two times this amount. If, now, we suppose all this coal to contain, on an average, eighty per cent. of carbon, it would yield by its combustion 12,845,000,000,000 tons of carbonic acid, or about four times as much as is now present in the atmosphere. Any one conversant with geology will, however, perceive that this represents but very imperfectly all the carbon in the earth. Apart from the great and imperfectly known deposits of coal in other regions, it is to be remarked that the coal formations themselves contain great beds of argillaceous rock, more or less impregnated with coaly matter; and that such bituminous or carbonaceous shales are, moreover, not confined to the coal formation, but widely distributed throughout the whole known thickness of the uncrystalline sediments of the earth, while in the crystalline rocks themselves are found large quantities of graphite, or plumbago, to which we may, with little doubt, ascribe a similar origin. The aggregate of all these must, no doubt, exceed many times the amount of carbonic acid given above, and lead to the conclusion that we have in the carbon of the earth's crust represented an amount of carbonic acid gas which, if diffused through the atmosphere, would suffice to make it irrespirable to the human race. But there is reason to believe that the carbonic acid decomposed and fixed by growing vegetation represents but a small part of what has been removed from the atmosphere in past ages. The slow chemical changes of rocks at the earth's surface are even now absorbing carbonic acid from the air, which combines with the lime, the magnesia, and the alkalies which are liberated by the decomposition of the various mineral species of those rocks. All these resulting carbonates find their way into the sea, and are the source, either directly or indirectly, of the carbonate of lime which makes up the structures of corals and the shells of mollusks. From the earliest ages there has been a constant removal of carbonate of lime from the sea and an accumulation of it in beds of limestone; and the whole of this must have been formed, by some such process as that which we have indicated, from the carbonic acid of the atmosphere.

On Saturday the market opened with a good demand, and during the morning 2,200 bales changed hands, partly at rather better prices, partly at previous rates, and partly at slight concessions, after which the movement exhibited much less animation, and the subsequent sales embraced only 1,350 bales, making a total of 3,55[illegible], seventeen brokerage houses participating in the business. On Monday the movement commenced with a moderate degree of animation, and the reported sales during the morning were only 1,500 bales, after which the demand improved, resulting in further sales of 3,500 bales, making a total of 5,000 bales. At the opening factors adhered with continued firmness to their previous pretensions, but later in the day met the demand more freely. A good style of good ordinary, rather better than the Exchange type, sold at 13⅜@13⅝c. On Tuesday the market opened with a very general inquiry, and, as factors evinced a disposition to meet the demand freely, the sales during the morning embraced 2,000 bales, partly at easier rates, after which, as the extent of the movement was developed, prices slightly hardened, without, however, showing any quotable variation, and the business for the rest of the day summing up 4,050 bales, making a total for the day of 6,050 bales.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 14,350 bales, against 15,100 for the corresponding time last week and 12,050 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida, and Texas, are 194,451 bales, against 185,300 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 204,168 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 84,206 bales to Great Britain, of 8,819 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 18,315 to France. The Christian Advocate.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. J. HARP, FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH.

VOL. 20. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1874. NO. 47.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

PROVIDENCE, Nov. 11.—At the manufacturers' committee meeting to-day the chairman announced that replies to the circular inquiry have been received from one hundred and thirty-four mills, mostly in New England. All but four or five had reduced their production at least one-third, and will continue the reduction until January 1, unless forced to resume by the action of others indisposed to bear their share of the disadvantages of running on partial time.

LITTLE ROCK, Nov. 12.—About nine o'clock A. M. Governor Garland and other State officers elected on the thirteenth of October, under the new constitution, were sworn in and entered upon the discharge of their respective duties. There was no ceremony, and very few knew of the affair.

At the meeting of the General Assembly a letter was read from Governor Garland, stating he had qualified and was now exercising the duties of Governor.

SAVANNAH, Nov. 12.—The Presbyterian Synod of Georgia and Florida is holding its session here. There is a large attendance. Robert Irvine, D. D., of Augusta, was elected moderator. The proposition to revive or sell Oglethorpe College, at Atlanta, is under consideration. The next session will be held at Cuthbert, Georgia.

LOUISVILLE, Nov. 13.—Thomas U. Dudley, rector of Christ church, Baltimore, succeeds Bishop Cummins. Dudley was the compromise between the high and low church.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., Nov. 14.—Renfro and Bullock, the Sumter county prisoners now in jail in Mobile by decision of Commissioner Gillette, on the charge of a violation of the enforcement act, were admitted to bail to-day, on a joint bond of $12,000, by United States Circuit Judge Woods.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 16.—The President has directed a telegram to be sent to the Governor of Texas, requesting him to delay the execution of the death sentence on Santana until it can be satisfactorily ascertained whether or not he violated his parole, the President believing the weight of the evidence thus far is in Santana's favor.

LITTLE ROCK, Nov. 16.—The press dispatches from Washington, reporting a large assemblage of the adherents of Smith and hundreds of arrests by Garland, are untrue. There has been only one arrest thus far—that of Price, of the Republican, and he was discharged to-day. The most perfect quiet prevails throughout the State, and there is no talk about Smith establishing a government at Pine Bluff, Helena or elsewhere. He is still hid.

GALVESTON, Nov. 17.—A News special from Brownsville, dated to-day, says: "The smallpox exists here in a very bad form. The physicians say it is almost epidemic. Five children died in one family, after a short illness. Drs. Combe, Whitehead and Shelton waited on Mayor Parker to-day, and will meet the City Council to-night in relation thereto. This disease has been very fatal in Roma, killing a hundred, mostly children, out of a population of seven hundred."

FOREIGN.

MONTREAL, Nov. 12.—In consequence of the alarming increase of smallpox here, the board of Protestant school commissioners has taken measures to exclude unvaccinated children from schools under their direction.

LONDON, Nov. 13.—Messrs. Moody and Sankey, American revivalists, have arrived in this city after a tour through Ireland, where they met with great success in conducting revivals. They will hold a meeting here in Agricultural Hall.

BERLIN, Nov. 13.—The Post says Von Arnim was arrested the second time because he communicated some important documents to a third party while he was confined in the Charity Hospital. There may have been other reasons, however, which are not known. The statement that the court had received a copy of his indictment is denied.

LONDON, Nov. 14.—A Standard's telegram from Paris says the impression in circles favorable to Don Carlos is that his cause is utterly ruined and his situation hopeless.

The Daily Telegraph repeats the report of a socialist conspiracy in Russia, and adds that three thousand persons, including many ladies, have been arrested. A commission has been appointed to investigate the conspiracy, the exact object of which is still unknown. Several persons of exalted rank are said to be implicated. A vast amount of money seems to have been at the disposal of the conspirators. The arrests since the discovery of the plot have been numerous. A perfect reign of terror exists in St. Petersburg. It was proposed that the police should search every house in the city in a single night.

SINKING OF THE STEAMBOAT EMPIRE.—One of the most lamentable and harrowing accidents that it has ever been our lot to chronicle, says the New Orleans Times, occurred at four o'clock on Tuesday morning in the sinking of the lower coast packet Empire, while moored to her wharf at the foot of Bienville street. About twenty lives were lost.

IT IS SAID that scratching a ticket sometimes cures an itch for office.

Among the Mad Waves.

The mountain system of Brittany has a sort of continuation in a series of reefs and igneous rocks which jut out in a broken line westward of Finisterre. On one of these rocks, called L'Isle de Sein, there stands a lighthouse, but the real danger lies to the westward, and the rocks there have literally bristled with wrecks of vessels making for Brest. In 1860 the committee for lighting the coast of France decided to erect a lighthouse on the extreme end of the danger, and after a careful examination M. Ploix, the consulting engineer, decided on the Armen rock as the best site. At the same time he did not attempt to depreciate the prodigious difficulty of the task, and characterized it as "nearly impracticable." The currents are so strong and the sea runs so high that neither M. Ploix nor the other engineers, nor the director of lighthouses, was able to approach nearer than fifty feet. All they were able to ascertain was that the rock was gneiss, about eight yards across and twelve in length, and that it was just visible at low water. After settling their plan of operations they applied to the fishermen of the neighboring island of Sein, as most familiar with the locality and the danger, to commence the necessary works. These men undertook the task, and, provided with life-belts, began to watch regularly for the best opportunity of landing on the rock. As soon as they got their chance they crouched down on the rock, and clinging on with one hand, with the other worked away with a cold chisel so as to sink a sufficient number of sockets for the insertion of the iron clamps. Every now and then a wave would break over the rock, drenching them with foam and spray, and not unfrequently one of the party would be carried right off by the heavy sea, but would soon be picked up by a vessel kept purposely on the watch.

At the end of the first season (1867) seven landings had been effected and eight hours' work done, which sufficed for the sinking of fifteen sockets, while the following year the weather was more favorable, and forty new holes were pierced, some of which were below water. In 1869 the blocks of stone were first placed in iron clamps about a yard long, riveted into the sockets. The blocks were all hewn according to pattern, and joined together with Parker-Medina cement. The work of dropping them into position was exceedingly laborious, owing to the violence of the sea; but two of the officials were constantly in attendance, urging on the workmen, and at the end of the season twenty-five blocks, each about a yard cube, had been successfully laid. In 1870 eight landings took place and eleven cubes were laid, and in 1871 as many as twenty-three, the work by this time becoming easier as further progress was made. A steam launch is now used for the conveyance of material, and a sort of masonry scaffolding having been built, the builders have succeeded, during the first half of this year's season, in placing in position no less than eighty-seven blocks. The expense, however (as may be imagined,) has hitherto proved considerable. Each of the forty-five holes pierced during the first two years cost upward of two thousand francs, and on December 31 last the charges had amounted to more than one hundred and eighty-nine thousand francs. The light is to be a revolving one of the first order, and ninety-seven feet above high-water mark; there are to be seven stories in the house, and there will also be a steam whistle for use in foggy weather.—Academy.

ANCIENT OCEANICA.—The Academy says: "It may be remembered that when Magellan discovered the Philippines he was astonished to light upon an Arabic alphabet in use at Cabu. On inquiry he found that somewhere about the ninth century Mohammedan priests from Oman had landed here and taught the natives the Koran. Only some few isolated facts are known concerning the population of the islands of Oceanica before their discovery by European voyagers, and any addition to our knowledge, however small, is therefore of great value. A Manilla paper announces the discovery of some prehistoric remains on the little islands of Rota and Tinian, which form part of the Ladrone or Mariana Islands. We have as yet but very scanty particulars of these antiquities; but they appear to consist in each case of two series of eight stone pyramids, standing in two rows, at intervals of twelve feet, the base being twelve feet square, and the height thirty-six feet. The summit is crowned by a kind of large cup, equal in diameter to the diagonal of the base. Unfortunately the description of these pyramids given us leaves much to be desired, but there is little doubt that they belong to an age anterior to the Spanish conquest, and that they cannot possibly be ascribed to a race at all similar to the vindictive and degraded aborigines of the archipelago. They would seem to have much in common with the prehistoric remains found in Mexico and some of the United States."

GOD'S BLESSINGS are blessings with both his hands. In the one he gives pardon, but in the other he gives holiness; and no man can have the one unless the other.—Spurgeon.

Wine or Corsets?

The women in congress assembled at Chicago, a few days ago, devoted some time to the dress question. Mrs. Livermore, who is the most eloquent, though not the most learned of the women, defended the use of corsets which have of late years, we understand, been considered as unfavorable to the health of those who wear them. Mrs. Livermore is the woman who announced on the platform at Steinway Hall, a few years ago, that the Apostle Paul forbade women "to gabble in church," but did not forbid them to talk sensibly, as women now do who take the pulpit or the stage. The very sensible "talk" which Mrs. Livermore now furnishes to her listening admirers may be illustrated by the report of her remarks on the subject of corsets, which she considers necessary to her "support" in the oratorical efforts which she makes for the good of her sex and the rest of mankind. In reply to a condemnation of tight lacing, "Mrs. Livermore rose and asked what she was to do when, after an enormous strain upon her system, she had to come upon the platform with an all-gone feeling. There is not a woman living who does not know what this is. She was forced to assume corsets sometimes as a remedial agent. She could not rest, with her work to do, and she could not stand without this extraneous support. She seemed to have no stomach at all. Somebody suggested the use of wine. Mrs. Livermore replied that after fainting four times upon the platform, one day, her physician had said that she must take wine and egg. She did so. The first hour she felt very high and lofty. She could not talk fast or fluently enough. Everything was at a very exalted altitude. At the end of that time the reaction came, and she not only wanted to die, but considered suicide a Christian duty. Corsets seemed to be the only help for the all-gone feeling. Mrs. Flynt thought warm milk and water better than all the corsets in the world. But Mrs. Dr. Blake said that when such times came it was nature's demand for rest for an overtaxed system. It might be necessary to prop a falling wall, but safety demanded that as speedily as possible the props should be removed and the wall rebuilt or repaired, and it was so with the corsets. They seemed to sustain the failing system, but each time they were applied, even as a remedial agent, they weakened muscles, and made it more difficult to repair the failing strength. Nature's protests must be attended to, or the one who failed to heed her warnings must suffer for his folly or necessity. Therefore one should mend the wall, not prop it. Do not pile one wrong upon another wrong, was her conclusion."

What a sensible reformer must a person be who, after taking "wine and egg" under the advice of a physician, "wants to die, and considers suicide a Christian duty!" And the question here arises, if Mrs. Livermore wanted to die and considered suicide a Christian duty: "Why is she still alive and on the stage? Why did she neglect or refuse to do what she desired to do, and believed to be her Christian duty to do?" We may resist our own inclinations because duly forbids us to obey them. We may refuse to do our duty because our inclinations are the other way. But when our desires and our duty impel us to the same end, what is to hinder us from reaching it?

But, to return to the corset or wine question, it is obvious that the "tyrant man" is not able to discuss it in the light of practical experience, as Mrs. Livermore can, who has tried both. But we may suggest that if Mrs. Livermore's theory is right, it would be well for the men, who are so much more addicted to "drink" than women, to exchange their wine for corsets. We commend her idea to the temperance societies. All expedients as substitutes for intoxicating liquors have failed so far; now let the men try corsets. Mrs. Livermore says she had "an all-gone feeling," and "seemed to have no stomach at all"—the feeling of drinking men exactly; they take a dram and several drams to "support" them. Mrs. Livermore finds corsets to answer her purpose, and if they are good for her, why not for the men?

We are making progress in this country. And if the Woman's Congress has made a discovery which shall substitute corsets for wine, so that men and women both will cease to use wine, which, in its reaction, leads Mrs. Livermore to "want to die, and to consider suicide a Christian duty," the congress will not have met in vain.

We are with Mrs. Flynt, who thinks "warm milk and water better than all the corsets in the world," or wine either.—New York Observer.

A Missionary from China.

The papers reported some time ago, whether truly or falsely we have not been able to ascertain, that some man who was formerly a Methodist minister had become a convert to Mohammedanism. We now have a story, which will perhaps be equally surprising with this one, that our country has become an object of interest to Chinese inspired with missionary zeal. A gentleman who may be thus described, and who is called Wong Chin Foo, addressed a Boston congregation on Sunday, September 27, on the superior advantages of Confucianism as compared to Christianity. "Confucianism makes no pretension to being anything but a system of morals, and it is in this light only that Mr. Wong or Mr. Foo seems to have set it forth. He is reported in the Boston Globe: "In China, he told his hearers, a great requisite was propriety, which was taught early and at all times to Chinese children, who, when of respectable parentage, are never seen on the street except in cases of necessity. Young girls are not allowed to go into factories to earn their living, but are supported, as they should be, by their fathers and brothers. Except in the family, the sexes are kept strictly apart, and it is on account of the violation of these and similar social laws that the Chinese have a prejudice against foreigners. This is the reason why the Protestant missionaries fail in China, while the Jesuits, who fall into the habits of the people, comply with their laws, and thus gain their respect and love, are ten times more successful. Moreover, continued Wong Chin Foo, the Chinese are virtuous, hospitable, industrious, economical, and, until corrupted by foreigners, very modest. Their religion also leads them to practice filial piety. They do not have public benevolent institutions and poorhouses, but it is because their people are all benevolent and charitable. They commit fewer murders and gross crimes than European nations, and for two thousand years have been happy and prosperous, as a consequence of practicing the religion of Confucius. He concluded by hoping that this religion would be carried out in this country, and that, while he had the honor of being the first missionary from China, he might be followed by other and abler ones, who would succeed in bringing the people at large to embrace a faith, than which, he assured his hearers, no better could be found."

The Globe suggested at the time the lecture was delivered that there was no necessity of importing new religions, even if new ones were desirable, since Boston itself possesses a Radical Club which is capable, when in session, of making a new one out of hand every week. We have since learned that the Radical Club is dead. If this be so, Mr. Wong's or Mr. Foo's system may serve those who were accustomed to look to it for instruction till the Buddhist or the Hindoo missionary comes along.—Methodist.

Governor Tilden on the Louisiana Outrage.

At the great Manhattan Club jubilee over the Democratic victory, Governor Tilden made an exceedingly felicitous speech, which contained the following reference to the Louisiana outrage:

"Fellow-citizens, it cannot be, and at last that truth dawns on our people, it cannot be that we can blast the prosperity of these great communities in the South without its reacting upon our own business, trade and prosperity. And if we have not the wisdom to see it beforehand, I thank God that by the just retribution of his wishes we shall suffer for consenting in silence to wrongs and crimes committed against these great communities. (Applause.) I will venture to say that we are not answerable, or rather those who represent us in the government of the United States, for this system that exists in Louisiana. Who was it that installed a government having no right, moral or legal, to exercise dominion over the people of that unfortunate State? Who was it that, when a gust of public opinion swept him from existence, restored him by military power? But, fellow-citizens, are not we answerable for it? Who is it that holds the unhappy people of that State and other States, while thieves plunder and rob them on the most gigantic scale ever known in civilized society, until it is a scandal to all the world? Can New York expect to be prosperous—has it any right to hope or desire to be prosperous—when it stands idly and indifferently by and sees such crimes perpetrated against other portions of our people? Fellow-citizens, these causes, these false and delusive systems of finance which the government has established and persevered in these ten years, since the war was closed, these wrongs against other communities, these imprudences in public expenditure, this gigantic system of taxation, which I had occasion six years ago to compare with the taxation of England and France, and found to exceed, these are the principal causes, perhaps I might say the sole causes, of the disasters felt everywhere in our midst to-day. The disaster is national. It grew out of the policy of the measures of the Federal government, and the remedy must also be national."

Fraternity and Union.

BY REV. W. SHAPARD, MOBILE, ALA.

Is fraternity between the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church South desirable? This question admits of no other than an affirmative answer. Is union between these churches desirable? There may be doubt as to the propriety of close corporate union between the multitudes comprising these two bodies. A general superintendency requires a limited territory and membership in order to the intelligent and efficient discharge of its duties; there are peculiarities of views and education pertaining to different sections which are unfavorable to a close corporate unity; the natural tendency of great numbers is to weaken the social bond. But there can be no question as to the desirableness of a qualified union between all the Methodists of this country—more, of all the Methodists of this world. Fraternity and a qualified union would better accord with the spirit of our religion, with the essential unity of all God's children, and would promote the cause of Methodism.

But there is one essential condition to real fraternity and final union—a condition essential because of the very constitution of man's mind. It is vain to think of either before this essential condition shall have been established. This condition is confidence. Confidence is the bond of all voluntary society among intelligent beings. Distrust is separation, is disorganizing, will disorganize any voluntary association, did divide the Methodist Episcopal Church, and now keeps the churches alienated. The fact that we have disagreed in past years, that we have felt aggrieved and oppressed, is not the immediate cause of our present estrangement. The remembrance of the past might in individual cases prevent hearty fraternity, but with the great multitude the past is gone and could be easily forgotten. The real cause of our present estrangement is want of present confidence, and no real fraternity can be established until after the establishment of confidence. A man must confide in God before he can attach his soul morally to God; faith is not only the prescribed condition, but also the philosophic and natural condition. A man must have confidence in a woman before he can propose matrimonial alliance. Even among banditti there must be confidence, otherwise every clan would dissolve. Confidence is the essential bond to every voluntary association, and the essential basis of happiness in association. Confidence creates society. Distrust prevents and dissolves. Establish confidence between the Methodists of the different sections of our country, and they will flow together in love, and such co-operation as is needed for the general good will immediately result.

As citizens the Southern people are censured for want of a real, heartfelt attachment to the civil government. We have been abused, put under military rule, oppressed, subjected to legislation specially had for our section, and which has brought disorder and ruin upon our land. Yet we are abused because these measures do not produce in us the impossible fruit of love. The North does not seem to understand the inflexible principle that confidence is the condition to society. We are men, and subject to the laws that pertain to human minds and hearts. Talk about reconstruction by such means! These politicians know nothing of the laws of mind as they apply to reconciliation. My own experience is the experience of others. I ardently wish to be strongly attached to the government. I have accepted the results of war, and ever and anon reconstruct myself. But time and again the acts of the government are such as destroy my confidence in its good will toward my section. Just at this time there are numerous United States marshals and soldiers in Alabama making arrests on most frivolous grounds and on most unreliable testimony. There are now in the jail of this county two white citizens of a distant county, arrested for conspiring to prevent a citizen exercising his elective right in our next election, and murdering him. These citizens were arrested several weeks since, handcuffed, and brought from their homes to Mobile to be tried before a United States commissioner. It was proven by a number of reliable witnesses that these men were at their respective homes at the time the murder was committed. Yet upon the testimony of two vagrant negroes these gentlemen are deprived of their liberty and incarcerated in jail to await the coming of a United States judge. Before the aforesaid United States commissioner is now being tried one of the most worthy and peaceable citizens of this State on a charge of conspiring to intimidate a United States deputy marshal. This deputy marshal was one of Semmes' crew in the war and a murderer of a messmate. This government may be the "best government in the world" for the North, but its grinding is awful in the South. Does this malignant prosecution and incarceration of good men tend to inspire confidence in the wisdom, justice and love of the government? Can a Southern man in the inmost sympathies of his heart strongly attach himself to a government which suffers itself to be used by unscrupulous politicians for partisan purposes? Let the government so deport itself as to inspire confidence that it seeks the welfare of the whole country, and immediately every true man will give it hearty good will. But under the existing state of things the confidence of the intelligent and virtuous people is destroyed, and as an irresistible moral law the present government is held in contempt.

By the same law confidence is what is demanded in the church in order to real fraternity. There must be virtue on both sides, and this must be mutually recognized. Do Methodists North really believe all the slanders uttered against the South, and, as has been said, that the Southern Methodist Church is responsible for multitudes of murders? If so, you have not that confidence in us necessary on your part to true fraternity. We cannot on our part enter into a real fraternity while we suspect that in the Northern mind we are misunderstood, and that in the Northern heart there is toward us a spirit of unfriendliness. We must have confidence in your judgment and good will. We have evidence that multitudes of your members, and among them intelligent ministers and editors, do not understand the spirit of Southern Methodists. Your representative man writes hard things against us. We are more abused by Northern Methodists and Methodist periodicals than by any other people and papers. In the face of this ignorance we find it hard to establish in our minds that confidence in your judgment concerning us which is essential to fraternity. We don't understand this proffer of fraternity being accompanied by these hard speeches. In the minds of Southern Methodists there is distrust of your judgment toward us.

Besides want of confidence in the judgment of your membership toward us, there is, further, a want of confidence as to that degree of real Christian and Methodist sympathy which is essential to a real Methodist fraternity. The correspondence of one of your bishops reveals to us, and toward us, a degree of animosity which ill accords with the spirit of fraternity. His judgment is directed by a prejudiced heart; he is ready to hear and believe evil; he is persistent in his deliberate effort to traduce us. The man appears to believe what he writes; the difficulty lies back of his mind, and in the region of the heart. If there is no animosity, how is it that your official organs so readily come to conclusions reflecting so severely on the South and Southern Methodism? The great body of your church may have a heart which beats in unison with the spirit of fraternity, but the tongue of accusation and hate reaches us too often. We don't understand the proffer of fraternity with these warlike columbiads belching out in the rear.

It may be replied that hard things have been spoken by Southern Methodists, and I confess I have seen and heard things that were uncalled for, things not calculated to honor Methodism in either section. But such reply does not remove the difficulty; it does not on either side establish that confidence which is the only basis of genuine fraternity. The way to fraternity is through a better knowledge of each other, and the cultivation of a better spirit toward each other. It is said that the past is dead, and we should bury it and be brethren. This would be the shortest way if all were prepared to do so. The past is dead as to its acts, but it still lives in its impressions; it has created suspicions and distrusts which must be removed. I hope your next General Conference will not only give our messengers a true welcome, but will enter into us full an investigation of past events and present affairs as our commissioners may desire. The action of the Southern General Conference indicates to my mind a readiness in spirit for fraternity, but a want of confidence that real fraternity can be established and maintained without a clearer understanding and accord as to some connected questions. A hand-shaking and camp meeting are good, but not enough for fraternity; there must be confidence, and this confidence does not respond to the mere call of volition. Let there be a full and free conference; a statement of grievances, if called for; an adjustment of all existing difficulties; a fixing of a righteous basis, and on this a real fraternity may be established and perpetuated as long as the essential conditions may continue.—New York Methodist.

DISCOVERY AT HERCULANEUM.—An interesting discovery of a life-sized female bust in pure silver has lately been made at Herculaneum. The work, according to an account given in the Patrie, is in a state of excellent preservation, and is the only specimen of its kind which has been found during the course of the excavations. At first the material was thought to be only brouze, the action of the sulphur having somewhat altered the appearance of the surface, and the sulphate of silver which has formed upon the metal yielding a black color like that found in the commonest sort of material. The bust was removed to the museum, whenone of the keepers, struck with the unusual tone of the bronze, scraped away a part of the surface, and at once came upon the silver beneath. A discussion has risen whether the work was originally cast or chiseled, but there seems now little doubt that the former hypothesis is correct. The head is that of a young and beautiful woman, but as yet the features have not been identified with that of any other extant head.

LET friendship creep gently to a height; if it rush to it it may soon run itself out of breath.—Thomas Fuller.

FOR THE ADVOCATE.

SILENT INFLUENCE.

BY EMMIE K. BAILEY.

Down deep into the loamy earth
A tiny seed is placed,
And hiding in its quiet bed,
All cares of life effaced,
It lies, unconscious of the work
Of Nature's silent breath,
Which brings to life the dormant germ
To bloom upon the heath.

The busy bee upon the wing
Its silent work performs,
Sipping sweet dew from every flower
To fill its stores and barns.
From day to day, from hour to hour
Its silent work goes on,
Still heaping up the golden store,
Nor fearing aught of harm.

From earth's wide bosom bubbling up
The merry fountlet springs,
Nor in its eddying circlets tell
From whence its life begins,
But ere long see the rolling rivers
And the mother ocean,
All formed and fed by bubbling springs
In secret, quiet motion.

Beneath man's rough and rugged road
A secret spring doth lie,
Which, if once sought and surely found,
Will all his wants supply.
Its silent influence soothes his care
And fills his soul with love;
For life to plants, bees, springs and man
All comes from God above.

Fraternal Relations.

MR. EDITOR: It appears to me that the whole discussion of this subject has been almost fruitless, from the plain fact that the real difficulty has not been made prominent in the discussion by our papers. The Northern and English Methodists have openly expressed the reason why they are now ready and willing to enter into fraternal relations with the Church South. That reason is that slavery has been permanently abolished in the South. The English give as a reason for their long silence on the subject of fraternity the existence of slavery in the Church South.

Now, Mr. Editor, I have no language to express my utter contempt and abhorrence of any overture made to the Church South on the ground that slavery has been abolished. How Yankees and Englishmen who profess to be enlightened by the Spirit of God, and can read the history of their own countries, and so deceive themselves as to their real antecedents to slavery, is a profound mystery, and can only find an explanation in the language of the prophet when he says: "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked. Who can know it?" Who established slavery in the colonies in America? How long has it been since slavery existed in the Wesleyan Methodist Church in the West India Islands? Not fifty years ago. A large amount of the material wealth of the English people is the product from the slave trade and slave labor, which was carried on for ages by that people. It is true when they freed the negroes they paid the owners a small pittance, but not one dollar did they pay back to the poor negro of all his hard earnings. Palaces and granite factories have been built out of the blood and sweat of the poor negro, and inherited by generation after generation. They pity and love the poor negro; but he is dying of poverty on their pity and love.

And now how stand the fact and the history of the great abolition-humanity Methodist Episcopal Church and people of the Northern States? Facts will show that nine-tenths of all the shipping engaged in the slave trade for years belonged to Northern capitalists, and humane Boston had her full share of them. Nearly all the money made for years upon years by the slave trade went directly into the pockets of Northern capitalists. And besides all that, they sold nearly all their slaves before their States became abolition. Strange that these holy, pious men could never see the evils of slavery until they had sold to the South nearly all their negroes. The very people above all others who have been most benefited by the slave traffic and slave labor are and have been the very people above all others who have used the pulpit and bayonet to free the very same race of negroes whom their fathers and grandfathers kidnapped and sold in this country. And to-day the Yankees and the English have mixed in with their inherited fortune about all the clear money that ever was realized by the slave trade and slave labor. They kept up the slave trade as long as it would pay. They kept their slaves as long as slavery was profitable, and then sold them to anybody that would purchase, regardless of husband and wife or children, etc. The South, at the point of the bayonet, with the fearful odds of four to one, has been compelled by the sons of these same slave stealers and slave dealers to pay at once the whole accumulated debt of slavery, for England and the United States, for ages upon ages. And now in the sight of God and angels, and in open daylight, these churches, composed from such a long line of negroism, dares to reach out their black, bloody hands and say: "Now that slavery is out of the way I can afford to shake hands with you." I declare that in my judgment Judas was a saint compared to such men; for when he was convicted he did not try to rob and kill the other apostles, and hide his ill-gotten gains, but came forward and threw the money down. May the Lord learn these poor Northern and English Methodists a lesson from the conduct of Judas.

I do not ask pay for my negroes. If I did I would be as vile and corrupt as the English and Yankees. The South now is free from slavery—she has paid up—while the North and England are still in the gall of bitterness and in the bonds of iniquity, and no hope of deliverance. Let the next General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church appoint a day of fasting and prayer, and take up a collection on a large scale to help the poor negro, and then let the delegates sent to the Conference South come in sackcloth, with ashes in their hates, and confess to the Church South the black leprosy that still cleaves to their souls and pockets. They are mistaken when they think that the killing of half a million of brave, true Southern men and setting the negro free has paid their debt of slavery. I am in favor of fraternity with all Methodists, but with none of them on the ground that slavery is abolished. Slavery is not out of the way with these churches, and never will be.

The Yankees and English will never give up the property inherited from the slave trade and slave labor. They would find a pretext to kill a half million more Southern men and put all the negroes back into slavery before they would give up their slavery gains. In view of the past history of the North and England, I think it was exceedingly indelicate for them to mention the subject of slavery, only as penitents for their own sins. Slavery has been greatly abused, and so have all other blessings from heaven and earth that man has had anything to do with; but for Southern men to be forced into a false position on this important subject, and say by their acts that African slavery is wrong, is a position I would not assume for all the fraternity with all the churches on earth. Slavery is the normal state of the negro. God made him so. By slavery he has been made a Christian, a patriot and a Congressman, the Yankees themselves being judges. I am utterly opposed, out and out, to allow a mere handful of puritanical Yankees and Englishmen, after getting rich from the slave trade and slave labor, to keep their money and dictate to the church and the world on this subject. Slavery has always existed in the church, from the days of Abraham down to Yankeedom. The poor negro has always prospered under slavery, and has been elevated by it. The past thirty-five years have proven the English abolition theory to be a grand humbug; and the sad experience of ten years has proven the fallacy of Yankee notions on that subject. The negro has been reduced by freedom to the most degraded man in Christendom, as the number in prisons will show. There are more than a hundred to one, under freedom, in prison. Under slavery the richest districts in the South were a paradise for black and white. Under the reign of freedom the same districts, all over the South, are a desolation, a den of black thieves and robbers. You may travel in some parts of the richest lands in Alabama for thirty miles and never see a cow, hog, sheep or goat; and the negro is growing continually from bad to worse. The fanaticism of the Northern and English Methodists has had much to do with turning the West India Islands into an African Sahara, and the whole South into a bedlam for the past ten years; and if they continue to rule, or their fanatical views to prevail, all the seaboard States will be a wilderness for savages in less than twenty years. By their fanaticism four millions of negroes in the aggregate have been thrown back into hopeless barbarism, and eight millions of whites ruined, and many parts of their best country made a permanent desolation.

S. P. RICHARDSON.

The New Liquor Rule.

MR. EDITOR: I am opposed to the new liquor rule for the following reasons: First. Because I believe it to be a law of supererogation—a law over and above God's commandments. Now, sir, I hold that no legislative body of Christian ministers have the right to pass such a law as this; and if there be a law in the Bible that prohibits God's people from the making, buying and selling of wine, I cannot find it. Neither as yet have the sharp-sighted advocates of this new liquor rule shown it, which they certainly would have done before now if it had been written in the Bible. The truth is, sir, it is not written there; for the Bible tolerates the acts of God's people in making wine, using wine in moderation, and buying and selling wine, which this new liquor rule prohibits. Jesus Christ himself made wine, and the people drank it. St. Paul recommended Timothy to use it for his health; and hence it is clear that this new liquor law that prohibits God's people from making wine, and the buying and selling of wine, is a law of supererogation, which is condemned by the word of God and our articles of religion.—See Discipline, article 11, page 15; see also Revelations xxii, 18. Now, sir, if it be said, to evade the force of this conclusion, that wine is not ardent spirits, and therefore the new liquor rule does not prohibit our church members from the making, buying and selling of wine, I answer: The letter and spirit of the rule is to put down dram-drinking, drunkenness, and making and all traffic in intoxicating liquors by members of our church; and in order to do this the rule prohibits our members of the church from making, buying, selling or drinking all intoxicating liquors, only in cases of necessity. Now in order to prove that this new liquor rule does not debar our church members from the making, buying and selling of wine, its advocates must prove that wine will not make men drunk, which is impossible for them to do, for wine has made men drunk in every age of the world, and it makes men drunk now, which is the very thing the rule prohibits and condemns. Hence we come to the same conclusion again that this new liquor law is a law of supererogation, because it prohibits members of our church from the making, buying and selling of wine, when God's word tolerates it. Now God's word is the mind and will of God, revealed to us, and it grants to his people the right and privilege of making, buying and selling wine, which this new liquor rule prohibits. Hence this new liquor law is at war with the mind and will of God, as revealed to us in the Bible. And this itself is a reason sufficient to cause all Christian ministers to vote against it.

Second. My second reason for opposing this new liquor rule is that I believe the old liquor rule now in our Discipline is better than the new to put down the great sin of intemperance in our church. 1. Because it is according to the mind and will of God; but the new liquor rule is not, as we have already shown. 2. The old rule prohibits, condemns and punishes the sin of drunkenness in our church, and this is all the word of God does in his church. But this new liquor law goes further than this; it not only condemns the sin of drunkenness in the church, but it also prohibits our church members from the making, buying and selling of wine, which the word of God allows. Hence our late General Conference was not authorized by the word of God to vote for this new specific liquor law, because it is a law of supererogation. State legislatures, temperance societies, temperance raids and public opinion may pass laws of supererogation to put down the damning sin of drunkenness, but the church of God is not allowed to do it. The church of God must legislate according to the mind and will of God, and not according to temperance codes, temperance raids, public opinion or the views of extreme fanatics. And this Mr. Wesley knew very well when he framed our General Rules, and he, being a temperance man, made the rule on temperance as strong and binding as the word of God would allow. Therefore the old rule is better than the new, because it is just as good as human legislation can make it, and is according to God's word and will; but this new specific liquor rule is not.

Third. My third reason for opposing this new liquor rule is that I firmly believe that if we adopt it it will destroy the peace, harmony and prosperity of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. We are now in peace and harmony under the old rule, and God is blessing us as a church, and we are prospering. But if we destroy the old rule, with which our people are familiar and generally satisfied, and adopt the new, the trouble will commence in our church. Our people will become dissatisfied, and the church will be divided, some for and some against the new rule, and thousands of others will leave the church and set up for themselves, or join other churches, or remain in the world until they die. And, moreover, many of the leading business men of the world will become so disgusted and prejudiced against our church, because she has adopted this new liquor law, as neither to support her nor join her. Other churches would also make capital of this new liquor law in order to ruin us. Are we prepared for such a war as this? If not, let us all vote against this new liquor law. I am a temperance man, and have been for forty-five years.

JAMES SHANKS.

What Is Life?

There is no more important question than that. Life is the great boon of all. There is no fear like the fear of death. Tell a man, like the prophet did the King, that he must die and not live, and, if he can credit the message, you have dried up every fountain of joy, and filled his heart with the blackened ruins of despair. Men do not jeopard life only through ignorance or the blindness of passion. In these ways it is often done.

The Savior has told us in what life does not consist. It does not consist in the abundance of the things possessed. That is a wholesome lesson to those who would hoard up selfish wealth. There is no inherent value in material wealth; it is only relative; consequently the mere possession of it does not enhance the life—that is to say, add to one's usefulness and happiness. The mere possession of abundance of material wealth can add nothing to the real life, because it is only intended for the body, and the real needs of the body are few, and for but a short time.

"Man wants but little here below,
Nor wants that little long."

The fool who soliloquized thus, "Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years," made two absurd and fatal mistakes—first, in supposing the goods were for the soul; and secondly, in supposing they were for many years. Goods in new barns for the soul! and that soul to enjoy them many years—that is, indefinitely! "Thou fool, this night shall thy soul be required of thee!" "Then whose shall those things be which thou hast prepared?" Not the soul's, certainly. Nor will it "eat, drink and be merry" in the mere possession of these perishable materials. All these terms are the symbols of life, but the soul gets no life from material things. By their use they may be the occasion of the development of life; but they are perhaps oftener the occasion of death. By their abuse the soul is often degraded and destroyed. Hence the remonstrances of Scripture on this subject. How hardly shall the rich enter into the kingdom of heaven. Trust not in uncertain riches. The restriction is not arbitrarily imposed. The interests of the soul require it. "They that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition." "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth."

In what does the life consist? It consists evidently in the proper regard and use of the things possessed. There is no wrong in possessions. All things were made for man. If there is beauty and utility in ocean and plain, and mountain and valley, in the multiform productions of the world, and in the beauty and magnificence of the heavens, it is all for man. Shall he close his eyes, and not look upon the riches and glories before him? Shall he not listen to "the music of the spheres?" Must he make of himself a recluse, and dwarf and die in the midst of plenty? This would be a manifest sin. But there is a difference between use and abuse, and to the latter attaches the sin.

A proper use implies a proper estimate—rating a thing no higher and no lower than it should be. There was a time when man had a perfect sense of discrimination. He recognized the legitimate office of every creature. He was lord of creation. But through the evils of the tempter he was dethroned. Then he saw in the stars, in beasts and reptiles, and in almost every object of sense, a god, and made graven images of them to worship. But another representative man—a second Adam—has come to restore man to his former supremacy. He was superior to all material conditions. He was not a wine-bibber and glutton, only as contradistinguished from an ascetic. He respected nothing but truth. That alone can elevate man. "Truth in the inward parts," that sways the life and controls the acts by lifting the soul up above all sensuality, and in conscious communion with God—that the Savior taught and exemplified and honored.

A proper use also implies a useful employment of means. Not setting our heart upon them is not enough. There must be the setting of our heart upon something else in the use of them. The life dwindles from inactivity, as well as corrupts from impure contact. The stream becomes impure by stagnation. It often purifies itself by its swift motion. Inactivity is death. Salvation is wrought out. The rule is: "Rich in good works." "Freely ye have received; freely give." "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth." "Give, and it shall be given unto you—good measure, pressed down, shaken together, and running over."

And this is life. M.

The Liquor Traffic.

MR. EDITOR: The doctors of divinity have clearly proved that the making and selling of whisky and brandy is not censurable, and that the late General Conference has acted in violation of the example and precepts of our Savior and the Apostle Paul in prohibiting its use in the church; and that such action should not be sustained by the Annual Conferences, so as to become a law of the church. Indeed, according to the reasoning of the learned Dr. Hargrove, of Nashville, it becomes a Christian duty to make, sell and drink spirituous liquors, and the Methodist Church has always been in error in her prohibition of their use as a beverage. We are commanded to follow Jesus as an example. If, then, he provided wine for a wedding feast, we should make and drink it. And according to the logic of the doctor, because Jesus wrought a miracle in turning water into wine, and Paul directed Timothy to drink no longer water, but take a little wine for his stomach's sake and his often infirmities, it is perfectly consistent for Christians to make thousands of gallons of whisky and brandy, and drink of them too, provided they do so temperately!

But somehow it seems to strike some of us backwoods folks that it is not exactly consistent for professing Christians to do either, for in regard to temperate drinking, all the profanity, murder, rioting, reveling, poverty, wretchedness and ruin of body and soul that results from drunkenness is the result of temperate drinking; and every temperate drinker is, by his example and influence, involved in that responsibility. If there were no temperate drinkers there would be no drunkards. And so with the makers and venders; they are perfectly assured that the liquors they manufacture and sell will be used to the largest extent as a beverage, and must necessarily produce drunkenness, and all the moral, social and domestic evils which result therefrom. How can they clear their consciences from a sense of fearful responsibility in this matter? Let every seller of spirituous liquors make a calculation of the probable number of oaths, falsehoods, obscenity, murders and other crimes which is contained in one barrel of ardent spirits, and then ask himself if he, selling it for the mere pecuniary profit, is not involved in the guilt of promoting the crimes resulting from his traffic. And if one barrel causes so much wickedness, what must be the responsibility of the wholesale maker and vender, who is sending it forth by the thousands of gallons broadcast over the land! And can the church, which by Conference decision indorses the traffic as being in accordance with the teachings of the gospel of Christ, be clear of responsibility?

If the matter had never been made a question in the church, and had never been made a subject of Conference action, the case would have been different; but when it is presented as a question for her action as a church, after a thorough discussion of its merits, and she, by the highest court of the connection, decides in its favor, of course she becomes its indorser; and the Methodist Episcopal Church South will then present the anomalous position of being the only Christian church which has, in her church capacity, decided in favor of making and vending ardent spirits!

Truly we live in an age of progress, and there is no telling what wonderful light may yet beam upon the Christian world. The church is making rapid advances in improving on the old-fashioned Christianity of Christ and the apostles. The way is no longer narrow; very little self-denial is required to be a good, acceptable church member; and now that dram-drinking, and making and selling spirituous liquors, is to be taken into full fellowship, I cannot see what easier terms could be required by those who wish to get to heaven!

G. SHAEFFER.

IN a Sabbath school class, in which the lesson touched upon the promise of Herod to the daughter of Herodias, the teacher asked whether it was true that Herod was obliged to keep his vow, when it would lead to the beheading of John the Baptist. "I guess if she had asked for his own head, Herod would not have felt himself obliged to keep it," replied a bright boy of ten or twelve.

I CANNOT call riches better than the baggage of virtue; the Roman word is better, empedimenta—for as the baggage is to an army so is riches to virtue; it cannot be spared nor left behind, but it hindereth the march; yea, and the care of it sometimes loseth or distributeth the victory. Of great riches there is no real use except it be in the distribution; the rest is but conceit.—Lord Bacon.

Obituaries.

DIED, at Lower Peachtree, Alabama, on the twenty-ninth of October, MARION BRIGGS, infant son of Dr. A. C. Hundley, pastor of Peachtree circuit, aged twenty-eight days. Bro. Hundley had just returned home from assisting me in a protracted meeting, at this place, to find one of his children very ill with pneumonia. Little Briggs was soon attacked, and died in a few days. Last year this brother buried a little boy. May the God of all grace give the parents comfort and support in their bereavement.

E. M. TURNER.

MRS. GEORGIA ANN CAVER, wife of Robert Caver, and daughter of Harris and Mary King, was born November 19, 1844, and died October 14, 1874.

Sister Caver was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South when but ten years of age, and lived twenty years after to demonstrate the truth that children can and ought to be converted while quite young; also that religion obtained thus early is able to sustain its possessor through all the trials and afflictions of this life. She was the subject of protracted suffering. Even from early womanhood to the close of life she was made to realize that this is a world of suffering; but she bore it all with true Christian fortitude.

It was indeed a melancholy pleasure to visit her during her illness. The writer will hardly forget one of his last visits to her sick-room. She was so very feeble that she could hardly speak in a whisper. Before leaving the Scriptures were read and prayer offered, during which time she was so abundantly blessed that she shouted the high praises of God as if in full vigor of health. She had some dread of the last struggle, but it was unnecessary, as her death was as peaceful as the setting sun at the close of a beautiful summer day. The loved ones sustain a great loss, but their temporary loss is her eternal gain.

W. W. GRAHAM.

DIED, of swamp fever, at the residence of his mother, near Alto, Richland parish, Louisiana, October 23, A. D. 1874, ROBERT B. BAIRD, Jr., aged eighteen years, ten months and seventeen days.

The subject of this painful notice was born in Pickens county, Alabama, December 6, 1855, and emigrated with his parents from Monroe county, in that State, to Richland parish, Louisiana, in January, 1873. In the death of this worthy young gentleman our community sustains a loss that will ever be felt by all who revere the principles of honesty, sobriety, morality, and every other elevating quality of which the cause of true, genuine nobility is composed. To his parents he was an obedient and affectionate son, to the other members of the family a lovely brother, and to his acquaintances a faithful and obliging friend, ever absorbed in the wants, wishes and interests of society. All who knew him loved him, and many are the hearts that are almost entirely overcome with grief at his sad departure from a locality that was proud to call him her own. But while we thus give vent to one of human nature's resistless feelings, we feel thankful to the supreme Conqueror of death for the consoling and cheering fact that we "mourn not as those who have no hope;" for with us he leaves many indisputable and glowing evidences that our temporal loss was his eternal gain. That our Robert was a devoted Christian, that he had made a complete and glorious peace with his blessed heavenly Master, an upright walk, a godly conversation, together with an inexpressible patience in affliction's darkest and most thrilling hour, assures us utterly beyond any shadow of doubt. When his bereaved mother, brothers and sisters were bowed down with grief at the loss of an affectionate father, who had "crossed the river" but a few weeks before him, he invariably strove to cheer them by pointing to God's gracious promises, of which he was a faithful and zealous student. When he saw his departure drawing near he called his weeping sister to his bed, and, placing his arms around her neck, triumphantly exclaimed: "I hear my dear father calling me." During his entire affliction his only trouble was the grief of the family consequent upon the unmistakable evidences of an approaching death.

L. C. K.

CALISTA, our eldest child, was born in Autanga county, Alabama, October 18, 1858, and died October 29, 1874.

After having lived, as the daughter of an itinerant, in three different States, and in various parts of this State, she died and was buried within one mile of where she was born, and died in the house of the lady for whom she was named—the wife of Mr. C. Whit Smith. She was sick twenty-nine days, having been confined to her bed on the first day of the month. For the first two or three weeks she did not seem to be seriously sick, and had begun to sit up, and even to walk about some. But instead of getting well, as we hoped, she relapsed, and daily grew worse until, cheerful and hopeful as she had been during her whole sickness, her vigorous constitution yielded to death. Her disease was typhoid fever, but complicated perhaps with some other.

Calista possessed many qualities that made her a comfort to her own family and popular with others. She was beautiful in person and graceful in manners. She was full of life—was one of the most cheerful creatures I have ever known. She was never gloomy or despondent, and it was difficult for others to be so where she was. She was the life of our household and of every circle of which she formed a part. She always seemed to look on the bright side of things—took it for granted that every cloud had a silver lining. She was careful not to give offense to others, and seldom spoke evil of any. Owing to these and other qualities she was a favorite with many. I suppose but few persons of her age have more friends than she had.

In addition to the above qualities she had considerable talent for music, and was exceedingly fond of it. It seemed to be her chief delight. For the instruction she had received she was a good performer on the piano and organ; and for several months had been the organist of the Sunday school in Autaugaville. She was also a good singer. She had not finished her educational course by two or three sessions. I had taught her several years myself, and she had attended school some at the seminary in Marion, Alabama, and for a longer time at Centenary Institute, in Summerfield.

During a meeting I held in Newbern, Alabama, in 1871, she joined the church as a seeker, having been an earnest penitent during the entire meeting. Up to the time of her last sickness she had not made an open profession of religion; but during her sickness she told us she felt that she was going to heaven. So that, while we would rather she had been a more decided Christian while in health, we trust that she has gone to the better land, and that her soul, which was so full of music, now has full scope for its powers in singing the "new song."

So young, so gifted, such a treasure to us, her death is a terrible affliction to us. We had marked out a bright future for her; but God's thoughts were not as our thoughts in this matter. He has taken her to himself. We try to say: "Thy will be done."

Our precious Calista! "most beautiful" child:
So pleasant and loving, so gentle and mild!
No more will thou cheer us with smile or with song,
No longer enliven the gay festive throng.

The angels above and the choristers there
Had need of thy voice, with its sweet, cheerful air
So they sent down a convoy to take thee away,
To warble God's praise through eternity's day.

W. A. MONTGOMERY.

IN MEMORIAM.

"The righteous shall be had in everlasting remembrance."

JAMES ELDER died at Columbus, Kentucky, August 16, 1874, aged fifty-eight years. Bro. Elder was born in Ireland, but came to this country with his parents when a child, and to Mobile when about nineteen years of age. He was well known to many of the church in New Orleans, having lived there for several years at different times; but he was most intimately identified with the church in Mobile, having united with it when a youth, and he felt at home here through all subsequent life. Bro. Elder possessed as many desirable qualities as often fall to even the favored of our race. Endowed by nature with a mind above the average of men, clear, cool, harmonious and well-practiced, he was a manly man; calm, self-possessed and self-reliant, he was equal to almost any pursuit and almost any emergency. Whatever he engaged in, he threw his whole manhood into it. To these qualities he added a marked integrity, a kind heart and generous nature; these qualities constituted a man who possessed the confidence of all who knew him and drew around him many friends. Friendship was a charm about him—it was something you felt when with him.

But it was the religion of our deceased brother that was the principal feature in his character and life, and lent them their greatest charm. The principal thing about any man is his religion; if that be false or superficial, he is a very defective specimen of manhood; if it be true, a reality, it presents you manhood magnified, ennobled. I should not know how to think of James Elder apart from religion—I cannot try. It was always present when I was with him—I only knew him in connection with it. With the phases and peculiarities of his early Christian experience I am not familiar; his piety had reached a consistent stability when I formed his acquaintance. It was sincere, intelligent, unpretending and manly; not subject to great fluctuations, but uniform, and eminently practical and available. He served the church in nearly all the offices that fall to the lot of laymen in our church—as steward, class-leader, Sunday school superintendent and teacher. To the duties of these several offices he was faithful, and to every call of the church he was prompt and ready. Perhaps no man in the Methodist Church in this region has been more continuously connected with Sunday school work than Bro. Elder. For this he was eminently fitted, having aptness to teach, and familiarity and acquaintance with the Scriptures and the truths of religion. He not only had an intelligent view of Christianity as a saving grace, but made himself acquainted with its principles, spirit and doctrines, so that he was prepared to instruct the young. This made him an intelligent hearer and judge of what was Methodism and New Testament theology.

Bro. Elder was twice married—first to Miss Julia M. Heard, daughter of the late Major F. C. Heard, of this city. Their home was one of taste and refinement, generous hospitality and happiness—a place to which one was drawn by special attractions. This worthy lady he had the misfortune to lose in 1865. He was subsequently married to Miss Brown, of New Orleans. She is now left to mourn a great loss. In all the relations of life our brother's example was worthy of imitation. As a son he was respectful, filial and tender; as a husband, kind, considerate and affectionate; as a father, loving and indulgent; and as a Christian, consistent, faithful and useful. By the death of such men the church and society are impoverished, though the number of the saved is increased. Farewell, brother. We shall long miss thee, but we hope to meet again.

A JAPANESE AUTHOR, speaking of the habits of the European nations he has visited, says: "Jealousy is an unknown passion among them, and so much affection exists between man and wife that it is quite a common occurrence to see a European married couple walking arm in arm in public."

WERE it not for the clouds that darken us there would be no rainbow in our lives.

AUTUMN.

BY THOMAS HOOD.

The autumn is old;
The sere leaves are flying;
He hath gathered up gold,
And now he is dying;
Old age, begin sighing!

The vintage is ripe;
The harvest is reaping;
But some that have sown
Have no riches for reaping;
Poor wretch, fall to weeping!

The year's in the wane;
There is nothing adorning;
The night has no eve,
And the day has no morning;
Cold winter gives warning!

The rivers run chill;
The red sun is sinking;
And I am grown old,
And life is fast shrinking;
Here's enow for sad thinking!

Formosa and Its People.

An unusual attention has been directed this year to the Island of Formosa by the complication respecting it which has broken out between the Japanese and the Chinese. It is a country concerning which little is said, and as little is known. We observe it marked upon our atlas, and occasionally see the name on a chest of tea—and straightway go and forget that there is such a place; having perhaps received no other thought about it than that it is in the neighborhood of China. A quite clear account of the island and its people is given in the Cornhill Magazine. The Chinese hold the coasts and the level country, and are like the Chinese elsewhere. The mountain districts are still held by the native tribes. The boundaries between the two jurisdictions are well defined, and no Chinaman dares to cross them unless he is provided with a pass from some neighboring chieftain. Few foreigners visit these regions, for their aspect is not inviting, and the treatment accorded to strangers is less so. Who the people are, and whence they came, is a disputed point; but it is plain that there is no affinity of race between them and the Chinese. Their features are more prominent, and they resemble much more nearly the Malays than their Tartar neighbors. Similarities have been discovered between the dialects spoken among them and those employed in the Malay Peninsula. The probability is, therefore, that they are, equally with the Lolos of Burmah and the Miau-tsze of China, an offshoot from the Malay stock. At the present time they are divided into several tribes, each speaking a dialect of its own, and each maintaining a separate political system. They are almost absolute strangers to reading and writing, and the only manuscripts which they are known to possess are some scrawling European letters, which are preserved by a tribe professing to be descended from the early Dutch settlers on the island, as an irrefragable proof of the authenticity of the tradition. The religion they profess takes the form of the grossest materialism. They believe that the world is governed by a good and an evil spirit, each of whom is constantly striving for the mastery; and that both are to be propitiated by presents and sacrifice. The priesthood is monopolized by women, who combine fortune-telling with their sacerdotal duties, and who exercise supreme power over their votaries by trading on their superstitious fancies, at the same time that they retain their hold over their affections by encouraging them, in names of their gods, to give full vent to their passions. These priestesses—or Inibs, as they are called—are consulted as oracles when any warlike expedition or undertaking of any magnitude is in contemplation, and a still further token from the gods is looked for in the movements of the bird Aidak. If troops meet an Aidak with a worm in its mouth, they go forward confident of victory; but should it cross their path, or fly from them, they consider it as a warning not to be disregarded, and they accordingly return every man to his dwelling. The Formosans delight in open-air feasts and merry-makings, and during the nine great festivals of the year all work is suspended, and the people one and all sit down to dance, and to play and drink. Their ideas of marriage are loose, and their customs respecting it are singular.

"In their style of dress the Formosans strongly resemble the Malays. In all but the cold weather the men wear only a cloth round their loins, and the women a short petticoat. The latter are fond of decking their hair with flowers, and their ears with rings. Both sexes appear to be proof against the extremes of temperature, and their habit of bathing in cold water all the year round is made the subject of remark and ridicule by Chinese writers. That they are a remarkably healthy people is certain. If a man is ill, his friends, instead of attempting at all hazards to save his life, adopt the kill-or-cure remedy of hanging him up by his neck to a beam; which measure, accompanied by the shock of being suddenly let down by the run, is believed to possess particular curative qualities for those who are strong enough to survive the dose. If the patient should die, his body is placed in the open air on a raised stretcher, and is there left to bleach in the sun until it becomes dried up and mummified, when it is buried in the house which had been his home when alive. From the time of the death until the burial, a wake is kept up round the body of the friends, with the hired mourners and the Inibs."

Rice and sugar are carefully cultivated. Jute, grass cloth, fiber, rice-paper and rattan are also produced in abundance. The most precious products of the island are, however, sulphur and camphor. "In the northwestern portion of the island sulphur mines are frequently met with, presenting disfiguring blots in the otherwise beautiful scenery. Mr. Swinhoe, in his 'Notes on Formosa,' thus describes the aspect of one he visited: 'The sulphur mine,' he says, 'appeared at a distance like a cankor on the side of the grass-covered hill, which was fresh and green everywhere except in the immediate vicinity of the mine. The broad sulphur valley or chasm was everywhere a pale, sickly tint of yellow and red; and out of many of its numerous recesses hot steam gushed in jets with great noise and force, like the steam from the escape-pipe of a high-pressure engine; in other spots small pools of pure sulphur were bubbling. At the bottom of the barren ravine rippled a foul rivulet, carrying off the sulphurous oozings from the ground. Within and round about this hollow the earth under foot crumbled and groaned; and the air was so saturated with the exhalations of sulphur as to have been extremely noisome, and destructive to insect life especially, of which we saw abundant proof in the numerous remains of beetles and butterflies scattered around.' When taken from the mine the sulphur is boiled in iron boilers until the slate-like mineral assumes a treacle-like consistency. This is constantly stirred until every impurity is separated from the sulphur, which is then ladled out into wooden tubs shaped like sugar-loaves. In these it is left to cool, and the conical cake is freed from the tub by the simple process of knocking out the bottom thereof.

"As the gigantic laurels from which the camphor is obtained are found only on the mountains in the possession of the aborigines, the acquisition of a constant supply is somewhat difficult. Only from those tribes which are on friendly terms with the Chinese can leave be obtained to cut down the trees. With such, a present given to the chief gains, as a rule, the required permission. The Chinese woodman then makes a choice of the trees which appear to be well supplied with sap, and, having felled them, he keeps the best parts for timber, and reserves the remainder for the iron boiling-pots, by means of which is evolved the sublimated vapor which yields the camphor. In the neighborhood of Tamsuy alone eight hundred thousand pounds of this valuable commodity are produced annually."

Glimpses of Old Letters.

I showed you the other day a letter from Hannah Moore, whose "Shepherd of Salisbury Plain" is become a classic. Here is a letter from Dr. James Beattie, who is better in metaphysics than in poetry. He writes; "Miss Moore is an author of very considerable merit. My curiosity to see her works was excited by Johnson, who told me, with great solemnity, that she was 'the most powerful versifieatrix' in the English language." Dr. Beattie writes us a charming account of his visit to Bishop Porteous, "the best preacher," he says, "both in respect of composition and delivery, I have ever heard."

Have you heard the news? Now that Wilberforce is dead, Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton comes out as the leader in Parliament. With such men as Brougham and Macaulay as followers, I think he will triumph in some of his reforms, but he must be patient. He has raised the standard against prison torture, lotteries, Hindoo widow burning and slavery. I learn from his letter that he dined yesterday at Ham House and met Rothschild, the third son of the banker at Frankfort, who told in a most amusing way some of his adventures. "When I was settled in London the East India Company had £800,000 of gold to sell. I went to the sale and bought it all. I knew the Duke of Wellington must have it; I had bought a great many of his bills at a discount. It was the best business I ever did." Rothschild is now a very rich man. He has two maxims, as Buxton tells us in his letter. The first is, "I can do what another man can," and the second, "Never have anything to do with an unlucky place or an unlucky man." By self-reliance, by selfishness, and by devotion to the golden calf he has now millions. His children, no doubt, will be like him. "I wish them," says the rich worldling, "to give mind and soul and heart and body and everything to business. That is the way to be happy." The way to be happy, indeed! So said the rich man in the parable, but God said: "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee." No doubt Rothschild was right, though, when he said: "It requires a great deal of boldness and a great deal of caution to make a great fortune, and when you have got it it requires ten times as much wit to keep it."

What a power the Edinburg Review has become in literature. It has surpassed the dream of its founders, who, at a social meeting in the seventh story of one of those sky-soaring houses of the Scotch capital, planned it. Jeffrey was its first editor, and for twenty-six years its best contributor. He was nominated at Molton yesterday, and started at once on an electioneering tour. No doubt he has harder work than to write a slashing review. Now Sir Francis, tell the truth, and don't exaggerate. "In three hours and a half I actually called at six hundred and thirty-five doors and shook four hundred and ninety-four men by the hand. Next day the streets were filled with bands of music and flags and streamers of all descriptions, in the midst of which I was helped up about eleven to the dorsal ridge of a tall, prancing steed, decorated with orange ribbons. In this state I paraded through all the streets at a foot pace, stopping at every turning to receive three huzzas and to bow to all the women in the windows."

Three cheers for you, Sir Francis. It pays to be an editor!

Now let us sing, long live the King,
And Jeffrey long live he,
And when he next doth ride abroad,
May I be there to see.

So Robert Southey, the poet laureate, has got a title—LL. D. Long may he live to wear it. A great pity we did not take the stage to Oxford and see the grand ceremony of conferring the degrees. However, Southey writes us all about it. How did he come to receive such honor? "Because," he says, "I have written a great many good books, and more especially the life of Wesley." "Oh, Bertha, Kate and Isabel," writes Robert Southey, LL. D., to his three daughters, "if you had seen me that day! I was dressed in a great robe of the finest scarlet cloth, with sleeves of rose-colored silk, and I had in my hand a black velvet cap, like a beefeater, for the use of which I paid one guinea for that day." Here is a full-length portrait for little Bertha, Kate and Isabel to gaze upon. "Little girls," writes the affectionate father, "you know it might be proper for me now to wear a large wig and to be called Doctor Southey, and to become very severe and leave off being a comical papa. However, I shall not come down in a wig, neither shall I wear my robes at home!"

Have you ever noticed that our poets excel as letter-writers? Pope and Swift and Byron and Cowper have given us some excellent specimens of letters. Milton, too, has given us some good letters, but they are more remarkable for weight of matter than for ease or grace. Of all the poets, Wordsworth perhaps excepted, Cowper was most sensitive to rural sounds and scenes. His heart, so tender, was in love with every bird and flower. "I sit with all the windows and the door wide open, and am regaled with the scent of every flower in a garden as full of flowers as I have known how to make it." That sentence is as pleasant as the breath of spring. "The notes of all our birds and fowls please me without exception. As to insects, if the black beetle, and beetles indeed of all hues, will keep out of my way I have no objection to any of the rest; on the contrary, in whatever key they sing, from the gnat's fine treble to the bass of the humble bee, I admire them all."

We live in stirring times. John Adams was inaugurated as President to follow Washington, whose farewell address was lately printed. I was in Philadelphia and saw the ceremony. I cannot do better than to quote what Mr. Adams says in his letter before me: "In the chamber of the House of Representatives was a multitude as great as the space could contain, and I believe scarcely a dry eye but Washington's. The sight of the sun setting full-orbed, and another rising, though less splendid, was a novelty. Chief Justice Ellsworth administered the oath, and with great energy." As for the inaugural address, opinions differ. Adams is very much pleased with the remark of Mason, that we should lose nothing by the change in the administration, "for he never heard such a speech in public in his life."

Why, Sydney Smith, what were you thinking of? To accept the invitation of Mr. Dickens to dinner when you have twinges of the gout, when you have already eaten, as you say, "forty-four horse wagons-loads of meat and drink" above what was necessary for the preservation of life and health. I give your letter in full, for, though jealousy is the proverbial failing of literary men, it is not your failing, my dear Sydney:

"MY DEAR DICKENS: I accept your obliging invitation conditionally. If I am invited by any man of greater genius than yourself, or one by whose works I have been more completely interested, I will repudiate you and dine with the more splendid phenomenon of the two.

Ever yours sincerely,
SYDNEY SMITH."

A Saratoga Christian.

One of the sweetest, prettiest incidents of our watering-place life was enacted daily at the Clarendon.

While the thoughtless watering-place throng swayed in and out of the great dining-room, and the endless clatter of tongues and cutlery seemed to drown every holy thought, a venerable silver-haired old gentleman walked slowly in at the head of his Christian family, and took his seat at the head of the table. Instantly the laughing faces of a table full of diners assume a reverential look. The knives and forks rest silently on the table, and a beautiful, silver-frosted Christian, with clasped hands, modestly murmurs a prayer of thanks—a sweet benediction to God! The scene lasts but a moment; all day long that hallowed prayer of the Christ-child seemed to float in the air, guiding, protecting and consecrating the thoughtless army of wayward souls.

I could not find out who this brave old Christian was; but last night his name came all at once.

A lovely woman, with her beautiful children, arose early from her seat at Congress Hall hop to return to the Clarendon.

"Why do you take the children away so early?—the hop is not half over," asked Mrs. B.

"Oh, you and Mr. Lander will laugh at me if I tell you—now really, my dear, won't you?"

"No, unless you make me," replied her friend. And then she leaned forward and whispered: "Well, my dear, you know I stop at the Clarendon. My room is next to that dear, good old man's, and he does pray so beautifully every night that I kneel down by his door with the children to hear him, and then I go to bed so happy, for I know nothing can happen to us when we are so near him!"

Wiping a tear from her eye, the friend said: "Let me go with you!" and right in the middle of the lancers, these warm-souled women, with their children, walked to the Clarendon to sit in the next room and hear the evening family prayer of good old Richard Suydam, of West Thirty-ninth street!

I have since learned that Mr. Suydam has educated three ministers, and started a great many poor but worthy young men in business. He is very wealthy, but spends only one-third of his income, devoting the rest to charity.—Eli Perkins' Notes.

THE setting of a great hope is like the setting of the sun. The brightness of our life is gone, shadows of the evening fall behind us, and the world seems but a dim reflection itself—a broader shadow. We look forward into the coming lonely night; the soul withdraws itself. Then stars arise, and the night is holy.—Longfellow.

LEAF LIFE.

Fresh in the month of May,
Budding, downy, green, all
Glad in the breezes play,
But now they fall—
The leaves fall.

Firm through the summer's heat,
Shower, drouth and hail-squall,
Till Autumn's tempests beat,
And then they fall—
The leaves fall.

Short race and quickly run,
Ere they strew the brown mall—
Say! is their working done
That thus they fall—
The leaves fall?

The Fall of the Leaf.

The phenomenon of the "fall of the leaf," common as it is, is very difficult to explain satisfactorily. The following are the facts, so far as we understand them, which are exceedingly interesting and instructive. It seems that nature begins the provision for separation almost as soon as the leaf is born in spring. When first put forth into the atmosphere, the stalk of the leaf, supposing one to be present, is continuous with the stem. As the leaf and its stem grow, however, an interruption between their tissues (fibrous and cellular) occurs at the base of the leaf-stalk, by means of which a more or less complete articulation or joint is gradually and ultimately formed. This articulation is produced by the continuation of the growth of the stem after the leaf has attained its full growth, which it generally does in a few weeks. The growth of the leaf being completed, the base of its petiole, or foot-stalk, is no longer able to adapt itself to the increasing diameter of the stem, and a fracture between that base and the stem necessarily ensues; the excision advances from without inward, until it finally reaches the bundles of woody fiber, which form the main support of the leaf. While, however, nature is forming a wound, she is at the same time making provision to heal it, for the cuticle or epidermis of the stem is seen to grow over the surface of the scar, so that when the leaf is detached the tree does not suffer from the effects of an open wound. The provision for separation being thus completed, the leaf is parted from the stem by the growth of the bud at the base, the force of the wind or even by its own weight. Therefore, as soon as the glorious colors of the autumn leaves begin to fade, this provision for separation is completed, and the winds sing their death-dirge as they carry them away from their summer's home on the branches of the trees, and scatter them in countless numbers upon the ground. The fall of the leaf is therefore the result of a regular vital process, which commences with the first formation of the leaf, and is only completed when it is no longer useful to the tree. There is no denying, however, that the frosts of autumn, by suddenly contracting the tissues at the base of the leaf-stalk, accelerate the fall of the leaves. All must have noticed, on a frosty morning in autumn, that the slightest breath of air moving among the decayed and dying leaves will bring them in complete showers from the trees to the ground. The leaves of the beach, hornbeam and oak die in autumn, but frequently remain attached to these trees throughout the winter months, provided that the trees are not so situated as to be exposed to violent winds. Such leaves, when examined, will be found to be continuous with the stem, and therefore without that articulation or joint which so naturally assists in the separation of the leaf from the tree. Those dead leaves fall off when the new leaves are put forth in spring; they are, in fact, pushed off by the expansion of the stem when the growth of the season commences. The leaves of evergreen trees and shrubs, and of coniferous trees, as the pine and fir, do not fall in autumn, but in spring, when the growth of the season is proceeding; and, as this annual leaf-fall is only partial, consisting of one-half or one-third at a time, there is always a sufficient number of leaves left on such trees to keep them clothed with perpetual verdure. Hence it is that their foliage consists of leaves which have been attached to the stem from one to three or five successive years.—The London Garden.

NO SHEAVES.—A suffering child of God, who was lately laid in her grave, said to her pastor, a few hours before she died: "I feel as if I were going to heaven without any sheaves." She had lingered long with consumption, which wasted her young life away just as she had finished her first score of years; and her chief wish for a longer life was that she might "do more for him who had done so much for her."

But the patient sufferer knew not how her quiet testimonies for Christ and her exemplary submission to his will, and her latest joys, rising even into rapture, had ministered to those who saw and watched her during her illness. And she went home with her pale, thin hands full of golden sheaves—the sheaves of sanctified trial and of ripened faith.

The garner of our Lord is full of such harvestings. Active exertion is not the only way of ingathering. The passive virtues are often the most fruitful. They are the only sheaves which multitudes of God's reapers can gather. In the stirring external Christian work of our times these truths are apt to be forgotten or overlooked. Our Savior's obedience was both active and passive, and his followers should never forget the prominence which is always given in the Scriptures, not merely to his expiatory sufferings, but also to those which were sympathetic and exemplary. To know "the fellowship of his sufferings" is to know also "the power of his resurrection." And they are greatly mistaken who think that "no sheaves" are to be gathered in the valley of humiliation. In no part of the wide harvest-field are there more of those who "go forth weeping, bearing precious seed," and who shall "doubtless come again, bringing their sheaves with" them.—Christian Intelligencer.

THE best of men have doubted their powers of judgment between right and wrong.

Religious Intelligence.

THE First Baptist church of Norfolk was burned on the morning of the first ultimo. Loss said to be $50,000.

CITY ROAD CHAPEL, London, so famous in Methodism, has been renovated and was recently reopened with suitable services.

THE General Conference of the Free Methodist Church has organized a General Missionary Board, to be located in New York city.

THE net gain of the thirty-four Baptist churches of Boston the past year was 317, making the present total Baptist membership of the city 10,022.

THE students of St. Andrew's University, Scotland, are talking of choosing Mr. Darwin for their next rector. Mr. Huxley lost the last election by only three votes.

QUEEN CHARLOTTE, says the Central Advocate, wife of the King of the Friendly Islands, is a Methodist class-leader. The King, her husband, is a licensed local preacher.

THERE are Protestant congregations in only twenty different villages and cities in Spain, and about twenty-five European and American missionaries at work in them.

A GENTLEMAN, who had been an attendant of Mr. Spurgeon's church but a few months, died recently, and left £10,000 to be divided equally between the college and orphanage, which are under the great preacher's care.

THE Rev. E. A. de Schweinitz was consecrated bishop of the Moravian Church, at Salem, North Carolina, recently. Bishop de Schweinitz has a brother older than himself who has attained to the same dignity among the Moravians.

THE new Pastor's College, in connection with Mr. Spurgeon's Metropolitan Tabernacle at Newington, has been formally "opened." In all, Mr. Spurgeon reported the receipts toward the work to be £12,500, leaving £2,000 still wanting.

THE Religious Telescope, of Dayton, Ohio, asserts that in a Catholic school in that city there are nearly thirty Protestant children. The Catholic World claims that there are at least 350,000 girls in the schools taught by nuns in the United States.

THE Examiner and Chronicle (Baptist) thinks "when Spurgeon invites to the communion all members of Pedo-Baptist churches he invites men who are unconverted." Spurgeon replies: "And what would he do if he invited all members of Baptist churches?"

LETTERS from Persia announce the death, at the age of seventy years, of Mar Yohanan, the Nestorian bishop, who visited this country many years ago with Mr. Perkins. He was one of the first among the Nestorians to welcome and assist the missionaries when they went to Persia.

DR. PUSEY, the founder of "Puseyism" in England, laments in a letter to the London Times that he is powerless to restrain the excesses of the extreme men of his party. It is regretted by some that he was never promoted to office, by which he could have restrained the ritualists so far in advance of him.

THE Baptist Union asserts that liberty on the subject of communion was the law in the early Baptist Church, and restricted communion is therefore a modern heresy. Many Baptists are turning their attention to the question, and asking whether they may not be good historical Baptists and yet be open communionists.

WE HAVE already alluded to the encouraging state of the work of the American Board at Kobe, Japan. A recent letter indicates what great things may be expected here from woman's work among women. Two of the lady missionaries have found a wonderful interest among the women of Sanda. At the last two evening meetings more than 200 were present.

THE Presbyterian Board of Education, at its meeting in Philadelphia, on Monday, September 28, received under its care seventy-four candidates for the ministry, and promised them aid during the collegiate year which has just commenced. All of them were either in the theological or the collegiate stage of their preparation. Twenty-two of the number were new candidates.

TWO RITUALIST clergymen of Exeter, England, have summoned some of their parishioners before the courts for refusing to pay Dominicals. This is a tax for oblations, and was imposed before the Reformation. It has been confirmed by decision of the law courts, but is not approved by act of Parliament. The Low Church party say the enforcement of Dominicals will hasten disestablishment.

ACCORDING to the showing of the Presbyterian "Hand-Book," during the first seventeen years of the history of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, eleven and a half per cent. of its outlay was expended in its administration; during the next seventeen years the amount expended in that way was four and a half per cent.; and for the subsequent four years it was only four per cent.

MR. DWIGHT L. MOODY and his friend, Mr. Sankey, have concluded their nine months' work in Scotland as preaching and singing evangelists. A rousing convention was held at Inverness in the latter part of August, and the farewell meeting at Rothesay, September 3. Two days later they arrived in Belfast, and their opening meetings were the largest ever witnessed in that city in connection with any evangelistic effort.

THE old animus of papal intolerance still shows itself in France in occasional arrests and fining of tract and Bible distributers, prosecution of those holding meetings in houses, compelling interment of Protestants in dishonorable corners of cemeteries, and resenting a whiff of tobacco smoke while the wafer-host is going in procession through the streets. Still thousands in France are longing for religious life and freedom to that degree that they will readily adapt themselves to every legitimate regime that will furnish them. There is a lamentable dearth of pastors felt all through the nation—a feature which Hyacinthe's resignation will not relieve, it is feared.

EVERY one who has witnessed the intense devotion of the friendly, simple-hearted Tyrolese at Innsbruck on a Romish feast day will rejoice to hear that Mr. Clark, of the American Board, has fairly established his Bible depot in the Tyrolese city, and from this center is disposing of Bibles in considerable numbers. He has received permission from the government to send out a colporteur, is about to open a room for Sunday services, and hopes ere long to sow an evangelical literature broadcast over this interesting country and papal strongholds.

BURMAH is chiefly indebted to our American Baptists for its present advanced stage of evangelization, and the missionaries recently held a five days' convention. The proceedings were conducted in Burman, Karen and English. One hundred and thirty-seven delegates were present. It was reported that the missionaries, in their travels among the Chychos, found a chapel in nearly every village, built in expectation of the appearance of a supernatural prince. The Baptists now have in Burmah 375 churches, 19,307 members and 476 teachers.

THE sales of the book-room publications of the British Wesleyan Church for the past year have included 163,752 hymn books, 215,000 periodicals and 2,431,601 tracts. Dr. Osborn proposes, in the revision of the hymn-book, that the old hymn-book 1-539 be retained, with some alterations; that a supplement of psalms and hymns for public rather than society worship be compiled, then a special selection of hymns from all sources of a catholic character. The new supplement will be ready soon, and the whole book, it is expected, will be in general use in 1876.

HENRY M. SCUDDER, JR., M. D., sailed with his wife from New York, August 22, under appointment of the Missionary Board of the Reformed Church, to assume the charge of the hospital and dispensary at Arcot, India. Dr. Scudder's grandfather sailed as a missionary to Ceylon in 1819, and his father, Dr. H. M. Scudder, now of Brooklyn, began the Arcot mission in 1851. A few years later his uncle, Rev. S. D. Scudder, M. D., joined the mission, and soon established the hospital and dispensary which Lord Napier regarded as one of the most notable undertakings in his presidency.

THE London Missionary Society, in the recent death of its eldest negro convert in Demerara, has lost a real hero of the faith. William Trotz had spent one-half of his life in slavery. When he first heard that a minister had come from England to teach the slaves about God he had no idea of what it meant. Having been a house-slave when a boy, he had learned to read a little and sought to teach the field-hands. His clothing was too scanty to permit the hiding of his spelling-book, and therefore he smuggled it to the "quarters" of the field-hands, rolled up in a bundle of grass or a plantain leaf, or in the hollow of a piece of bamboo. When on Sunday he obtained a pass to come to the house of God, he took his first opportunity on his return to tell his fellow-slaves what he had heard about Jesus. Having, to his great joy, received a Testament, he read it to his companions. These readings were with fear and trembling; for when the company were caught, as they often were, every one in the house was flogged, and the reader worst of all, so that he bore the scars to the end of his life. On one occasion the manager of the estate asked him how much he was paid for preaching, and on receiving the answer, "Nothing, sir," responded: "Then I will pay you." Thereupon he was flogged and made to dance on the tread-wheel for an hour every day during the whole month. In later days he rendered valuable service in keeping meetings, visiting the sick, and preaching the gospel in the open air, under the tamarind-tree, in the village where he resided. His last message was one of thanks to the London Society for sending its missionaries, and, having labored as schoolmaster, Sunday school teacher and deacon, he died in the faith.

IT MIGHT at first view, at least, appear as if the employment of unmarried missionaries would be a great advantage to the church. They would be more easily conveyed to their fields of labor and more cheaply maintained unhindered by a wife's sickness or death, etc. So Dr. Newman evidently thinks when he declares that foreign missions are too costly, and calls for one hundred unmarried young men to join Bro. Taylor's "flying artillery" in India. For this and other positions he is taken sharply to task by Mrs. J. L. Hauser, in the Northwestern Advocate. She doubts whether missions can be declared "costly" which cost only fourteen cents annually per member at home, and she draws a stirring sketch of what missionary wives of the Methodist denomination, in spite of frequent ill health and the intense heat of the Indian climate, are doing in the superintendence of schools and in the instruction of women. She inquires how Dr. Newman's unmarried men are going to reach the women of India, when it is regarded as indecent in that country even to ask a man after the health of wife and daughters; how, when men in their position are subject to much gossip in refined parishes at home, their reputation will fare amid the low and sensual Eurasians; what substitute they will offer for the influence of Christian missionary homes upon the surrounding heathen; and whether the one hundred bachelors will not in the end, taught by a hard and lonely experience, look about them for wives. Mrs. Hauser has the best of the argument. The long experience of all Protestant missionary societies in regard to the value of missionaries' wives to the work and influence of their husbands cannot be safely put aside for the enthusiastic guesses of so brief a sojourner in heathendom as Dr. Newman.

The Old Preacher.

The old as distinguished from the young, the man of age and experience rather than the novice. In our system the age of the man generally corresponds with his ministerial life. The man of forty has probably been preaching at least twenty years, and the man of sixty has usually seen his forty years of effective service. These years have been devoted to study and labor, and the education and character have been acquired while riding circuits and doing pastoral work. After so long a term the fittest only are likely to survive. In some sort the office of natural selection has retained in the effective ranks the best physical constitutions, the most devoted piety and the sturdiest qualities of soul. The diseased and feeble have fallen at their posts, the weak and vacillating have turned aside to other pursuits, the wicked have gone back to the world. Many, still faithful and true, by affliction have been compelled to retire from the more active sphere of toil. The residue of effective men is, as a class, made of choice material, and from forty to sixty-five should be at their best. The rich stores, so long in the gathering, should appear in the sermon, and a ripe experience and a mellow piety should make their visits to the homes of the people most comforting and edifying.

And so it is with the man of one work, who has gone steadily forward, developing his spiritual and intellectual powers in a strong and healthy way. He has become apt to teach, he is familiar with the processes of the Spirit in the awakening and conversion of souls, and as a fisher of men he has learned to handle the gospel net with sound judgment and adroitness. With ordinarily good health there should be no abatement, in these middle years, of fervidness of spirit, of sprightly thought, or of powerful and moving utterance. The breadth, depth and strength should still be attended by the brightness and flexibility of youth. The old and the young tree are alike in the freshness of their foliage, and in the sweetness and beauty of their blossoms. In order to continued and increased effectiveness men must keep growing. They must grow both in grace and in knowledge. All the powers must be kept up to their full strength by assiduous culture, and the whole man kept in tone by unabated diligence. Alexander Hamilton, amidst the busiest cares of his profession, and the engrossing occupations of statesmanship, went through his Euclid frequently. To keep the mind up to its highest working capacity there must be hard study for merely disciplinary purposes.

It is not unusual for middle-aged men, and for those who have passed the period when soldiers are drafted, to be painfully conscious of an inaptitude for severe mental labor. Growth has ceased, and regression, after a brief standstill, is sure to set in. The very excellencies of mature life are apt to degenerate into defects. In youth much pruning was to be done, and as intelligence increased, and the taste became more severe and cultivated, extravagances in manner and style have been lopped off and repressed. Perhaps in this process the other extreme has been reached, and not only the wildness and overexuberance have been checked, but baldness and comparative sterility have ensued. With improved taste and wider culture the preacher should cultivate the imagination, and not be parsimonious in the descriptive colors which he throws into his well-studied themes. Let him not go too far in pruning, and let him aim to enrich and beautify while he strives after the solid and enduring. Many an old preacher would be the better for it if he should go back twenty years, and pick up and put on what he then cast aside as blemishes and vanities.

The good ground hearers are mostly young people, and to reach its greatest effectiveness there must be an element of youth in the sermon. A little of the sephemoric is wisdom, sure enough, in dealing with the average congregation. Young, fresh and simple in style and thought, and with spiritual unction attending, there will always be a hearty response from those who are likely to be reached by any means whatever. It is the youthfulness of Mr. Spurgeon's preaching, more than anything else, that accounts for his wonderful success in the pulpit. He is doctrinal, expository, descriptive, practical, sympathetic, and always young. He was a mere boy when he began, and he preaches very much like a boy now that he is in the forties. It is not difficult in looking into some matronly face to recall the beauty and delicacy of girlhood. In spiritual faces, however changed by age and care, these qualities come out and glow with the distinctness of a transfiguration. The cloud of years, instead of obscuring, only gives greater softness and sweetness to the light that dwelt upon the brow of youth. It is most unfortunate for the brain to be allowed to grow stiff and inflexible in its action, and for the heart to become dull and indifferent in its emotions. It is scarcely less unfortunate to lose the freshness and simplicity of early years, and to fall into tastes and habits of thought which quench the fires of a more enthusiastic period. As youth reaches forward to grasp the wisdom of age, so age should strive to bring back and retain the freshness of youth.

Age, however, has invaluable qualities of its own, and resources of usefulness that only age can give. Our old preachers are a perpetual benediction to the church, and their presence and labors are necessary to the completeness of the whole. Their preaching, while it may retain much of the characteristics of earlier days, has in it an authority, weight and power which come of time well improved. Every congregation needs a due portion of such ministries, and should, if possible, have the privilege of profiting by them. Their knowledge of Scripture, their large acquaintance with men, and their profound experience in the deep things of God qualify them for usefulness to which younger men cannot attain. The fruit of old age is the most bountiful dispensable of all to the feeding of the flock of God. The hoary head is not only a crown of glory to him who wears it, but it is a diadem of beauty and power to the Christian ministry.

The abuse of this general principle lies chiefly in the special claims which old men sometimes base upon their years. Much is due them, no doubt, on the score of long service and ripe experience, but in their self-consciousness and utterances this ground of consideration may be made offensively prominent. It is better to let the fact assert itself, and to let character and influence stand upon their own merit. To be over-sensitive and exacting, and to seem jealous of the respect due to age, are infirmities to be guarded against. The psalmist enforces an important lesson by allusion to his years when he says: "I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread." The great apostle, in his appeal to Philemon, for the only time in all his writings, speaks of himself "as Paul the aged." We recall no other instances in which inspired men have sought to strengthen their declarations and teachings by reference to their years. Jacob, when in the presence of Pharaoh, makes but a modest reply to the monarch's question: How old art thou? when he says: "The days of the years of my pilgrimage are a hundred and thirty years; few and evil have the days of the years of my life been, and have not attained unto the days of the years of the life of my fathers in the days of their pilgrimage." That elderly men are not as much sought after, and are not as acceptable as the younger, may be partly their own fault. The clamor for young men may be largely unreasonable, but in the ministry, as in other pursuits, there must be effectiveness.

The most difficult thing of all is to recognize the advance of age in ourselves, and to yield gracefully to the inexorable lot. One of the trials of middle life is the thought of a destitute old age. On one occasion the preachers asked Mr. Asbury what they were to do when they became old. The old Bishop comforted them with the sage reflection that not many of them would probably live to be old. Prudence and economy will help, but in most cases preachers can barely support their families and live. They must walk by faith and not by sight. They will do rather better than the average of men in secular affairs at the worst. But the devoted preacher has a right to trust the Master whom he serves. God will take care of wife and children and old age if he is faithful to his high calling. Some in sheer affright and desperation turn to other pursuits, but, owing to lack of experience and business habits, and to an unfitness which their previous life has superinduced, they fail. Generally it would be better and wiser to stick to the gospel plow, though driven through the most barren soil. To quit in mid career is to lose to the church and themselves the results of years of study and experience. The sun sets upon a full day's work, faithfully done, with a peculiar splendor.

Preaching—Manner and Matter.

We reprint the following article from the Northern Christian Advocate, and bespeak for it a careful perusal by all our young ministers:

An Address by Rev. John Hall, D. D., Before the Students at Drew Seminary.—Oh, for ten thousand such addresses and such addressers. We would that every student of Drew Seminary might imitate Dr. Hall in manner and matter, especially in matter and spirit. We would consent that they should be mere copyiste if they would faithfully and accurately follow copy. A good copyist of a good copy would be far preferable to many poor and weak originals. But no young man, at all competent for the Christian ministry, need be a mere copyist if he will receive, comprehend and practice the advice given by Dr. Hall in the address before us. The leading feature of the address is not an exaltation of technical theological education or of general education; it is not the preparation of the schools, but consecration, holiness and purity. This with Dr. Hall is the great preparation for the gospel ministry. Of course he does not depreciate learning; the more the better if sanctified to Christ's service. On this point he says: "Gentlemen, it is of all things important, with all these advantages, that you be holy and pure men. Somebody may not like the word holy. I like it. I don't see why we should not all like it; but if they like another let them take it—consecrated men, godly men, spiritual men, Christian men, men filled with the Holy Ghost and with power. Be such men if you would have a ministry with power!"

In regard to manner in the pulpit he says:

"Whether a man speaks or memorizes, or talks or reads, there are certain things which, it seems to me, a sensible and self-respectful preacher should never take into the pulpit. And one of these, I think, is expressed in the word 'smartness,' in dress, in address, in illustration, in hits or in allusions. On the whole, a man that is to edify the body of Christ had better avoid 'smartness.' In dress even, it seems to me, that would be wise. Many of our Presbyterian preachers are saved from any trouble in that matter by the habit of wearing a gown, so that no one can tell how we are dressed. I have heard that a man, in speaking of Mr. Gough, described him as being a man whose coat-tails spoke. That is good for Mr. Gough on the platform; but even he would tell you that it is not the thing for ministers. They speak in other ways. Let us not bring into the pulpit the smart hits that are so successful with many a lecturer on the lecturing stage. He may do lawfully what we can only do at the cost of lowering ourselves and our mission. On the same principle all coarseness, or mere colloquialism or slang, everything, in fact, that vulgarizes the gospel, the man and the pulpit ought to be religiously and earnestly kept away. And on the same principle there is a class of petty announcements that I would not have the minister take into the pulpit on my account. We had better agree to charge five dollars for every announcement sent to the pulpit—that would limit the range. When a man is to preach on the most earnest and important themes, it is hardly the thing to require of him to announce that there will be 'recitations and some songs' at such a place; or that in some other place there will be a clam-bake for the benefit of a particular struggling congregation. Everything of that kind that lets down the truth and the preacher—who may be a very feeble man in himself, but who acquires a certain dignity from the grandeur of the message he delivers—everything of that kind ought to be put away, and the truth permitted to stand out in its own dignity, grandeur and impressiveness, unassociated with such littleness as these."

We are glad that Dr. Hall throws the weight of his opinion against "smartness" in the pulpit.

> "What! will a man play tricks, will he indulge
> A silly, fond conceit of his fair form,
> And just proportion, fashionable mien,
> And pretty face in presence of his God!
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> Therefore avaunt all attitude and stare,
> And start theatric practiced at the glass!
> I seek divine simplicity in him
> Who handles things divine."

The straining for effect, to startle, to catch applause, and draw the crowd, are the curse of many pulpits to-day. Young men should be warned against it.

In regard to the matter of preaching the address is equally commendable.

"What are we to preach? There are various kinds of truth in the world, and these different kinds are of varied importance and value. We have scientific, philosophical, historical, moral and spiritual truth.

"These other kinds of truth in their place are not by any means to be despised; but our function as preachers is to set before the people revealed truth—that truth which God has given to us in this book. Philosophical truth has its proper systems, books and teachers; so has scientific; so has moral truth. We are the expositors and teachers of the people in the truth of this book—God's revealed word. Paul was a preacher of revealed truth. So was Peter; so was John. Jesus Christ was 'a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God;' the expositor of that truth of which himself was the sum and substance. I am not to be understood as saying that we ought not to know as much as we can of these other forms of truth. Let us know them as far as we can, by all means, and in many instances it will be of great advantage to know them; but our business is not to preach them.

"'Well, but,' says some young man, 'suppose I should have in my congregation a young man who is getting altogether off the track, and taking up philosophical or scientific views that are entirely aside from and against Christian truth, am I not to do all I can to teach him and bring him back?' Undoubtedly, and whenever you can be thoroughly assured that the young man is kept free from believing in Christ and repenting of his sins by these philosophical or scientific views, then by all means do all that you can to bring him to the right track. But, gentlemen, it will be better to do it in private than in public.

"It is not nice for a young man to startle his aunts and his good-hearted cousins with some queer transcendental notions which he persuades himself they must surely mistake for genuine of a very high order! I have sometimes known even good and kindly young people of the other sex betrayed into the same sin, who, although men like Dr. Hurst and Dr. Kidder have no doubt about certain great matters of accepted Christian belief, think they see a little further than these good men do; they have some grave doubts about it! You see how they congratulate themselves upon the unusual perspicuity manifested in the process by which they arrive at their conclusions! In many instances the wiser way is to treat this not as a serious, grave and earnest thing, but to say to such persons: 'My dear friend, when you become in earnest about your soul, when you really feel that sin is sin, and want to be saved, these things will be swept like dust from your path; you will not think of them the moment you begin seriously to think of salvation through the blood of Christ.'"

Assyrian Records.

Only a few of the laws relating to property have as yet been discovered. These, however, must have existed, since trade transactions were carried on actively. We may see numerous black stones in the museum, which record the sale and purchase of particular lands, and the most terrible curses are invoked upon the heads of those who should injure and destroy these evidences of the ownership of property. One of them, lately found by Mr. Smith, tells us that the ground mentioned in it was bestowed by the King upon a sort of poet laureate on account of some panegyrics he had written upon the kingdom. Still more plentiful than these are private contract tablets, often inclosed in an outer coating of clay, on which an abstract of the contents of the inner tablet is stamped. Many of them are pierced with holes, through which strings were passed, attached to leaves of papyri. The latter have long since perished; but papyrus was used by the Accadians as a writing material at a remote date, although the more durable clay tablets were preferred. The mercantile class seems to have consisted chiefly of Semites rather than of Accadians; and, if we want to find the fullest development of business and commerce, we must come down to the eighth and seventh centuries B. C., when Nineveh was a bustling center of trade. Tyre had been destroyed by the Assyrian kings, and trade had accordingly transferred itself farther to the East. Carchemish, which was favorably situated near the Euphrates, was the meeting-place of the merchants of all nations, and the "maneh of Carchemish" became the standard of weight. Houses and other property, including slaves, were bought and sold; and the carefulness with which the deeds of sale or lease were drawn up, the details into which they went, and the number of attesting witnesses, were quite worthy of a modern lawyer. Money, too, was lent at interest, usually at the rate of four per cent., but sometimes more, especially when goods like iron were borrowed, at three per cent. Security for the loan was often taken in houses or other property. The witnesses and contracting parties generally affixed their seals; but where they were too poor to possess any a nail-mark was considered sufficient. All this appreciation and interchanging of property led, as we might suppose, to testamentary devolution; and no less a document than the private will of Sennacherib is now in the British Museum. As this is the earliest specimen of a will known, the contents of it may be of some interest. The King says: "I, Sennacherib, King of multitudes, King of Assyria, have given chains of gold, heaps of ivory, a cup of gold, crowns and chains with them, all the wealth that [I have] in heaps, crystal and another precious stone, and bird's stone; one and a half maneh, two and a half-cibi in weight; to Esar Hadden my son, who was afterward named Assur-ebil-muelnpal, according to my wish. The treasure [is deposited] in the temple Amuk and [Nebo]-irik-erba, hurpists of Nebo." The monarch, it would seem, did not need any witnesses to attest the deed; the royal signature was considered sufficient.

It may appear strange to us to find records of this kind stamped upon clay tablets. But it must be remembered that papyrus and parchment were scarce and dear, although papyrus at any rate was in use, while clay was abundant; and it is fortunate for us that Assyrian literature was intrusted to so durable a material. Even epistolary correspondence was carried on by means of baked clay; and the library of Kouyunjik possessed a collection of royal letters inscribed upon clay tablets, besides dispatches from the generals in the field to the government at home. In fact the whole literature of the nation was contained in these "lateres coctilee" ("baked bricks,") as Pliny calls them; and one of the latest discoveries of Mr. Smith is a volume of fables which belonged to a certain Assyrian city. Fragments only of two or three of these have as yet been met with; one of them is a dialogue between the ox and the horse, another between the eagle and the sun. Such a discovery is interesting, because it shows that Egypt or Africa was not the only birthplace of the beast-fable, as has been commonly imagined; but that human ingenuity has hit upon the same means of conveying a lesson in various parts of the world. Among the most valuable portions of this literature in clay are the chronological tablets. These have already enabled us to restore the chronology of Western Asia from the ninth to the seventh centuries B. C., and to correct the corresponding dates in the Old Testament, hitherto the despair of historians;" while Mr. Smith has lately found a few remnants of what is probably a synopsis of Babylonian history from the mythical period downward, in which the length of the reigns is given, and the duration of the dynasties summed up.—Fraser's Magazine.

Romanism and Crime.

The tendency of Romanism to foster social degradation and crime is strikingly evidenced by a recent parliamentary return which has been published with reference to criminals in Scotland, and by which it is shown that in that country criminals belonging to the Romish Church are out of all proportion to the whole number. The following are the facts which appear in the return: "Of the Romish population in Scotland the criminals are over 37 per 1,000; among the whole of the rest of the population the proportion is only a little over 7 per 1,000—that is, Romanism in Scotland produces, in proportion to the number of its adherents, more than five times the amount of crime which is produced by the same proportion of all the rest of the population. If crime among the Romanists in Scotland were at the same rate as among the rest of the population, the number of their pupils ought to be only 2,920. But it is 10,740; thus giving 7,820 in excess of what it ought to be, compared with others. Of Roman Catholics in Scotland, 1 in every 27 is a criminal prisoner. Of the rest of the population, it is only 1 in every 132."

The criminal statistics of other countries are equally strong in the evidence which they afford of the disproportionate prevalence of crime among Roman Catholic populations. Thus the criminal statistics of various countries, papal and Protestant, collected in 1852, by Rev. Hobart Seymour, relative to murder, show the following results: In Roman Catholic Ireland the murders are 19 in the million; in Roman Catholic France, 31 in the million; in Roman Catholic Belgium, 18 in the million; in Roman Catholic Austria, 36 in the million; in Roman Catholic Bavaria, 32 in the million; in Roman Catholic Italy, 78 in the million; in Protestant England, 4 in the million. Mr. Seymour, writing in 1869, adds in a note: "The past year gives a still more horrible figure for the papal States and for Italy. In the papal States the number of murders reported by the French police at Rome is at the rate of 187 in the million, while in the rest of Italy they were 111 in the million. These figures," Mr. Seymour observes, "are eloquent. If it be said that this vast amount of crime is to be attributed to bad governments and defective institutions, it seems strange that such defects should be peculiar to Roman Catholic countries; and the remark is doubly applicable to the papal States. In these territories the whole government is in the hands of the head of the Church of Rome; yet these laws, these wretched institutions, which admit of this frightful amount of murder, are all the creation of the Popes themselves."

On the same subject a letter was written, not long before his death, by the late Dean of Canterbury, after spending some time in Rome, and carefully studying the "Holy City," as it is preposterously styled by Romanists, which puts the whole matter in a nutshell. "Here," said the dean, "we have the most absolute monarch in the world, ruling a capital by no means large, with a numerous staff of military and police, and besides assisted by 20,000 French troops. And besides this we have here a people whose state, physical, moral and intellectual, is the result of accumulated centuries of a government and institutions, according to the advocates of the papacy, the best in this world, and administered by infallible wisdom, unerring justice, spotless integrity, and unimpeachable truth. How, then, does it stand with Rome in point of security and good order? Unquestionably, in both these points, it is the worst city in the civilized world." Speaking at the same time of the moral and religious state of Rome, he says: "It is not too much to say that the present moral and religious state of Rome is a foul blot on modern Christendom, and hardly to be paralleled, even among the darkest passages in the history of our race."—Christian Intelligencer.

WE CALL ATTENTION to a notice from Rev. W. M. Metloy, which will be found on our eighth page. Those purposing to attend the session of the Alabama Conference at Opelika will refer to it.

WHAT an incentive to holiness, to purity of life and conduct lies in the fact that the body of a saint is the temple of God! A truer, nobler temple than that which Solomon dedicated by his prayers Jesus consecrated by his presence.

Cigars in the Pulpit.

A discussion occurred, not long since, in the pulpit of the Rev. Mr. Spurgeon, in London. He invited Rev. Mr. Pentecost, of Boston, to make some remarks at the close of the sermon, and the Boston minister said:

"Some years ago he had had the cry awakened in his heart: 'Quicken thou me.' He desired to be more completely delivered from sin, and he prayed that God would show him anything which prevented his more complete devotion to him. He was willing, he thought, to give up anything or everything if only he might realize the desire of his heart. 'Well,' said he, amidst the profound silence and attention of the immense congregation, what do you think it was that the Lord required of me? He did not touch me in my church, my family, my property or my passions. But one thing I liked exceedingly—the best cigar which could be bought!' He then told us that the thought came into his mind: Could he relinquish this indulgence, if its relinquishment would advance his piety? He tried to dismiss the idea as a mere fancy or scruple, but it came again and again to him, and he was satisfied that it was the still small voice which was speaking. He remembered having given up smoking by the wish of his ministerial brethren, when he was twenty-one years of age, for four years. But then he had resumed the habit, for he declared during that four years he never saw or smelt a cigar which he did not want to smoke. Now, however, he felt it to be his duty to give it up again, and se unequal did he feel to the self-denial that he 'took his cigar-box before the Lord,' and cried to him for help. This help, he intimated, had been given, and the habit renounced."

Mr. Spurgeon, whose smoking propensities are pretty well known, instantly rose at the conclusion of Mr. Pentecost's address, and, with a somewhat playful smile, said: "Well, dear friends, you know that some men can do to the glory of God what to other men would be sin. And, notwithstanding what Bro. Pentecost has said, I intend to smoke a good cigar to the glory of God before I go to bed to-night. If anybody can show me in the Bible the command, 'Thou shalt not smoke,' I am ready to keep it, but I have'n't found it yet. I find ten commandments, and it's as much as I can do to keep them, and I've no desire to make them into eleven or twelve. The fact is, I have been speaking to you about giving up real sins, not about listening to mere quibbles and scruples. At the same time I know that what a man believes to be sin becomes sin to him, and he must give it up. 'Whatsoever is not of faith is of sin,' and that is the real point of what my Bro. Pentecost has been saying. Why, a man may think it a sin to have his boots blacked. Well, then, let him give it up and have them whitewashed. I wish to say that I'm not ashamed of anything whatever that I do, and I don't feel that smoking makes me ashamed, and therefore I mean to smoke to the glory of God."

Ecclesiastical "Dead Beats."

The commercial world has a significant term which it applies, not to the unfortunate and the distressed, but to those who are exertionless in their mishap, and who succumb to adversity, expecting others to do for them what they ought to do for themselves. They have a genius for borrowing money. They are persistent bores. You know them a block away, and wish they would always stay at that distance. They are among business men called "dead beats."

Almost every church has an element corresponding with that. These are they who, notwithstanding they have means, pay no pew-rent where the pews are let, or contribute nothing where everything is voluntary. They are voluble in prayer, mighty in religious gab, make a big swash, but do nothing for religious institutions. They pray that the pastor may "be blessed in his basket and store," but do nothing to keep him from starving to death. They do not recognize the fact that there is a religion in giving and a wickedness in withholding. The furnaces would go out for lack of coal, and the lamps for lack of oil, and the church be shut in six weeks, if it depended upon their contributions. The poor must have the gospel preached to them, and the penniless must be welcomed; but there are not more than ten people in any church who cannot give something. If a man cannot give a hundred dollars a year he can give three cents. Woe, then, be to him if he do not give the three cents. We never like to hear a man pray who takes it all out in prayer. It is all folly for a man to pray for the world's conversion unless he gives something toward it. The man whose income is not more than two hundred dollars a year ought to give some of it to God. One of the great wants of the church everywhere is to get rid of its "dead beats."—Christian at Work.

HARD TIMES.—We give a recipe for keeping the times hard. Let everybody talk depressingly. When any one fails in business, put it in all the papers. Let business men keep up perpetual complaint. Let us have occasional editorials inciting bread riots, and political speeches on the wrongs of the laboring classes. Let everybody prophesy a hard winter, a very hard winter, an awful hard winter. Let us all talk down, instead of up. Let us take no account of the fact that flour is cheap, and that the harvests are large, and God is good. We shall in this way be able to take another faggot from the poor man's hearth, and knock another pane of glass out of his window, and hinder the manufacturer from employing him. All together now—ministers, editors, capitalists and laborers—let us give a long, deep groan, and keep it going till next spring, and the times will be as hard as we could reasonably expect.—Christian at Work.

THINKING is the least exerted privilege of cultivated humanity.

A Crazy Philosopher.

Comte's system of worship is perhaps the most eccentric structure of insane and sanctimonious vanity ever fashioned outside of a madhouse, and his description of it beggars all other achievements of human folly that rise, as this does, clear above the atmosphere of drivel. The only part of Comte's religious creed that any man with a sense of humor can look at without laughing is its preliminary declaration that there is no God and no future life. That is too solemn a theme for merriment. The further deliverance that man must worship something may be regarded as a hopeful glimmering of sanity. But Comte takes leave of his senses when he sets up humanity, past, present and to come, as the object of some inscrutable worship, and when he baptizes it with the name of the Grand Etre. The reflection of sane men is that humanity is not a grand etre, but a multitude of etres; that the vast majority of them are not at all great, but so petty as to be unworthy of capital letters even when spoken of collectively; and that the real object of Comte's own worship was the grand etre who lived at 10 Rue Mousieurle-Prince, Paris, who wrote fifteen volumes of "The Positive Philosophy," who was troubled with insanity, and who, in a spirit of what would be termed sublime impudence in any man who had not been off his head, proclaimed that he was the successor of Aristotle and St. Paul. Comte then borrowed from the Catholic Church the worship of the Virgin Mary, and from the fanatics of the French Revolution the worship of the Goddess of Reason. Dethroning both deities, he put in their place an intimate lady friend of his, Madame Clotilde de Vaux. Then he borrowed the sacraments of the Catholic Church, the ritual, the phrases of adoration, and wrapt them round the shivering generalization of the grand etre, to keep it warm. Finally he made off with the Catholic Calendar of the Saints, blotted out every name that he did not like, put in every name that struck his fancy, and naturally took good care that the best place in the list should be reserved for his own. Thus Comte's equivalent for a heaveuly reward was a line of print in a long list of proper names. It was the cheapest and shabbiest little heaven ever devised, even in a Parisian back street. Comte so lacked inventive power that he borrowed even his heaven from the French government. The original of his heaveuly host is that Legion of Honor which, in the minister of the interior, has a recording angel who goes out and in with the government; which distributes the rewards of the blessed in the form of red ribbons; which makes the seraphic throng wear the symbols of immortality at their buttou-holes, and dooms them to forfeit their immortality if they happen to displease the minister of the day. Such was the religion of humanity with which Auguste Comte was to replace Christianity, satisfy the divinest aspirations of the spirit, regenerate the world, and give himself the first rank among human beings. Had his friends been really kind they would, on hearing the first whisper of the scheme, have locked up the ingenious old man for life, burned his funny scribblings, and sworn each other to eternal secrecy by the bell, book and candle of science, rather than have allowed the irreverent world to learn that their master's considerable power of philosophical generalization had developed into a passion for organizing crazy devotion under the pressure of pecuniary debt, outrageous vanity, quarrels with the friends who would not subsidize his growing insanity with three hundred pounds a year, quarrels with his wife because she would not worship him, and a passion for a woman of whom his wife was jealous, and whom he thought divine. But instead of sending Comte back to the asylum, some of his friends fell down at his feet and hailed him as a new messiah. The number, it is true, was rather scanty. It has been irreverently said that the Comtist trinity consists of three persons and no God. The three are Comte himself, M. Lafitte and Mr. Richard Congreve.—The Spectator.

A COUNTRYMAN who bargained with a photographer for a half-length picture of himself at half price got a fine view from the waistband down.

A NEWSPAPER is the only instrument which can drop the same thought into a thousand minds at the same moment.

MANY thanks to subscribers for the prompt attention which they have given to our accounts. We are greatly needing the money due us, and are glad to know that those we have served appreciate our call. A few complaints have reached us of errors in accounts, but they are very few in proportion to the large number of statements sent. They are made, too, in good temper, and in a spirit of kindness which is very gratifying to the publisher, and they will be patiently investigated by the book-keepers. Those who have settled—notwithstanding the impression that there was an error—are assured the errors are subject to correction at any time, and if they have overpaid it will be refunded when discovered.

LOOK OUT FOR ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.—Subscribers and other persons writing to us should look in the letter list for the acknowledgment of their letters. The letters which reach us on or before Saturday of each week are acknowledged in the issue of the following Thursday.

NEW ORLEANS, MOBILE AND TEXAS RAILROAD.—In a recent trip to the Eastern cities we were compelled to acknowledge that the above named road was the smoothest and pleasantest of any over which we passed from here to New York. We found none having better rolling stock or surpassing it in any particular. The route from here to Mobile, along the shore, is almost entirely free from dust. With the advantage of the delightful sea breezes it offers a treat to travelers not often enjoyed in railway travel. See advertisement.

NEW ORLEANS SAVINGS INSTITUTION.—The above institution, which has been in existence about twenty years, is well managed, and is under the control of a board of directors composed of some of our best merchants and business men. Friends from the country remit us funds frequently to be deposited in this bank, showing the confidence they have in it as a safe place of deposit. We do not think any safer institution of the kind can be found. See advertisement in this issue of the ADVOCATE.

BOOTS AND SHOES.—R. F. W. Bachman, No. 18 Camp street, is one of our most enterprising merchants. He deserves success, and we rejoice to see his business growing. From personal experience we know that if you try him once you are apt to continue your patronage; and if you try him as long as we have you will be convinced that he is honorable in all his transactions and fully reliable. See his advertisement in another place.

ENGLISH CARPETINGS, RUGS, ETC. The old and reliable firm of Elkin & Co., No. 168 Canal street, importers and dealers in carpetings, oil cloths, rugs, shades, etc., is one of the cleverest business firms in the city. Their goods suit the market, their prices are reasonable, and we know of no house in any branch of business that gives more universal satisfaction. See advertisement.

FINE CLOTHING.—Messrs. Sproule & McCown, 40 and 42 St. Charles street, having connection with houses in New York, Louisville and Memphis, enjoy large facilities in the way of furnishing cheap goods. They have a large and inviting stock, and propose to sell at the very lowest prices. See their advertisement.

PROVISIONS AND GROCERIES.—We call attention to the advertisement, in another column, of J. J. Brown, Esq., formerly of Trenton, Louisiana, dealer in groceries and provisions, No. 78 Magazine street, where he will be pleased to show his fine stock of goods to friends from the country or in the city.

KID GLOVES.—One of the institutions of Canal street is Kreeger's Kid Glove Depot (No. 149,) where all the most desirable makes and grades are sold at the lowest market prices and warranted. The stock of this depot, we are assured, is replenished by weekly importations. See advertisement.

BABY'S DREAM.

BY ROSA BRAHAM.

Down the staircase little bare feet
Tripping came at break of day;
Softly oped my door and entered,
White-robed, blue eyed Baby May.
Early thought I, baby's angel
Brushed the dew of sleep away.

Just a moment baby waited,
Flushed and eager, by the door;
Quickly, then, the little bare feet,
Tripping, came across the floor,
Stopped beside my dressing-table—
Wondered I as ne'er before;

For the bright flush died a-sudden,
Shadows draped the eager eyes,
And the changed orbs, dim and dripping,
Turned to me in fixed surprise;
Lips that scarce could ope for trembling,
Thrilled me with their plaintive cries:

"I want my little purple carriage;
I want my bu'ful dollie too,
All drethed in thilk, a-lyin' in it—
O git it for me, Nantie, do!
'Ou'th hid it cauthe 'ou thought me'd break it—
O gibe it to me, willn't 'ou?"

Hard I strove my pet to comfort,
But the task more hapeless grew,
For the blue eyes dripped the faster,
Still the trembling lips did sue:
"I want my little purple carriage;
O gibe it to me, willn't 'ou?"

Ah, my white-robed, blue-eyed baby,
Harsh thy broken visions seem!
Would henceforth thy heart's sweet fancies
Fade not 'neath the morning's gleam;
For, alas! must life too often
Prove to thee a broken dream.

Hearth and Home.

The British Officer.

It was midnight in the rocky fortress of Gibraltar. The waves of the Mediterranean dashed up with a regular beat against the rock, and every now and then a sheet of spray, silvered in the moonlight, would appear on the window-sill of the room where an officer of the garrison tried in vain to sleep. Something kept him awake to-night, and his thoughts wandered to all the precious things he had left in his English home. There was the park, with its broad acres of smooth, green turf, and its grand old trees. There were elegant furniture, fine pictures, beautiful statuary, and books whose contents were more valuable than mines of jewels and gold. But there was something more precious still, for in a shaded nursery of that far-off home lay two little heads, every one of whose golden hairs was worth to their officer father more than all the wealth that had ever floated over the beautiful sea. They belonged to the little son and daughter of the officer. Their mother had died two years before, and now it was his greatest grief to be obliged to leave them alone in England, while he with his regiment was stationed so far away.

As he leaned over the ledge of the window, gazing wistfully upon the moonlit sea, he heard the footsteps of the sentinel far above his head, pacing to and fro, and every now and then he would hear him say: "The precious blood of Christ! the precious blood of Christ!" At first he did not listen; but by degrees, as he had been thinking of precious things, the word struck upon his ear, and he began to wonder if anything could be more precious than his dear little Elsie at home, or his bright, bold Harold. Then he tried to remember where he had heard these words before, and he thought perhaps his mother used to read them in a little old-fashioned book called the Bible, which he had not looked into for many a year.

There was an old dust-covered one in his room now, and taking it up he read by the light of the moon: "Ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, but with the precious blood of Christ." You know the Bible is God's word, and sometimes he uses it like a direct voice from heaven to call some poor wandering child to his love and his heart, and this was the case now. This officer, though he loved his children, had never loved Jesus; had never, in fact, thought much about him; but now, in the still midnight, the thoughts of the "precious blood of Christ" melted his whole heart into sorrow that he had so neglected it, and a longing for that treasure that was more precious even than his children; and he never rested till he knew he had found it for his own.

Children, this is a true story. God made use of that sentinel in Gibraltar as the means of the conversion of one of the noblest and most useful servants that he ever had. There is a voice ever whispering in your ears: "The precious blood of Christ, the precious blood of Christ." Do you hear it? Do you know what it means? It means that the most precious thing in the world, that which cost the most, is the salvation which our dear Lord Jesus died on the cross to procure for you. It is so precious that no money could buy it. No! though you should pile up all the pearls of Cape Comorin, all the diamonds of Golconda, all the silver of Peru, and all the gold of California, and bring it to the foot of God's throne, seeking to buy salvation with it, the whole would not be worth as much as one drop of the precious blood of Christ. Is it precious to you? Do you want to be saved? And do you feel so thankful to Jesus for shedding it for you that you would gladly yield yourself up to him, to be his loving child and servant forever? Then he gives it to you "without money and without price," and you will find it all through your future life the most precious of all your possessions. Precious, because it will wash you whiter than snow; precious, because no one can ever take it away from you; precious, because when death and the grave have turned everything else to dust and ashes, this will be more real and more bright through all the long ages of eternity.—New York Observer.

A Tree that Keeps a Standing Army.

Here's a story that a bright little humming-bird told me the other day. As it started from somewhere in the tropics, it grew to be a pretty long account by the time it reached me here in New York State; but it is founded strictly upon fact.

"What makes you live in a thorny tree?" said the humming-bird to one of her neighbors who always builds her nest on the bull's-horn thorn.

"It's a capital place," said her friend. "The thorns keep the monkeys away from my babies, and the army drives off all the crawling pests that make housekeeping so troublesome to little birds in other trees."

"Army! What army?"

"Why, our army," said the little bird. "Don't you know that our tree keeps an army?"

You may be sure the humming-bird was surprised to hear that. I was. And if I didn't know her so well I should have suspected her of spinning travelers' yarns. But she's honest; what she says can be depended on.

To make a long story short, I'll tell you about that army-keeping tree. It's a thorn-tree, you must know, and, as the thorns grow in pairs, curved out like bulls' horns, the tree gets its name from them. When the thorns are green they are soft, and filled with a sugary pulp, which is greatly liked by a kind of small black stinging ants, which are never found except on these trees, and the trees, it seems, cannot live without ants, at least in that part of the world. The ants bite a small hole near the tip of one of each pair of thorns, and gradually eat out the interior of the two. The hollow shells make capital houses for their young ones, and never go without tenants.

How do the ants live after the houses are cleared of food? The tree attends to that. On the stem of each leaf is a honey-well, always full, where the ants can sip to their heart's content. These wells supply them with drink. The leaves furnish them with food in an abundance of small yellow fruits like little golden pears. They do not ripen all at once, but one after another, so that the soldiers have a steady supply of ever-ripening fruit to eat, and are kept busy all the time running up and down the leaves to see how their crops come on. When an ant finds a pear ready for eating, he bites the stem, bends back the fruit, and, breaking it off, carries it in triumph to his nest.

It would be a cowardly ant that would not fight for a home like that, and these ants are no cowards. Just touch a limb so as to jar it, and the valiant little soldiers will swarm out from the thorns in great numbers and attack the intruders with jaws and stings. Not a caterpillar, leaf-cutter, beetle or any other enemy of the tree can touch one of its leaves without paying the penalty. Thus the tree thrives where it otherwise would be destroyed; and the ants find their reward in snug houses, with plenty to drink and to eat. The small birds, which hurt neither the ants nor the leaves, also find protection with them, and, let us hope, pay good rent in morning and evening songs.

Isn't that a profitable partnership for both birds and ants?

About German Dogs.

I want to tell the little folks something about the poor dogs in Germany, and what a hard life most of them lead. I do not mean very small dogs, with curly tails and light bushy silken hair—dogs that seem made for nothing but to frisk about the world and bark all the day long; but I am talking of large, strong mastiffs, such as are to be found all over Germany. How do you think they spend their short lives? In rushing about, with great open mouths, to scare little people? No, indeed! A harness of leather is fastened about them, and they have to drag about the streets small carts or wagons. Sometimes two dogs are put together before the same cart, just as you see ponies driven.

Early in the morning the milk-cans are thus carried all over the city. The poor animal is led by a peasant woman, in short blue dress, who holds in her hand a tiny stick. If he goes too slowly she hits his poor little legs to remind him of his duty. But, as this kind of treatment does not improve the dog's temper, a strong muzzle is fastened over his mouth, so that he cannot bite.

Not many days since I saw a dear little rosy-faced girl, about ten years of age, helping to draw one of these dog-carts. A strap was fastened to her waist, and she seemed to be doing most of the work. I felt very sorry for this child, till she looked up with a sweet, happy face to take from the hand of the woman by her side an apple, and I heard her laugh as merrily as if doggie and she were enjoying their work. I have seen these dogs lie down before their carts, too tired to go farther, when the strong woman or boy with them could have helped them had they chosen.

Every boy and girl should learn kindness to all dumb animals, so unable to tell what they suffer. You can do this if you ask yourself what you would like if you were in their places. Kind and thoughtful hearts grow into great hearts in time. I think I should like to preach a short sermon on kindness to the men and women who own these poor tired dogs.—Child's Companion.

HEARING THE SERMON.—A little girl used to go to church. She was only between four and five years of age—quite a little girl. But she listened to her minister. She knew that he would tell her good things, and she wanted to learn. Once when she reached home from church she said to her mother:

"Mother, I can tell you a little of Mr. H.'s sermon. He said: 'Touch not the unclean thing.'"

The mother wished to know whether her dear little daughter understood the meaning of these words. So she replied:

"Then, my dear child, if Mr. H. said so, I hope you will take care in the future not to touch things that are dirty."

The little girl smiled, and answered:

"O mother, I know very well what he meant."

"What did he mean?" said the mother.

"He meant sin," said the child; "and it is all the same as if Mr. H. had said: 'You must not tell lies, nor do what your mother forbids you to do, nor play on Sunday, nor be cross, nor do things that are bad or wrong.' The Bible means that a sinful thing is an unclean thing.'"

I hope that little girl tried after that always to shun all kinds of bad things. What will my little friends do? Say, little boys and girls, what will you do?—Sunday School Herald.

Farm, Garden and Household.

The Kingship of Grass.

We have examined the figures of the ninth census for the purpose of ascertaining the aggregate value of the hay and grass crop for the year 1870. The total estimated value of all farm productions for that year, including betterments and additions to stock, amounts to $2,447,538,658. The hay crop for that year—namely, the grass cut and cured for use by the farmer or brought to the market and sold—was 27,316,048 tons. The value of this hay, estimated at half the selling price in large cities, would amount in round numbers to $405,000,000. This exceeds the value of any other crop.

We are to remember, however, that hay, cut and dried, is but a portion of the grass crop. There is a large credit to be set down to this crop which does not appear in the form of hay. The animals slaughtered or sold for slaughter that were in part fed on this grass are valued at $398,956,376. The butter production of that year, arising mainly from the consumption of grass, amounted to 514,092,683 pounds, which, estimated at twenty-five cents a pound, gives a cash value of $128,523,170. In the same year there were sold 235,500,599 gallons of milk, another product of the grass crop, which, at the low estimate of ten cents per gallon, gives $23,550,059 for milk sold. The production of cheese was 53,492,153 pounds. Set this down at ten cents per pound, and we have $5,349,215 for cheese. The wool crop of the same year was 100,102,387 pounds, which, at the rate of twenty-five cents per pound, amounts to $25,025,596. These farm products, arising chiefly from the consumption of grass, being added to the hay product, we then have the following schedule of figures:

Hay crop	$40,500,000 00
Slaughtered animals	398,956,376 00
Butter	128,523,170 00
Milk sold	23,550,059 00
Cheese	5,349,215 00
Wool	25,025,596 00
Total	$986,404,410 00

The value of the live stock fed that year in part upon grass is put down at $1,525,000,000. Let us suppose that for that year at least $100,000,000 of value in grass were consumed not appearing in the above statement, and this carries up the aggregate to $1,086,404,410. From this let us deduct the total value of the corn and oat crops for that year, amounting to $270,000,000, as an allowance for other kinds of food fed to animals slaughtered or yielding butter, cheese, etc., and we have left $816,404,410 in round numbers as representing the hay and grass crop and their products. Reduce the sum to seven hundred millions by another liberal allowance, and still we see that the hay and grass crop immensely exceeds any other. Let it not be said that cotton is king. Grass is king among the agricultural productions of this country.—Independent.

A MODERATELY coarse towel is the best article for bathing. It should be a yard long, so as to take the ends in the hands and draw it across the back easily, so as to thoroughly cleanse every part of the body.

The common towel bath is the most generally available and useful. It is impossible to cleanse the skin by violent scratching with a flesh brush or any other harsh substance. Soaking or keeping the skin wet for some time is the only way to cleanse the skin without rubbing it off. A thorough wash once a week, which requires from one to two hours, is much better than the same time spent on seven baths a week.

And for persons who are so pressed for time by occupation which gives sufficient exercise, one bath a week will do very well, except in hot weather and in dusty work. And in hot weather, when we perspire freely, it does not take so long to properly bathe.

There is a scarf skin formed over the true skin, caused by the insensible perspiration drying on it.

In a hurried bath, when the body is only wet and wiped, this scarf skin is not started, and we are unconscious that it is there. When we bathe a little longer, say ten to fifteen minutes, the scarf will be started and rub up in little rolls, but when we keep bathing for an hour this will be all washed off and will not rub up. Most bathers never get beyond the first degree of bathing, and are not aware that they have a scarf all over them; others get to the second degree. But it requires the third degree to thoroughly cleanse the skin, and this will do it. Two waters should be used, one to wash in and one to rinse in. Castile soap may be used with advantage in the first water, but the rinsing water should be pure. Never wipe out of soapy water. If only one water can be had it is better to use no soap; have the rinsing water a little cooler than the first water; let it be as cold as is agreeable. In commencing a bath, if the water or air is too cool for comfort, wet the towel and ring it out, then go over the body quick and vigorously with the damp towel, commencing at the feet and going upward. This will produce no shock or chill, and then the wash will be pleasant.

The towel you wash with rinse and wring out as dry as possible. It is best to wipe with a damp towel; vigorously used, it will wipe the skin clean and leave it smoother than a dry towel, and this is true of the hands and face as well as the body. It is good to wash the head and hair as well as the body, especially those subject to catarrh, or colds in the head.

When the skin is clean it is much less sensitive to cold, and we are much less liable to take cold with the same exposure.—Herald of Health.

LOOKING-GLASSES SPOILED BY SUNSHINE.—We clip the following from the Industrial Monthly. It is worthy the attention of every one. It does not seem to be generally understood that the amalgam of tin-foil with mercury, which is spread on grass plates to make looking-glasses, is very readily crystallized by actinic solar rays. A mirror hung where the sun can shine on it is usually spoiled; it takes a granulated appearance familiar to housekeepers, though they may not be acquainted with the cause of the change. In such a state the article is nearly worthless, the continuity of the surface is destroyed, and it will not reflect outlines with any approach to precision.

GATHERING AND KEEPING APPLES.—Gather carefully on as dry a day as possible in the fall, and place the fruit on a floor, or in open bins, from one foot to sixteen inches in depth. After about a week examine, and if the dampness, commonly called cold-sweat, has passed off, prepare a good, clean barrel, and, as each apple is placed in the barrel, see that it is made perfectly dry by wiping it with a soft cloth. As soon as the barrel is filled, head it up securely, and place in a cool, dry cellar.—Charles Downing.

A DISTINGUISHED clergyman, Dr. Hawes, used to say that his style of preaching was molded by the criticisms of Dr. Emmons on a single sermon. Dr. Hawes read a paper to his tutor exuberant with rhetoric. "Joel," said the sage, "I kept school once. When I punished the boys I always stripped the leaves off the rod"—drawing his imaginary rod through the fingers.

A TIPPLER staggered against the side of a house which had been newly painted. Shoving himself clear by a vigorous effort, he took a glimpse at his shoulder, another at the house, a third at his hand, and exclaimed: "Well, that is a careless trick in whoever painted that house, to leave it standing out all night for people to run against."

VOICE IN FISHES.—Dr. A. Dufosso has for several years been engaged in studying the phenomena of sound or voice in fishes, communicating from time to time to the Freuch Academy of Solenees the results of his observations. The committee appointed by the Aeademy to examine M. Dufosse's claims as an origiual discoverer in this fieid have now made the report, in which they give a history of their investigations, and declare that the author has "discovered new facts, and throwu light on several obsoure questions iu ichthyology." Dr. Dufosse recognizes three classes of souuds produced by fishes: 1. Irregular souuds, as he calls them, produced by the lips, by the lids over the gills, or by the movement of certain artioulations. The fishes produciug such sounds as these are the carp (cyprinus,) the loach, the gurnard (dactylopterus,) and the seahorse (hippocampus.) 2. Regular sounds, produeed by the rubbing together of tho bones of the pharynx (mackereis, scombe oids,) or of the luter-maxillary teeth (suufish, or thagoriscus,) or by forcing into the esophagus air from the swimming-bladder (fishes of the carp class, siluroids, etc.) 3. Regular and voluntary sounds, produced by the contraction of museles in fishes whose swimming-bladder does not open into the esophagus (malarmat, trigla and others.) The chief merit of M. Dufosse's observations consists in showing that this latter class of sounds is voluntary and expressive. Some fishes can emit a sound which may be heard at the distance of several yards; but when a uumber of them utter their sounds at onee they can be heard at a far greater distance, and this circumstnuce has given rise to many fabulous stories. In fishes having a swimming-bladder, not conneeting with the esophagus, Dufosse has observed that this air-chamber is agitated while the souad coutinues, aud he has demonstrated by vivisections that the muscles of the swimming-bladder directly produce the vibrations, the bladder itself acting the part of a sounding-board in augmenting the sound produced by the museles.—Galaxy.

WHAT IS ACTINISM?—Actinism is the chemical power which is necessary to excite germination in plants. It emanates from the blue ray of the spectrum, and is the same power which operates on the sensitive silver in photography; photography being, by the way, an entire misnomer, since the pictures are drawn by the actinic power, and not by the luminous ray. Nay, more; the luminous ray is, like the red, a positive hinderance to the working of the actinic power. It is most difficult to obtain good photographic results under the bright sun of the tropics. Moreover, if a spectrum be thrown on a prepared photographic surfaee, there will be two points only where the paper is preserved positively white, namely, the points on which the red and the yellow rays are respectively collected in the spectrum. Neither will seeds germinate so long as they are exposed to bright light. Again, by another experiment, it can be satisfactorily proved that the trail in the blue ray alone renders that power which is the sole agent in photography; for if we exclude the blue rays by passing all the light admitted through a yellow glass, the most sensitive photographic material may be exposed to the strongest sunshine without undergoing any change whatever. The result of experiment is that germination is excited by the actinic power of the blue ray; the formation of leaf and wood by the luminous power of the yellow ray; and the development of flower and fruit by the heat of the red ray. How the actinic ray reaches the seed in the ground is hard to understand; but that it does penetrate where the luminous ray is unable to reach is plain from experiments, which go also to show that the exclusion of the luminous ray is necessary for the operation of the actinic. Shade is always (absolute darkness sometimes) necessary for the success of the germinating process. Plant eress seed an inch deep in three plots; over the first place a blue, over the seeond a yellow, and over the third a red glass. The seeds under the blue glass will be up days before those under the red; and of those under the red a few only will germinate. Those under the yellow will not germinate at all. It is found that those seeds which come up under a white glass, in from eight to fourteen days, will; under a blue glass, be up in from two to five days; that where thirty per cent. of seed came up before, sixty per cent. can now be raised; and that some seeds from tropical countries, which could not formerly be raised in this climate under a white frame, will germinate freely under a blue one. It would seem that the depth to which the air can penetrate the soil is the measure of the depth of germination. This is a practical result. There appears to be no limit to the duration of the dormant vitality of seeds, so long as they are preserved from chemical change. The mummy wheat sprang up again, under the actinic ray, after it had been sealed from the air for nearly three thousand years. The seeds in the coal-measures have unfortunately undergone great chemical changes; otherwise there would be no reason why we should despair of seeing the indigenous palm-groves of this land flourishing once more.—Half-Hour Recreations in Popular Science.

THERE is no word or action but may be taken with two hands—either with the right hand of charitable construction, or the sinister interpretation of malice and suspicion.—Bishop Hall.

On Saturday the market opened with a very good inquiry, and 2,000 bales changed hands during the morning, partly at previous rates and partly at an improvement of ⅛c., after which the movement exhibited more animation, and the entire business summed up 8,400 bales. On Monday the movement commenced under the stimulating influence of an advance of 1-16d. at Liverpool, where the sales were put down at 20,000 bales, and an improvement of ⅛c. in spots at New York, together with an advance of 3-16 ₱ cent. in foreign exchange. Under these circumstances factors raised their pretensions ¼@⅜c., which was above the views of buyers, and restricted the sales during the morning to 1,300 bales, mostly at an advance of ⅛c., but in some cases at a fraction more, after which parties came together more freely, and the movement exhibited increased animation, resulting in further transactions to the extent of 2,950 bales, making the total 1,250 bales. On Tuesday prices exhibited but little variation at the opening, but factors, finding that the limits of orders prevented brokers from going on unless at some concessions, were compelled to give way to the extent of Monday's advance, and meet the demand at Saturday's improvement. The movement then exhibited increased animation, and the day's sales summed up 5,600 bales. Among the sales we noticed good ordinary at 13⅛c., middling at 14⅝c., and middling fair at 15, 15⅛@15⅛c.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 17,250 bales, against 15,000 for the corresponding time last week and 15,100 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 223,775 bales, against 191,138 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 220,083 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 120,735 bales to Great Britain, of 5,614 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 20,539 to France. We quote:

Good ordinary	13⅜ @ 13⅝
Strict good ordinary	13⅝ @ 13⅞
Low middling	14⅛ @ 14¼
Strict low middling	14¼ @ 14⅜
Middling	14⅜ @ 14½

Good middling	14⅝ @ 15

The Christian Advocate.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. J. HARP, FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH.

VOL. 20. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 26, 1874. NO. 48.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18.—The annual report of the commissioner of the Indian Bureau has been prepared, and is a generally satisfactory statement of the condition of these wards of the nation during the past year. The commissioner has little to say regarding the warfare in the Southwest, except to express his commendation of the policy of punishing the marauding savages, in pursuance of which General Miles' and other expeditions inflicted sharp chastisement on the Kiowas, Comanches and Arapahoes, who had been raiding and slaughtering in Texas and New Mexico. The proper mode of treating such Indians, whom he classes as wild and intractable, is, in the commissioner's view, to feed them while they are peaceable, and to punish them promptly and severely when they take to the war-path against the whites. Of the other divisions of Indians classified as more or less civilized, and composing the large majority of the whole number, the commissioner speaks most encouragingly in respect to their permanent location on reservations, and their disposition to farming and the pursuits of peace. He recommends new legislation by Congress for the purpose of extending the jurisdiction of the national and State law over the Indians, and as far as possible making them amenable to the courts of justice, the same as ordinary citizens.

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 20.—Rev. Dr. W. Nicholson has resigned the pastorate of Trinity Episcopal church in this city, and will join the Reformed Episcopal Church.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., Nov. 21.—The vote was counted yesterday in the presence of both houses of the General Assembly. Lewis, Republican, 93,928; Houston, Democrat, 107,118. Houston's majority is 13,190. The State officers will be inaugurated next Tuesday, and extensive preparations are being made to render it the most imposing demonstration ever witnessed in this State.

NASHVILLE, Nov. 23.—A heavy storm has prevailed south and west of here for twenty-four hours.

Tuscumbia, Alabama, is reported partially destroyed, and ten lives lost.

Later.—The following particulars of the disastrous storm at Tuscumbia, Alabama, are just received:

A terrible storm occurred here last evening at six o'clock, destroying one-third of the residences.

Twelve persons were killed and many others injured. Mrs. William Winston, mother of the late Ex-Governor Winston; the wife and children of Hon. J. B. Moore, senator from this district; F. D. Hodgkins, Esq., editor of the Chronicle, his wife and four children, were killed. The Catholic church, Dishler Female Institute, recently finished, many of the finest residences, both of the flouring mills and the most substantial brick dwellings in the town were destroyed.

Many poor families are without homes. A bridge on the M. and C. railroad, near town, was destroyed. The eastern-bound train was precipitated into Spring creek, but fortunately no one was killed. The engineer was badly burned. Several days must elapse before the trains will run through. The mayor appeals to Huntsville, Louisville, Nashville, Memphis and adjoining towns in the following terms:

"Nearly half our town is in ruins. Twelve persons are killed and many wounded. Large numbers of families are entirely destitute. The tornado came from the southwest, passing northeast. Unless immediate aid can be extended to us much suffering will be the result. We appeal to the charity of a Christian public in behalf of the unfortunate.

H. F. NEWSUM,
Mayor of Tuscumbia."

FOREIGN.

PERNAMBUCO, Nov. 17.—Latest advices from Buenos Ayres state that the government is negotiating with the insurgents to bring about a mutually satisfactory termination of their difficulties. In the meantime hostilities continue.

RIO JANEIRO, Nov. 18.—Dispatches received here from Buenos Ayres state that the revolution is continued without check. General Mitre, at the head of the rebels, was still confronting the government troops.

LONDON, Nov. 18.—The Polar Exploring Expedition, fitted out by the British government, will consist of two steamers. Captain Markham, of the Royal navy, will command one of them. The expedition will start for the arctic region next May.

LONDON, Nov. 19.—The object of the journey of the English bishops to Rome is to obtain permission to pursue an independent course in case the British government should seek to restrict the liberty of action of the Catholic clergy. They will represent to the Pope that they wish to respect the laws of England, and cannot blindly accept such regulations as are imposed on the continental bishops.

MATAMORAS, Nov. 20.—The Mexican Congress has decreed the constitution of a Senate to be made up of two senators from each State and federal district of the republic. Peace prevails at all points. Shocks of an earthquake have been felt at intervals along the route from Vera Cruz to Guanajuato. The shocks commenced on the thirteenth instant. It is thought to threaten the approach of extraordinary volcanic eruptions.

LONDON, Nov. 22.—It is rumored a treaty will shortly be concluded between the governments of Germany and Morocco, by which the port of Morocco will be ceded to Germany.

LONDON, Nov. 24.—In the new English arctic expedition Lady Franklin renews the offer of £10,000 for authentic information regarding Sir John Franklin's fate.

This week's Mark Lane Express reports a general advance in continental markets, since its last issue, of one shilling in the price of wheat.

Sinking of the Empire.

At a little after twelve o'clock on Monday night the steamboat Empire, from the lower coast, landed at her wharf at the foot of Conti street, and at half-past three in the morning suddenly and rapidly sank in the most mysterious and unaccountable manner, taking with itself beneath the waters a large number of passengers and crew. The details of the affair are as follows:

STATEMENT OF MR. PERRET.

By one of the passengers, D. R. Perret, who embarked at the Hard Times plantation, a statement has been furnished to this effect:

When the Empire reached the above-named landing she had already almost a full cargo, after which she made several other stoppages and took on about one hundred sacks of rice and sixty hogsheads of sugar. In his opinion the boat was overloaded, there being fully two inches of water on her guards. Messrs. Perret and Bolin, and some others of the passengers, protested against taking on board any further freight, deeming it unsafe and dangerous.

Captain Jeunfreau, who was in command, states, on the contrary, that the boat had only a fair cargo, that she was not overloaded, and that the guards were well above water. Furthermore, he adds that had the boat been too heavily loaded she would have sunk on the way here, and not after being safely moored several hours at the wharf.

Rumors are adrift that the hull broke in two, but this is only a surmise, and has not yet been definitely ascertained. But be the causes what they may, the facts are there that the steamboat Empire lies sunk in the water up to her texas and pilothouse in the river at the foot of Conti street, and that not a few lives have been lost, while of those who succeeded in making their escape only a few names have as yet been ascertained.

The captain, who lost four of his children by the accident, relates that he was suddenly awakened at the time of the sinking by the great noise and confusion existing throughout the boat. He caught one of his children and swam with it to shore. His wife he saw standing on the deck with her babe in her arms. As the boat went down she clung to the wheel-house of the Bradish Johnson, which stood alongside, but the violent shock wrenched from her grasp her child, who fell into the water and was drowned. Among his other children lost was his young daughter, about eighteen years of age, who is spoken of as having been a remarkably pretty and accomplished lady.—Picayune, November 18.

Please Read This.

It is with great difficulty that funds sufficient to print the Mississippi Conference Minutes are obtained at Conference from the members. Lack of cash in hand compels delay in publication, and a small edition. The head of every Methodist family within our Conference bounds ought to have a copy. It is essential to the prosperity of our church that knowledge of the labors of our denomination be made known.

Conference convenes December 16. A copy of the printed Minutes can be mailed to each subscriber within three weeks after adjournment. To do this, let every one that desires a copy hand his name and twenty-five cents to the minister in charge, or agent appointed by him (with postoffice address.) Let every member of Conference bring these lists of names and money, and hand over to the committee on minutes. If the minister has left his charge, get the agent or getter-up of the list to forward the list and money to Rev. C. G. Andrews, D. D., secretary, Hazlehurst, Mississippi.

I feel well assured, if this plan is adopted, there will be no trouble about Minutes this year. Brethren, try it. ROBERT B. DOWNER.

CORRECTION.—Mr. Editor: In my article on "J. W. on Temperance," published recently in the ADVOCATE, the printer makes me commit a grammatical error. Instead of "have drank," it should have been have drunk. He also mistakes the u for an a in the Greek word gleukos. Will you please correct?

Yours truly, M.

TEARS.—"Genuine tears are the involuntary and faithful expressions of the soul. The soul's sorrow or joy—for joy weeps—guilt or innocence—for insulted virtue has its tears—glistens in the pearly drop. Tears relieve the soul; they are prevailing orators; they win triumphs which neither the infernal sword nor divine speech could ever achieve. A true tear is electric to the true."

DOUBLEMARD, the sculpter, is engaged at Paris on a statue of Bolivar, the "Liberador," which is to cost $10,000. The model is to be sent out to Guayaquil for the approval of the Ecuador government.

From the Work.

MANSFIELD, LOUISIANA.—Mr. Editor: We have just closed a most successful meeting here. Rev. Mr. Harrington, of the Presbyterian Church, and myself joined forces and worked together in a union meeting, assisted by Rev. John Pipes. The meeting was held both day and night, and lasted thirteen days, and resulted in thirty-nine additions to the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and twenty-nine to the Presbyterians—total, sixty-eight. It took place in the very midst of the election excitement, when everything seemed unpropitious. The town was brought within a blessed religious influence.

The people of Mansfield are a generous people, and it is hard to part with them. God bless them forever.

Yours truly,
JAMES E. BRADLEY.

NOVEMBER 11, 1874.

HARRISONBURG, LOUISIANA.—Mr. Editor: For the encouragement of those who rejoice at Zion's prosperity I record as follows:

Bro. J. F. Marshall and I have recently closed a meeting at Harrisonburg, which lasted over two weeks, resulting in several conversions and nine accessions. The Holy Spirit nightly attended the word. A deep seriousness, unknown, I am told, for years at this place, pervaded the congregation. The visible results would have been much greater had we not been broken into by political meetings in our midst, and by United States troops and parish militia, who were introduced doubtless as a political coup d'etat to intimidate some of our citizens and influence the elections. Satan also tried to get up a revival, but, strange to say, almost signally failed.

Bro. B. F. Alexander rendered me valuable aid on Sicily Island, where I have just closed a meeting of five days, resulting in six accessions and, I think, several conversions—said to be the best meeting known at this place since the war. We thank God, take courage, and expect to renew the conflict again before Conference.

Fraternally,
S. H. SCHROEDER.

NOVEMBER 12, 1874.

RANDOLPH CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The good Lord has graciously visited Randolph circuit, Alabama Conference, with the outpouring of his Holy Spirit. At my third quarterly meeting, on Saturday, my presiding elder, Dr. Mitchell, preached a powerful sermon, in his solemn and impressive manner, which had a fine effect. He preached two other very appropriate sermons, and then left on Tuesday morning. On Wednesday night the Baptists joined in with us, and the meeting was very powerful for seventeen days and nights. The hardest sinners were brought to the foot of the cross and happily converted. The conversions were clear and triumphant, and the converts immediately went to work, praying and exhorting their friends, and bringing them to the altar.

Another union meeting of seventeen days and nights, with the Cumberland Presbyterians, was, if possible, more powerful. Sinners were converted in the church and in the woods by night and by day. The region around rang with the shouts of heaven-born souls and the high praises of God.

Bro. Nally held a meeting at another appointment that did well, considering the difficulties in his way. The result of the whole is one hundred and seventeen converts. Seventeen joined the Baptists, twenty joined the Cumberland Presbyterians, and eighty the Methodist Episcopal Church South. P. C.

DESOTO, LOUISIANA.—Mr. Editor: Yesterday, the eighth of November, was a day for which we shall cherish pleasant memories. We dedicated our new church in Grand Cane—Union chapel—and raised the collection to pay the balance due on it. Last February we commenced our worship on the lot where the church now stands, in the grove. Building a church was the question. We talked, devised, planned and worked. The result is a chapel and money enough in reach to pay all claims against it. We have a lot of four acres of ground deeded to a regularly incorporated and duly organized board of trustees, and on record. Mr. Editor, it is no small matter to build a church, and it is no use to say in "these times" either, for we never knew a time when it did not take a life-and-death struggle to build and pay for a church. We honor the people who have done it. The old adage, "Where there is a will there is a way," was never more clearly evinced than by the people of Grand Cane in building this church. If the centurion was thought worthy that the Savior should come to him because he had of his wealth built a synagogue, how much more the people of Grand Cane, who have built a church of their poverty? May this church be the means of adding many living stones to the spiritual edifice of Jesus Christ. J. PIPES.

P. S.—I have been for some days attending a revival meeting in Mansfield, conducted by Bro. Bradley, and Mr. Harrington, Presbyterian minister. There have been many conversions and sixty accessions to the churches. J. P.

MCCOMB CITY, MISSISSIPPI.—Mr. Editor: During the month of October—beginning on the fifteenth and continuing until the night of the twenty-first—a camp meeting at McComb City, Mississippi, began and continued under the auspices of Rev. A. B. Nicholson, presiding elder of Summit district, which resulted in the conversion to Jesus of more than sixty souls. The religious exercises were protracted, with good results, for two or three weeks after the close of the camp meeting, by Rev. H. M. Church. On Sunday Rev. H. F. Johnson, of Brookhaven, preached two of the best discourses he ever uttered—thought by some the best they had ever heard. About fifteen hundred persons were present, and excellent order was observed. Every facility was afforded to aid the worthy motives of the originators of the camp meeting. The citizens nobly aided, as did also Mr. Buckley, of the DeSoto House, one of the best-kept hotels in which the writer has sojourned. His charges were moderate, and the attentions of his excellent wife and active servants shall not be forgotten. Long may the DeSoto, McComb City and citizens be remembered!

Bro. Nicholson had the aid of Revs. Strickland, Bowen, Harmon, New, C. C. Watkins, Hoover, and a goodly band of praying and singing men and women.

Too much praise cannot be awarded the presiding elder for his indefatigable efforts in pushing on this affair, and he has the hearty thanks, and will have the co-operation of all who were present in all such enterprises.

At the close of the camp meeting an executive board of ten of the leading Methodists of the district was appointed by the large audience to receive propositions, donations and make purchases, and to select a place for a permanent camp ground.

Notes from the Field.

NEEDS AND OPENINGS IN CHINA.

From time to time our two missionaries in China, Bros. Lambuth and Allen, have pressed upon the attention of the board and the church the fact that "great and effectual" doors are open to us. It seems too plain for debate or doubt that we are called as a church to strengthen our forces in Shanghai, and to establish new stations at other centers of population and influence. In nearly all the foreign missionary journals we have convincing evidence of the great need and great opportunity in China. Whole provinces are without the gospel, and yet nothing hinders their occupation but the want of means to send the missionaries, who wait to go. In a late number of the Chinese Recorder and Missionary Journal we find an instructive address by the Rev. George Piercy, well known as "the father of the Wesleyan missions in China," upon the "Extension of Missionary Effort in the Canton Province." In this province the operations of the missionaries have been confined chiefly to the cities of Swatow and Canton. "In the city of Canton," says Mr. Piercy, "there are the representatives of six missionary societies, and one independent laborer—altogether fifteen men and four lady teachers. In each mission here there are some tried and trustworthy native agents, and others are under training. * * * Bearing in mind our own strength, and the number of our assistants, the time has come when we ought to make some aggression upon the heathenism beyond, some strenuous attempts to carry the gospel farther into the province."

In reading Mr. Piercy's statement of the need of the extension of missionary effort in the province of Canton, let us remember that the provinces accessible to our missionaries in Shanghai are as populous and needy.

Mr. Piercy says, in describing the field which he longs to occupy:

"The field is the province, except the northeast department of Chul-Chou-fu, which may properly be left to the care of our brethren located at Swatow. Inclusive of this, the area of the whole province is nearly equal to the area of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. Excluding Chul-Chou-fu, there are nine departments, containing seventy-one districts, each of which has a walled city; but the population varies greatly, from twenty thousand in many, up to a hundred and fifty thousand in two or three of the most densely inhabited. Great mercantile centers exist, such as Fut-shan, Kong-mun, Tai-nam, Ch'aou-tsun, with vast numbers of people dwelling in them. Some towns in the silk districts contain from ten thousand to at least sixty thousand inhabitants. The villages are innumerable, yet we can roughly estimate them. The topography of the Nam-hoi district gives the names of seven hundred and eighty-seven villages. Taking the average number of villages in each district at four hundred, we have a total of twenty-eight thousand four hundred villages in these nine departments. As a round number we may safely say the province contains from twenty to twenty-four millions of inhabitants. In the whole province there is not one of the district cities, or its suburbs, occupied by a resident Protestant missionary. In three or four of these cities there are a few Christians under the care of a native assistant, who is occasionally visited by a foreign missionary."

That is to say—leaving out the cities of Canton and Swatow, and counting in them and their suburbs two millions of people—here is a province as large as Great Britain and Ireland, and nearly as populous, where there is not a single "resident Protestant missionary." If these millions lived in the moon it would not be our duty to send them the gospel—unless we could get there. But we can get to China—in twenty days by steamer from San Francisco! Do these benighted millions need the gospel of Jesus Christ? Ask if they need the light of the sun. What would we be without the gospel? What has it done for us? It can do as much for the millions, who "sit in darkness and in the shadow of death."

THE OSAKA ARSENAL.

The heathen nations see the superiority of our civilization. Alas! that they do not first seek that which alone makes us superior to them, and that we are not more zealous to give it to them—our Christianity.

Take the following from the Church Missionary Intelligencer for October. It is a paragraph from a letter by the Rev. C. F. Warren, a Church of England missionary at Osaka, one of the treaty ports in Japan. Mr. Warren says:

"Not far from the mint, and close by the castle, is the Osaka arsenal. There were two gentlemen to whom we were introduced on handing our letter from the foreign office. They received us very cordially, and gave us every facility we could wish for viewing every part of the establishment. We saw two bronze field-pieces cast, and others in various stages of progress toward the final polish. * * * I thoroughly enjoyed the visit, and was only saddened by the thought that engines of war and destruction, and not of peace and preservation, were here in process of manufacture."

A good man must sympathize with Mr. Warren in the sad reflections suggested by his visit to the Osaka arsenal: "While we may view such an establishment as exhibiting one feature of Japanese progress, surely it should stir up every Christian heart to pray for the spread of the gospel of peace, and for the hastening of that glorious day when the nations shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks, and they shall learn war no more." After giving us an interesting account of the railway between Kobe and Osaka, which was opened May 11, of this year, and which was built "under foreign supervision, the rails, iron work for bridges, etc., being imported from the West," Mr. Warren concludes his letter with a sad account of the vices and idolatries of these quick-witted and enterprising people, who are as yet "without God, without Christ, and without hope."

An arsenal in Osaka, but no Christian church! It is a commentary and a prophecy. Have Christian nations nothing but arsenals and railroads for Japan? Have we nothing for them but engines of war, or what, at least, can only increase their material power? Railroads and telegraphs in Japan will carry blessings, if only the church will keep up with them.

SOWING TARES.

One thing is quite plain to all who use their eyes—the devil is busy. "While men sleep he sows tares." There is no end to his activity, as there is no measure to his hatred of Christ and his cause. How the devil does hate missionaries! During eighteen centuries he has followed in their track, "sowing tares" as thick as they could lie on the ground. Witness the missionary history recorded in the Acts of the Apostles. How often satan "hindered" Paul! And he is the same accuser, slanderer, enemy, destroyer, to-day as he was in Iconium, in Lystra, in Corinth, in Athens, in Ephesus, in Rome. Well is he named—Devil, Satan, Apollyon! And he has had many helpers. Great kings, victorious generals and rich merchants have been in league with him. Witness the struggles of the East India Company to keep Christ out of Hindostan. But "he that sitteth in the heavens" had them in derision; the East India Company is dead and gone, and revival power is poured out on Bombay, Calcutta and Madras. Some weeks ago I mentioned the fact that hundreds of educated young Hindoos are now learning infidelity in the pages of Huxley, Spencer, Colenso and Bradlaugh. But a few days since we read a missionary's complaint that the United States was "sending more rum than gospel" to Turkey and Syria.

Now read the following from the Missionary Record for October, organ of the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland. The paragraph occurs in a letter written by the Rev. Dr. Faulds, a missionary in Japan. He writes from Yeddo, May 10, 1874. He had been looking through a Japanese book store. Dr. Faulds says:

"Here is a curious Japanese two-volumed book. A peculiar grin seems to overspread the bronzed and wrinkled face of the book-seller as the missionary looks into it. Ah! what are those curious, half-ludicrous figures, with something which recalls sacred memories to us? This is the beginning of the infidel literature of modern Japan, and is said to owe much to the influence of one of our countrymen. I cannot speak from intimate knowledge of its contents as yet, but there can be no doubt as to its general tendency, and that it is an intensely coarse and scurrilous attack on Christ. Fortunately, as a Japanese Christian remarked to me, it is accompanied with a good map of Bible lands, and contains many passages of Scripture, and, as he thought, may lead many of his countrymen to read and think about this life which excited no interest before. Still it is sad to think that in a crisis like this, when the nation is about to crystallize into some permanent form—a good one, let us hope—there should be those among our countrymen eager to prevent the Japanese from receiving the gospel of Christ."

There is no greater question for Christian nations to consider than this: Will we give to the great heathen nations now in the throes of a new birth—that must be into life or into a deeper death—the gospel of the Son of God?

PRAYER FOR MISSIONS.

I am deeply impressed with the repeated requests of foreign missionaries for the prayers of the church at home. A missionary in Japan closes a letter in these words: "Let me beg our friends and supporters at home to pray very earnestly that Japan may be fully opened, and that God's word may have free course, and be glorified throughout this land. Surely the cry cannot go up in vain, and the blessing cannot long be withheld."

A missionary in India closes his letter thus: "As our prayers have been frequent and fervent in behalf of the church at home, that the good work may more and more spread and prosper among you, I trust that we will not be forgotten in your prayers, that the same precious blessings may be abundantly poured out on us, and that the churches of India may experience such a revival as has never yet been seen."

How the church of Antioch prayed for her missionaries—Paul and Barnabas—and how abundantly their labors were blessed! I grieve to write the words—but, as it seems to me, prayer for our missionaries, for mission work, for the salvation of the heathen, is sadly and ominously lacking in the worship of our congregations. How seldom does the preacher, when he leads the prayers of the congregation, pray for our missionaries, or for the conversion of the heathen? And we do not hear it in our prayer meetings. What of the prayers that are offered about our family altars and in our closets? May he who loved and died for all men save us from selfishness and narrowness in our prayers! No wonder so many in the church have leanness of soul. No wonder we lack money. No wonder we are so far behind many weaker churches in missionary enterprise.

We must pray if we would prosper. No plans, devices, boards of managers, secretaries, anniversaries, not all the machinery in the world can substitute prayer. We want faith, power, life. It is no great thing for a chemist to make a dead man's arm jerk under the influence of galvanic currents, but he cannot give it the motion and power of life. Let us all pray—for pardon that we have done so little—for divine awakening that we may do more—for God's blessing on the labors of our missionaries—and for the outpouring of his Spirit upon the heathen world.

And let our chief clergy, our bishops and elders and doctors, before the congregation, set the example.

An Earthquake.

On the thirteenth instant occurred at Vera Cruz a remarkable phenomenon, for that place, in an earthquake, two distinct shocks of which were felt, and which extended for several hundred miles along the coast, creating the most intense excitement among the residents.

The shocks were two in number, and lasted, it is calculated, about ten seconds each; and though considerable damage was done in the cracking of buildings and the levelling of houses, fortunately no lives were lost.

By a passenger from the steamship Cuba we learn the following particulars, which he stated as follows:

"I was sitting in my room some time in the forenoon, when suddenly the walls seemed to reel, my head grew dizzy, and everything to whirl round. I jumped to my feet and rushed toward the door, which I had hardly reached when the same sensation came over me, and the walls seemed to crack. Then, but not before, came the horrible feeling that it was an earthquake. I made for the street, which, when I reached, I found crowded with people, men, women and children, screaming, praying, and in the most terrible confusion. Just at this moment some one shouted: For the plaza! and every one rushed toward the square, apprehending another shock; but after waiting half an hour, and no more being felt, tranquillity was in some degree restored and people returned to their homes. Then an investigation could be made into the damage, and it was ascertained that no lives had been lost; and though property had been damaged, every one was thankful it had been no worse after the terrible experience of our neighbors.

"The surprise of the earthquake was all the more that they have never had any apparent shock of an earthquake at Vera Cruz, at least in the memory of the present residents; so that when these shocks swept through the city every one was completely terrified.

"These shocks were perfectly indescribable. It seemed as if the earth was rising and falling like a sea; then a dead, awful pause, and the same sensation almost immediately repeated, striking one with a nameless dread which no words can describe."—Picayune.

TIRED.

"Does the road wind up hill all the way?
Yes, to the very end."
So tired!—I fain would rest.
But, Lord, thou knowest best;
I wait on thee.
I will toil on from day to day,
Bearing my cross, and only pray
To follow thee.

So tired! My friends are gone
And I am left alone,
And days are sad.
Lord Jesus, thou will bear my load
Along this steep and dreary road,
And make me glad.

So tired! My heart is low;
Shadows of coming woe
Around me fall;
And memories of sins long wept,
And hopes denied that long have slept,
Arise and call.

So tired! Yet I would work
For thee! Lord, hast thou work
Even for me?
Small things, which others, hurrying on
In thy blest service, swift and strong,
Might never see?

So tired! Yet I might reach
A flower to cheer and teach
Some sadder heart;
Or for parched lips perhaps might bring
One cup of water from the spring
Ere I depart.

So tired! Yet it were sweet
Some faltering, tender feet
To help and guide—
Thy little ones whose steps are slow;
I should not weary them, I know,
Nor roughly chide.

So tired! Lord, thou will come
To take me to my home,
So long desired;
Only thy grace and mercy send,
That I may serve thee to the end,
Though I am tired.

Voices of Comfort.

Fraternity.

MR. EDITOR: I have just read the article on fraternity in the last ADVOCATE, signed by Pierre, and it prompts me to write a few words more. I did not write my former article in the interest of fraternity. I had read in the ADVOCATE some severe reflections on the course of two of our Bishops. Moreover, some of the writers seemed to ignore the position our church has always taken on this subject. I thought a few extracts from the record of our own church might not be amiss, and that some might thereby be checked in their efforts to ridicule our Bishops and other good men, who thought it not wrong to attend a Northern camp meeting. I am not their apologist, but I do protest against everything that looks like a burlesque of our ministers or our holy religion. Therefore I wrote.

If Bro. Pierre is against fraternity he need not level his masked battery against me. Our Bishops prayed in St. Louis, five years ago, for peace. I think the prayer was a good one; if Bro. Pierre thinks not, and wishes to challenge the Bishops, not me. The General Conference at Memphis, in 1870, said: "We earnestly desire true Christian fellowship with every other branch of the Christian church, and especially with our brethren of the several branches of Methodism in this country and Europe." I think that was a good desire. What say you, Bro. Pierre? Then here is a similar desire adopted at the same time, unanimously, I believe, connected with some expressions of regard: "5. That we tender to the Rev. Bishop E. S. Janes and the Rev. W. L. Harris, D. D., * * * our high regards as brethren beloved in the Lord, and express our desire that the day may soon come when proper Christian sentiments and fraternal relations between the two great branches of Northern and Southern Methodism shall be permanently established." That resolution seems to breathe a sentiment different from some of the articles recently published.

Bro. Pierre is mistaken if he supposes that the General Conference at Louisville, last spring, announced a line of conduct different from that set forth at Memphis. The action of both Conferences was against organic union, but in favor of fraternity. The majority report, which was adopted by the General Conference at Louisville, states that every transaction and utterance of our past history pledges us to regard favorably and to meet promptly this initial response to our long-expressed desire." Desire for what? Formal fraternity. Then resolution first of the report authorizes the sending of messengers to bear our Christian salutations to the next ensuing General Conference of the Northern Methodist Church; and the second resolution authorizes the appointment of a commission to meet a similar commission from the Northern Church, "to remove all obstacles to formal fraternity between the two churches," and "to adjust all existing difficulties." Does Bro. Pierre approve the action of the General Conference at Louisville? Then he admits that "every transaction and utterance of our past history pledges us to regard favorably" the initial response of the Northern Church "to our long-expressed desire" for formal fraternity.

We have never fawningly sought to be recognized as a church by other denominations. Methodists in the North and in Europe have until very lately refused all official intercourse with us. We have pursued a straightforward course, preaching the gospel to bond and free alike, as far as we could, seeking recognition from none after our rejection at Pittsburg, but willing all the time to cultivate fraternal feelings with Methodists North and in Europe. If there were no exchange of fraternal courtesies till last May, it was not our fault; at least that has always been my understanding of the matter.

The Northern Methodist Church has changed its policy, and proposes the establishment of fraternal relations. What course shall our people now pursue? Publish bitter articles against the very thing for which our Bishops prayed, and which our last General Conference said has been "our long-expressed desire," and which "every transaction and utterance of our past history pledges us to regard favorably?" Shall we change our policy at this late day? I answer: No. Let our messengers and commissioners be sent to the next ensuing General Conference of the Northern Church in good faith, and let an honest and earnest effort be made to settle all existing difficulties, and remove all obstacles to formal fraternity. If an era of good feeling can be established between the two churches upon terms fair and honorable to both, I say, in the name of our holy Christianity, let it be done. There will be none the less souls converted on earth and none the less joy in the songs of heaven. But if the effort should prove a failure, let the fault not lie at our door, but at the door of the Northern Church, where it has lain since 1848.

But Bro. Pierro is seeking light. He asks a question: "Fraternity—what is it?" and then proceeds to show how fraternity will work. If it is to work as he states, I presume that there will be very little fraternity. Bro. Pierre tells us that in one sense we fraternize with the Baptists and Presbyterians. But he certainly does not believe that he is therefore bound to admit every Presbyterian or Baptist preacher into his pulpit, or even every Southern Methodist preacher, though all be admitted to be good men. The pastor is in a very important sense the sovereign of his pulpit. He must be very careful whom he inducts into his pulpit. He must not consider the preacher only, but also the occasion and the feelings and wishes of his congregation, and, above all, the good and the bad consequences that may follow. In fact he may be under stronger obligation not to admit into his pulpit others, though good and true men of his own church, than he is to admit them; and, if so bound as to his own brethren, he is much more so as to those of other denominations, though in closest amity with his.

The relations between the Colored Methodist Church in America and our own are certainly of a fraternal character, but who supposes that therefore we are bound to admit their preachers into our pulpits, or they to admit ours into theirs? No, Bro. Pierre; pulpit etiquette is one thing, and fraternity between organized churches is another thing.

I think that peace and fraternity between the two churches cannot well result in harm. I think so because our Bishops, and the able committees of the General Conference both at Memphis and Louisville, who had something to say on this subject, agree that we have always been in favor of fraternity upon a proper basis; and no one need fear that it will be established upon an improper basis. Our Bishops will appoint good and true men to represent us. Our rights and honor will be committed into safe hands, and may God lead them to wise conclusions.

H. F. JOHNSON.

BROOKHAVEN, Mississippi.

Faith.

A man's religious capabilities seem to depend, in some way, upon his natural endowments and predilections. Not that all may not be religious, but that all are not capable of that highest degree of religious experience alike. In a word, all men cannot be Abrahams, Moses and Pauls. The one requisite to spiritual elevation is faith; not the faith that stops at mere assent of truth, or sort of negative faith, but a faith that is a vital and governing principle—a faith whose distinctive operation is seen and felt. The vast multitude of Christians are representatives of a low order of religious faith, while only a few enjoy its highest standard; just as the multitude are only moderately intelligent, while the few are geniuses. The rich are not always intellectual geniuses, nor are the intelligent and influential Christians always the subjects of the greatest faith. Intelligence is not necessarily a condition of strong faith; yet great intelligence and great faith are sometimes associated in the same individual.

Let me define this ideal faith. "According to your faith, so be it unto you." I think this means about as if he had said: According to your ideal, so be it unto you. There is nothing truer than that a man never goes beyond his own ideal. This is the goal, the destiny, of his character. It does not range high or low accordingly and uniformly with the grade of his intellectuality, but in accordance with his entire moral capability, comprising force of will, strong moral sensibilities and a well-balanced judgment. I cannot explain my idea with any of the terms either of theology or psychology. I mean that the strong faith is that which is capable of pushing itself nearly to its ideal and holding itself there, being transformed "into the same image." It has these two distinguishing marks: it gains the highest point and then maintains it; it "believes" God, and "walks" with him. Science may come in mountain torrents and sweeping winds, carrying away the foundations of those who build upon the sand of intellectual processes only; but this kind of faith will stand, because it is on a rock. There is no bigotry in this claim, nor the mere extravagance of imagination. "We testify what we know." Although with meekness, yet I say it with the profoundest conviction, there is a faith which, seeing not, yet believes, and believes not less for the not seeing. Its cognitions are truer, if possible, than those of the purest reason. It would doubt self-consciousness sooner than the personality of the divine Being. It would doubt the present existence sooner than the future. No persecution damps its ardor; no failure destroys its confidence. It is not blind fanaticism, because "it doth not behave unseemly." It may not always stand the test of an artificial standard of taste, but it never offends true modesty or refined morality. On the other hand, while it most sublimely honors God, it conserves in the best way all true interests of society. It is a child of God, and cannot unmake his own handiwork.

This kind of faith I have seen only in a few individuals. The individual who steadily possesses it is a marvel to the world. There is a strange atmosphere about his person, and his words and acts are read with wonder. The individual possessor is inexpressibly contented—not satiated; he is ever pushing on, desiring increase. He is not seriously affected by worldly troubles; he is above them. Severer darts only drive him nearer the feet of him on whom he depends, and that is an occasion of consolation, so that he can "rejoice always," and "glory in his infirmities."

This is faith that thus exalts character and life. Nothing else can do it. When men are sinking so low down in the caverns of sensuality and sorrow, of skepticism and doubt, so as only now and then to see a gleam of heavenly light, is it not time they were heeding the Master's rebuke: "O ye of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?" And is it not proper that amidst these troublous times we should all commence to pray more: "Lord, increase our faith?"

This faith, no doubt, is most strongly realized in the hour of death. If there is any foundation to rest hope upon then, faith kindles its brightest flame. The darker the valley the stronger must be the light. The fiercer the struggle with the flesh the stronger must he the spirit. And this is the way it happens. The man who trembled at small crosses before, now feels master of the situation. It is not much trouble to die to the faithful. In a better sense than he ever said it before, he can now say: "This is our victory, even our faith." "O death! where is thy sting? O grave! where is thy victory?" This was remarkably illustrated in the last moments of the late Dr. Eddy, an account of whose death was contained in the ADVOCATE the other day. His faith did not commence doing its triumphant work until persuaded by his physician that he was soon to die. Loth to believe it, he yet calmly began the preparation. What a heritage to all Christian people are his calm words of confidence in Christ, and his exultant hopes of heaven! "The chamber where the good man meets his fate is privileged beyond the common walks of life."

M.

Doubt.

"O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?" It was the eve of night. All along through the weary dark watches had the storm king trod the bosom of beautiful Gennessaret, tossing to and fro from billow to billow the frail boat filled with the disciples. Sleepless and weary and wet, they had struggled on. Now Jesus comes, as if seeking his poor bestormed children. He treads the rolling billow as easily and royally as any monarch does the marble pavement of his palace:

"He plants his footsteps in the sea,
And rides upon the storm."

The poor superstitious disciples thought he was some ghoul of the storm; but his sweet familiar voice soon dispelled all fear as it came floating on a storm-wing: "It is I; be not afraid." Peter was almost beside himself, and thought he would try the same wonderful feat. Jesus told him to come; so he leaped overboard and trod the billow as royally as his Master until he doubted; then he had to call on Jesus for help. The Master rescued him, and then reproached him with: "O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?"

O man of God, treading the white, foam-capped billows on the sea of Time, "wherefore dost thou doubt?" It is a dark, dark, dark state to be in. So far as enjoyment on earth is concerned, I would rather be an atheist, and say there is no God, no soul, no hereafter, than to "be hair-hung," for all life, between the two theories, without the wretched boon of being "breeze-shaken."

But Peter's doubt was of another character. He had head-faith sufficient, but wanted heart-faith—or trust, as it is often called—to enable him to walk that billowy sea. He failed to trust God as he should. So it is with many in the church to-day. They have theoretic or head-faith—are very orthodox—but sadly want soul-faith, that great sine qua non of Christianity.

O man or woman of God, "wherefore dost thou doubt?" What, doubt a God!—not an angel, not an archangel, not the loftiest hierarch angelic who sweeps the dome of glory with his wings; but God, who on a storm-chariot, with stars for its wheels, sweeps the depths of abysmal space! How dare we doubt such a Being of power, and whose holiness dazzles the gaze of angelhood, and transcends the reach of six-winged seraphs? How can we doubt such a God, whose great melting heart, overflowing the home of the sinless, pours its warm floods of love on our undeserving race of rebels? The problem of the world's redemption, which engaged the profoundest research of the sages of the ekles, and which was only solved by the manifestation of a love so sublime that there is not star-glory enough to write it on the scroll of the heavens, nor music enough of the spheres or of the angels to sound it—the development of this stupendous scheme itself should be sufficient to banish every spot of the darkness of doubt as far from every God-loving soul as is night from the throne-lit clime of glory. How can we doubt such a Being, so beneficent, so fatherly, so loving? On every breath a living, glowing benediction is borne; on the fleet wheels of every moment comes some God-given boon, richer than Ophir's gold; in every Christian heart sits a white-robed angel of joy, ringing the Christmas bells of an eternal holiday. A thousand precious promises of solace in trouble, of aid in temptation, of reward for labor, and of final conquest, gleam from the best firmament of revealed truth, a thousand-fold brighter than the gems of night. The sun may sink to the west no more, the wheels of Time may roll backward, all men prove to be liars, yea, the foundations of the universe may be upturned to its turrets; but God's promises will never fail.

God is the only really substantial thing in the whole range of existence—the only independent and self-existent Being in the universe. If he, the only foundation of all things material and immaterial, fails, the whole universe crumbles in ruin—into a chaos more chaotic than formless world-matter ever knew. To doubt God is folly, madness. It is taking from the immortal soul the only rock on which it can rest. It is wrecking the stately fabric of human enjoyment on a strand more dreary than the mythic shades of Pluto.

If we will keep humble and prayerful we will never doubt.

Canton High School.

This institution, established last October, in the city of Canton, Mississippi, has entered upon its career under auspices which cannot but be gratifying to the friends of education everywhere.

It comprises both male and female departments—in separate buildings—under the superintendence of Prof. H. S. Kennedy, A. M., whose thorough scholarship in every department of learning, ancient and modern, and whose large experience as a professional teacher eminently qualify him for the position which he holds.

Prof. Kennedy has associated with him a corps of able assistants in the English and ornamental departments.

Prof. T. P. Walker has charge of the English department, and is unsurpassed, we think, in the art of instruction.

Mrs. Anna Webster is associated with the principal in the charge of the female department. She is an experienced, enthusiastic and successful teacher, and of great value to the school.

Miss Ella Montgomery has charge of the musical department, which bids fair to become a prominent feature in the school.

In both departments the inductive method of teaching is employed—the pupil is taught both to think and how to think.

In addition to the usual facilities for education, the pupils have the advantage of a large and well-selected chemical and philosophical apparatus.

Boarding can be secured at most reasonable rates.

Although under the supervision of the Methodist Church, and strict attention is given to the moral as well as the intellectual training of the pupils, yet denominationalism has no place in the school as an element of education.

In a word, considering all the advantages offered by this institution—the healthiness of the location, the high moral and intellectual tone of the society of Canton, its accessibility, etc.—we feel confident it will soon rank with the foremost institutions of learning in the South, and we hesitate not to commend it most cordially to the patronage of all who desire to give their children a finished education.

A WORD AT THE DOOR.—The minister was the last person to go out of the church. As he stood in the porch a young man passed, walking slowly down the street. He looked sick, his face was pale and his whole appearance desponding. The minister spoke a few kind words of greeting, then went his way, hardly stopping to notice the bright and grateful expression that lit up the stranger's face.

A few weeks after the minister was called to visit a sick-chamber outside his parish.

"I dare say you do not know me," said the sick man, stretching out his hand to the minister, as the latter entered the room. "But I remember you. You once spoke a few kind words to me at your church-door."

The minister hardly remembered it, but he sat down beside the sick man with a heart full of sympathy.

"You see, sir, a dying man; at least I feel that this is my last sickness," said the young man; "but I cannot die so."

Life was almost over, a short, fast life, abruptly closing without any preparation for life's great end; no present comfort, no future hope—the light of earth fading into blackness. O for some friend to help him in these dark hours! Who? He had no pastor, no Christian friend, no helper in his sore need. His boon companions could do little for him now; their laughter and gayety were a loathing to his poor, weary heart. But the kind words of the minister had been remembered, and he sent for him to point him the way to heaven.

One may preach by the wayside as well as from the pulpit, and more souls might be won to Christ were kind words oftener spoken at the door.—Youth's Companion.

CHRIST ALL IN ALL.—Remember it is not thy hold of Christ that saves thee; it is Christ. It is not thy joy in Christ that saves thee; it is not thy faith in Christ, though that is the instrument; it is Christ's blood and merit. Therefore look not so much on thy hand, with which thou art grasping Christ, as to Christ; look not to thy hope, but to Jesus, the author and finisher of thy faith. We shall never find happiness by looking at our prayers, our doings or our feelings; it is what Jesus is, and not what we are that gives rest to our souls. If we would at once overcome satan, and have peace with God, it would be by "looking unto Jesus." Let not thy hopes or fears come between thee and Jesus; follow hard after him, and he will never fail thee.

"WOMEN," says an experienced editor, "are the best subscribers in the world to newspapers, magazines, etc. We have been an editor for forty years and never lost a dollar by female subscribers. They seem to make it a point of conscientious duty to pay the preacher and the printer—two classes of the community that suffer more by bad pay and no pay at all than all the rest put together."

CONVEY thy love to thy friend as an arrow to the mark, to stick there, not as a ball against the wall, to rebound back to you. That friendship will not continue to the end that is begun for an end.—Enchiridion.

Obituaries.

IN MEMORIAM.

DEPARTED THIS LIFE, on the fourth of October, 1873, of yellow fever, at the residence of his sister, Pamelia C. O'Beirne, near Brownsville, Red River parish, Louisiana, JOHN D. BROWN, aged twenty-eight years, one month and three days.

He went to bed with a prayer; that night his mind wandered and his prayer ended. Next morning he breathed his last. He was a true, noble man, a kind and devoted relative, and a sincere friend. Freed from long and excessive suffering, recalled by his God, he has winged his way to heavenly realms, there to enjoy eternal bliss. Have you not seen the fragile flower bloom, fade and perish in an hour? So his young life was quickly passed.

NANNIE A. ADLE.

LITTLE JOSIE BIRT, daughter of S. B. and A. E. McCutchen, of Shreveport, Louisiana, joined the angel band on Wednesday night, October 21, 1874. Like the crystal dew of morning, she "sparkled, was exhaled and went to heaven." Her stay on earth was just three years, eleven months and two days. Josie was a child of peculiar sweetness and sprightliness. She loved to sing and pray, and recite passages of Scripture. The night she was taken sick she sung sweetly her favorite song: "O come, angel band, come and around me stand: O bear me away on your snowy wings to my immortal home!" And soon the angels did come and take to their company this lovely child,

"Whose all of life, a rosy ray,
Blushed into dawn and passed away."

PASTOR.

SHREVEPORT, Nov. 4, 1874.

MRS. AMANDA E. SMITH, daughter of Jane and James E. Patillo, was born in Alabama, March 4, 1849; was married to Willis Smith, January 7, 1869; and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in the year 1863, and was ever after a true and consistent member of the church below till called to the church above, at seven o'clock on the evening of the nineteenth of October, 1874. She was a woman of firm character, strong faith, earnest devotion, fervent prayer, genial heart and happy spirit. As a wife she was industrious and economical, loving and trusting; as a neighbor, prompt and just; as a mother, discreet and kind, impressing her children in the fear of the Lord. Her last suffering continued but a short time—a few hours—during which time she, was the same pure-minded, trusting child of God. On the evening before she died she seemed to be fully cognizant of the near approach of death, and exclaimed: "I must die!"

VERNON, Jackson Parish, La.

RUFUS WARRELL was born in Wayne county, North Carolina, July 25, 1816. In 1812 he removed to Kemper county, Mississippi; thence in 1859 to Franklin parish, Louisiana; thence in 1864 to Ouachita parish; and thence in 1869 to Lincoln parish, where, at his own residence, he died July 21, 1874.

Bro. Warrell was an earnest and useful Christian. He recognized his obligation to a life of self-denial and toil, and was found diligent in his Master's business. If a church was to be organized he was foremost in initiating the movement. If a house of worship was needed he was tardy or stinted in neither money nor effort. Two monuments of his faithfulness are left behind—one in Franklin and the other in Ouachita parish. He walked in wisdom toward them that are without. His home, his heart and his means were ever accessible to a Methodist preacher. Love and charity defined his attitude to the world; sympathy and tenderness to his own household. On his death-bed a retrospect of over ten years' married life was sustained by the recollection of a single cross word to his wife. He was conscious in his last moments, and met death tranquilly, confidently. No ecstasy, no shuddering, no appalling fear, no delirious joy, but, like the child of a king, from the palace yard to the palace threshold he went in at nightfall.

C. F. E.

DEPARTED THIS LIFE, October 20, 1874, FLORENCE WALL, wife of A. B. Crowder, Esq., in the twenty-fourth year of her age.

While yet an infant, death deprived her of a mother's love and care; but the tender watchfulness of a devoted father guided her infant footsteps in the paths of virtue, and the exalted Christian character of the woman was but the natural development of the truth and purity of the child.

Eminently "crowned with woman's highest virtue—modesty"—her life was devoted to the cheerful performance of those sacred duties which devolve upon a wife and mother. And when her sorrows came—when bereft of her two lovely children—those who knew her best feared that the cords of life, which seemed so frail within her, would be broken by the heavy weight of woe; but her Christian heart was strong. She meekly bowed her head and said: "Thy will, not mine, be done."

To the bereaved family no words of comfort can be said. "The God who giveth and who taketh away," in his own good time will be the comforter. There are absent friends who knew of her declining health, and who hoped that the coming of each varying season would bring back the bloom to her faded cheek. We must tell them she is with us no more. She has gone while the earth is still clothed in "living green," and smiling in the sunshine that she loved. Ere the cold blasts of winter could shiver her frail form she had folded her hands for "a little more sleep," and she slept upon the bosom of her Savior.

Florence, your life was brief, your strength soon gone, but you fulfilled a sacred mission. Like the flower that still flings its fragrance upon the air while its petals fall withered and blighted upon the ground, was the heart that still was filled with cheerfulness, truth and love while its life-blood was swiftly ebbing away; and the memory of the gentle Florence, who knew herself daily growing weaker, with naught of repining, who "suffered unto death" with naught of impatience, will give strength to many who are less strong, and comfort to hearts that else might grow faint.

A FRIEND.

MR. EDITOR: It becomes my painful yet pleasing task to write something in reference to the life and death of our mutual friend and sister dearly beloved, Mrs. EMMA J. ALEXANDER, daughter of Richard and Louisa Jeffers. She was born in Madison parish, La., in 1854; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in August, 1872, in Carroll parish, Louisiana; and was married to Rev. William F. Alexander February 17, 1873.

Sister Alexander was the purest of the pure, but so modest and so sensitive that she never made a profession of high attainments in Christianity. Her consciousness of her own unworthiness was most acute. One who knew her well said: "I never knew one so guileless. Her life was the life of the Christian." She lived the love of the Savior, and taught others by that life. Hers was a life of prayer, a life of trusting in God through our Lord Jesus Christ. She would not only join her husband in family devotion, but would at times, when called upon, lead the worship. The value, the real help of such a wife can be known only by those who have lost such.

Her sickness was not thought to be dangerous until reason was giving way; but she had lucid moments. On the evening before her death her husband said to her, in the presence of some Christian ladies: "These are all the sweet friends of Jesus." She replied: "Yes; we will just trust in Jesus! Just trust in Jesus?" When her husband asked her: "Is Jesus dear to you?" she answered: "That is what I always call him—my dear Savior." When her tongue was almost palsied in death her husband and friends understood her to say: "I am so happy! Oh, I am so happy!" How do we know but that the joys of the upper world were being realized by her—the soul sinking into the arms of the blessed Master.

She was a devoted wife and a fond mother. Her love for her husband, child and Jesus was too strong for the grim monster—death. She would remember them all in the midst of his terrors. Jesus has taken the darling wife from a broken-hearted husband and motherless boy; but heaven, that beautiful world above, is made richer and still more attractive to them, and to her mother and sisters, brothers, and a host of warm, earnest friends. Her husband, who is now wounded and broken in spirit, is well known to you, Bro. Parker, and many members of your Conference, and most earnestly asks an interest in your prayers. Pray for him and the dear little child.

Yours truly,

R. W. THOMPSON.

IGLESIAS, TEXAS, Oct. 27, 1874.

ALEXANDER E. MARSH was born in Moldie, June 7, 1846, and died at his residence October 18, at half-past twelve o'clock, after a long and very painful illness. He was raised religiously, and joined the Franklin Street church on profession of faith September 15, 1867. Bro. Marsh was a quiet, unostentatious man, but very firm and decided in all his principles. In the relations and business of life he was free from reproach on the one hand, and on the other not without such social qualities as drew and attached hearts to him in the bonds of true and abiding friendship. He was kind in both word and action. His spirit was cheerful, though not sanguine. These traits, lying at the basis of his natural character, were refined by the grace of God operating in his heart, and made him a brother beloved in the church. All who knew him esteemed and trusted him.

His Christian character was marked by humility, punctuality and fidelity. He loved the class meeting, the prayer meeting, the public ministry of the word and the Sunday school with a genuine affection. For years he was a teacher in the Sunday school, and in his place on all occasions was ready to do what he could to promote its prosperity. Indeed, after his health was badly impaired, he was with his class frequently when his brethren thought he should have remained in his room at home, his zeal being greater than his physical strength could endure.

On Sunday, while the church congregated in the house of God on earth, his spirit was released from its corruptible tenement, and went up to join the congregation in heaven, and for the first time gazed upon the glorified form of the risen Redeemer, and praised him perfectly.

In view of the usefulness and excellency of his character the following resolutions are offered:

Resolved, That in the death of Bro. A. E. Marsh the Franklin Street Sunday school has lost a pious, laborious teacher.

Resolved, While we mourn in this bereavement, yet we feel the change has been to him a happy one—one from a life of intense pain to a life of heavenly and eternal joy and rest.

Resolved, That we extend to the family of the deceased our sincere sympathies, and pray that they may so follow Christ as to meet the departed in the kingdom of heaven.

Resolved, That these resolutions be put upon the journal of the Sunday school, and a copy of them sent to the family.

The above, Mr. Editor, was all passed by our Sunday school in memory of the worth of this good young man. God has sorely afflicted us by death this year. Oh! that we all may learn the lessons intended to be taught, and live so as to meet these brothers and sisters gone before in the better land.

Yours, etc., J. W. RUSH.

GRATITUDE is something more than prayer. He who does nothing but always pray is and appears ever unsatisfied.—Heubner.

"STEPPING OUT."

Sweet words of sweetest thought,
Assurance dearly bought,
Driving away all doubt,
Breaking the bitter cup!
"Thank God that stepping out
Is always stepping up!"

We love, and think to be Lovers eternally;
Death on her baneful route
Drops poison in the cup;
"Thank God that stepping out
Is always stepping up!"

We weep as widows weep
Who mournful watches keep
The graves of love about;
(Our tears o'erflow the cup;
"Thank God that stepping out
Is always stepping up!"

Thank God that love was given
To lead from earth to heaven;—
To dissipate all doubt,
And to sweet the cup!
"Thank God that stepping out
Is always stepping up!"

Noted Conversationalists.

A gentleman who visited DeQuincy in 1854 thus records his impressions of him after a half hour's conversation: "We have listened to Sir William Hamilton at his own fireside; to Carlyle, walking in the parks of London; to Lamartine, in the midst of a favored few at his own house, and to many others; but never have we heard such sweet music of eloquent speech as then flowed from DeQuincy's tongue. Strange light beamed from that grief-worn face, and for a little while that weak body, so long fed upon by pain, seemed to be clothed with supernatural youth."

Eloquent as DeQuincy was, his conversational powers were at their full height only when he was under the influence of his favorite drug. The best time to hear the lion roar was at four or five o'clock in the morning; then, when recovering from the stupor in which the opium had plunged him, his tongue seemed touched with an eloquence almost divine. It is a curious fact that, though he was the soul of courtesy, he never for a moment thought of adapting his language to the understanding of his listener. The most illiterate porter, housemaid, or even prowling beggar, he would address, on the most trivial themes, with as much pomp of rhetoric, in language as precise and measured, and abounding in as many "long-tailed words in osity and ation," as that in which he would have addressed an Oxford professor on a vexed point of metaphysics, or a person on a classical emendation. Mrs. Gordon, in her "Life of Prof. Wilson," has given a specimen of the opium-eater. Wishing his meat cut with the grain, he would say: "Owing to dyspepsia affecting my system, and the possibility of any additional derangement of the stomach taking place, consequences incalculably distressing would arise; so much so, indeed, as to increase nervous irritation and prevent me from attending to matters of overwhelming importance—if you do not remember to cut the mutton in a diagonal rather than a longitudinal form." No wonder that the cook, a simple Scotch woman, stood aghast, exclaiming: "Weel, I never heard the like o' that in a' my days; the body has an awfu' sicht o' words. Mr. DeQuinshey would make a grand preacher, though I'm thinking a hantle o' the folk wadna ken what he was driving at."

Of the great living conversers, Carlyle stands in the front rank, if one can be called such who rarely converses, but almost always harangues. His talk, as commonly reported, is like Dr. Johnson's laugh, which was "a kind of good-humored growl." According to Margaret Fuller, he allows no one else a chance, but bears down all opposition, not only by his wit and onset of words, resistless in their sharpness as so many bayonets, but by actual physical superiority, raising his voice and rushing on his opponent with a torrent of sound.

To make a good talker, genius and learning, even wit and eloquence, are insufficient; to these, in all or in part, must be added in some degree the talents of active life.

The character has as much to do with colloquial power as has the intellect, the temperament, feelings and animal spirits, even more perhaps than the mental gifts.

Napoleon said things which tell in history like his battles. Luther's "Table Talk" glows with the fire that burnt the Pope's bull.

Cæsar, Cicero, Themistocles, Lord Bacon, Seldon, Talleyrand; and in our own country Aaron Burr, Jefferson, Webster and Choate, were all more or less men of action. Sir Walter Scott tells us that at a great dinner party he thought the lawyers beat the bishops as talkers, and the bishops the wits. Nearly all great orators have been fine talkers. Lord Chatham, who could electrify the House of Lords by pronouncing the word "sugar," but who in private was but commonplace, was an exception. But the conversation of Pitt and Fox was brilliant and fascinating; that of Burke, rambling but splendid; rich and instructive beyond description. The latter was the only man in the famous "Literary Club" who could cope with Johnson.

As the old coach roads have given way to railways, so conversation has given way to the press. Men wreak their thoughts upon expression—not in talk, but in "copy." Instead of listening to literary lions, they prefer to crackle the Tribune or the Times. Newspapers, magazines, reviews, suck up the intellectual elements of our life, like so many electrical machines gathering electricity from the atmosphere into themselves. Themes are pre-empted by the press, and their freshness and interest exhausted before friends have encircled "the mahogany" in the evening. Professional litterateurs especially are becoming less and less inclined to postprandial eloquence, and "lay out" far less than they once did for conversation. They have too keen an eye for the value of their stock in trade, not to be niggard of their ideas in social intercourse, and to hoard them up for reproduction at some auspicious time in a profit-yielding form.

Not merely long and elaborate performances, but even puns and conundrums, are now marketable commodities. The pettiest jokelet has a cash value, and there is no anecdote so trifling, no scrap of knowledge so insignificant, no felicitous expression of an old truth, or dim suggestion of a new one, which may not be converted into a dime or a dollar by the literary miser who makes the acquaintance of the periodicals.

In short, the entire tendency of things in these latter days of the nineteenth century is to contract conversation within such narrow limits that a fear has been expressed lest some further development of the electric telegraph should reduce us to a society of mutes or to a sort of insects, communicating by ingenious antennæ of our own invention.—(Matthews' "The Great Conversers.")

Lay Representation in the British Conference.

The debate on lay delegation in the British Wesleyan Conference came up incidentally during the discussion of the scheme reported by the committee on the constitution of the committee of review. This scheme proposed a consolidation of the several committees, to consist of (a) the president, secretary and assistant secretaries of the Conference; (b,) the ex-presidents; (c,) the lay treasurers of the general connectional funds; (d,) the chairmen and financial secretaries of districts, with one other minister in districts containing less than forty-five ministers, and two in districts containing more: (e,) lay representatives of the several districts, to be chosen exclusively by the lay members of the several district meetings, in the proportion of one representative for every five thousand members or fractional excess thereover, with six additional members from the district in which the Conference is held, and the four adjacent districts, each; (f,) two ministerial officials of the six departments of Conference work to be supervised by the committee, and an equal number of laymen, with two other ministers and two other laymen—all to be selected by and from the committees of these departments; (g,) the ministerial treasurer and secretary and one lay member of the auxiliary fund committee. According to this schedule the committee would consist of one hundred and fifty-five ministers, and one hundred and fifty-two laymen. A motion was made to refer the report to the district meetings in May. Dr. Osborn wanted it to be referred to the ministerial district meetings, not to the mixed district committees. He said:

"The proposal before them was the introduction of an entirely new principle into their economy, and one which their fathers deemed it their duty steadfastly to resist and discourage—the principle, namely, of direct representation in proportion to numbers, rather than the principle of virtual representation in proportion to the interest taken in the various departments of their connectional work. Before such a principle was adopted the most ample time must be given for consideration. If that principle were admitted their whole economy would be changed. If they were to construct their district committees and committees of review on that principle they must construct the Conference on the same principle. Some might be prepared for that, but he did not think the Conference was.

Mr. H. W. Williams moved as an amendment that the subject be remitted to the district meetings in May, to be considered when both laymen and ministers were present. They would, he held, be setting aside an important principle if they took up this subject when the ministers only were present. Dr. Rigg and Mr. Arthur supported the motion of Mr. Williams. Mr. Bedford would confine the consideration of the subject to the ministerial meetings. Dr. Osborn suggested that the question really was: Would they turn the Methodist Connection into the Methodist New Connection? That question was not directly raised, but, he submitted, there were currents at work all tending in that direction. He wanted the Conference to pause before committing itself to a step which could never be retraced, and which, if taken, would change the whole basis of Methodist institutions by introducing the principle of direct representation in proportion to numbers.

It was finally determined to refer the scheme to a select Conference committee, who should report to the district meetings when the lay members are present; that they return their minutes thereon to the committee; and that a meeting of the committee be held in July, with the chairman of the district and the lay members elect of the home mission committee, and that the report of that united committee be laid before the next Conference.

The debate on lay delegation direct arose on the introduction of memorials on the subject. They came from the Bristol, Channel Islands and Edinburg districts, from forty-one quarterly meetings, the French and Irish Conferences. A motion was made to refer them to a select committee. Dr. Rigg thought the Conference might agree with perfect calmness and contentment to look at the question which had been under consideration, whether as respected their own body and connection, or any other Methodist Conference or connection. Whatever other bodies might desire to have in the way of lay representation, this English connection had long virtually possessed. It seemed to be imagined by some that the introduction of laymen into the Conference would introduce a magical and beneficial revolution into all their affairs; that there would be some wonderful virtue simply in doubling the Conference by the annexation of as many more laymen as there were already ministers present. When Bishop Harris, the other evening, was describing the introduction of lay representation into the General Conference of the United States, he was greeted with applause, the enthusiasm of which was perhaps partly due to some such feeling as this. Favorable as he (Dr. Rigg) was himself to the consideration of the question of lay delegation in a candid spirit, he did not share these views. There was no form of Methodism, he believed, in the world in which lay representation had been really so thoroughly provided for as in this connection. Lay representation of the most effective kind pervaded the whole of their system, up to the threshold of the Conference itself. Nor could the Conference of itself, by its own power, determine any question affecting the societies of Methodism. There was no decision affecting the rights and interests of the people of Methodism which could at the same time be initiated and conducted by the Conference. As to the United States, there lay delegation had been recently introduced into the quadrennial General Conference, but laymen were not found in the Annual Conference. In regard to lay representation, English Methodism had been far and long in advance of the United States. While he said this, however, he was convinced that the whole subject needed to be carefully and dispassionately looked at.

Mr. Hoeart said, in behalf of the French Conference, that they were placed at great disadvantage in France among the other churches of that country. They were the smallest of those churches, and all the others admitted laymen to their legislative assemblies. Their laymen felt this very strongly. He could not conceal the fact that there was a degree of impatience among them because the question was not solved.

The question was remitted to the committee already appointed upon the constitution of the committee of review.—Methodist.

Contributions.

What is the law of Christ's kingdom in relation to contributions for pious and charitable objects? There is such a law, though unhappily many seem ignorant of it. Certainly he does not comply with it who, having the ability, contributes nothing; neither does he who contributes from no sense of duty, from no principle, but merely as caprice or a regard to appearances may dictate.

"What! know ye not ye are not your own? for ye are bought with a price." "Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich." These affecting words reveal both our obligation and the motive to enforce it. Surely men who are ransomed beings should regard themselves as stewards. "The silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith the Lord of hosts." He has seen fit to intrust his property to us; can we rightly withhold it from him when the wants of his church, the extension of his kingdom, the care of his poor, ask it at our hands?

"Concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye: upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come."

The law of Christ clearly requires of all who would be Christians, weekly systematic almsgiving; each individual is required to give in proportion to his ability—"as God hath prospered him;" and this giving must be for the love of him who, though he was rich, for our sakes became poor. If one who calls himself a Christian, unmoved by the love of Christ, disregards his law and gives nothing, or nothing in proportion to his ability, does the penalty immediately follow? It does not. Here on earth the Savior mercifully bears with the unfaithful and the sinful. The unworthy member is not at once cut off from the fellowship and privileges of the church. The barren fig-tree is suffered to remain and cumber the ground. The barren, selfish professor of Christ's religion is permitted still to enjoy "the means of grace," and, if he can, "the hope of glory." He who maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, in mercy bestows, year after year, the blessings of his providence and grace on those who ungratefully make him no return.

But the penalty! Let it not be forgotten that the Savior regards the refusal to give to his church and his poor as the refusal to give to himself. He has solemnly assured us in his holy gospel that the day is coming when, from "the throne of his glory," he will say to the delinquents: "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it not to me."

PHYSIOLOGY OF INTEMPERANCE.—Plato rebuked a man for playing at dice, who answered that he was playing only for a trifle. But, said Pluto, is the habit a trifle? Of all habits, none are so controlling as indulgence in strong drink. The appetite is constantly increasing, while moral energy is becoming weaker. In the ordinary course there is, therefore, little hope of reform, and it is rare to see complete recuperation; loss of fortune, pains of disease, misery of his family, do not reclaim the confirmed inebriate. The fear of such results may check, in some degree, the moderate drinker, but in many cases even this is only for a time. His mind becomes clouded, his moral perception impaired, and while he may be conscious of his weakened condition and its cause, still he will seek temporary strength in the fatal expedient of more frequent stimulant.—A. H. Dana, in Sanitarian.

A WHILE AGO a farmer in Virginia lost his wife, and out of love for her memory called his estate "Glenmary." A neighbor having met with the same affliction, and equally desirous of keeping before him the image of his dear departed, followed his example, and his farm is known by the name of "Glenbetsy."

"DEAR ME, how fluidly he talks," said Mrs. Partington recently, at a temperance meeting. "I am always rejoiced when he mounts the nostrils, for his eloquence warms every cartridge in my body."

A Notable School.

"The Admission Register of the Manchester School" is not a very attractive title, but, if we may judge from notices in the English literary journals, the book of which it is the name is one of rare interest. The school was founded in 1515, and bears on its rolls the names of a large number of distinguished men as alumni. A specimen of the quality of its students appears in the names of the grammar school scholars who figured in a performance of Addison's tragedy of Cato in 1759. They were: "Arden, Jr., afterward Baron Alvanley, lord chief justice of the Common Pleas; Heap, afterward vice principal of Brasenose College, Oxford; Travis, who became Archdeacon of Richmond, and Gibbon's most dangerous critic; Arden, Sr., who was high sheriff of Cheshire in 1790; Arnald, who was senior wrangler in 1766, D. D., and one of the teachers of George the Fourth; G. Bower, afterward Archdeacon of Richmond; and F. Bower, who became recorder of Chester." Three others were less famous. Among other scholars noticed in the volume are: "Sir Joseph Yates ('that great lawyer, that honest man,' as Junius styled him;) the Rev. John Watson, the well-known Yorkshire antiquary; Reginald Heber, the father of the Bishop; Dr. Thomas Percival, whose claims as an elegant writer and moralist are not sufficiently appreciated in our own day; John, Lord Crewe; Josh Bates, of musical fame; Cyril Jackson, the 'great' dean, who declined a bishopric; and his brother William, who accepted one; Sir Thomas Egerton, the first Lord Grey de Wilton; Colonel Stanley, one of the early race of bibliomaniacs, who participated in the Roxburg revels, and whose choice library, including many rare Italian and Spanish books, brought what was then thought an enormous price; General Seddon, whose military talents gained him distinction in India, Russia, Egypt and Ireland; John Drinkwater, whose account of the siege of Gibraltar will long remain an English classic;" John Haddon Hinley, an Orientalist scholar; "Sir R. H. Leigh, a good classical scholar, who rebuilt Hindley Hall from his own designs, and forgot to include a staircase;" "Bishop Allen, who, although nearly destitute of literary ambition, wrote a pamphlet which led to an increased Episcopal income of £1,500 a year;" William Ford, the learned book-seller; Dr. Thomas Falconer, of classical fame; Sir John Williams, one of the advocates for Queen Caroline in her famous trial; "Archdeacon Glover, a clever, ambitious churchman, who wrote some good verses on Chantrey's famous woodcocks at Holkham:

"'Though fall'n by Chantrey's hand, we yet survive;
His gun may kill, his chisel makes alive.'"

And, greatest of all, Thomas DeQuincey.

The book contains many anecdotes. "A number of queer stories are told of the Rev. Joshua Brookes, whose eccentricities are among the traditional Joe Millers of Manchester. There is one told respecting a child brought to him to be baptized, upon whom the godparents wished to confer the Stuart appellation of Charles-Edward. 'Charles Edward,' exclaimed the irritable chaplain; 'I'll have none of your Jacobite names here. George I baptize thee,' etc.

"Mr. Charles Lawson, the most prominent of the past high masters, was a second Busby, and is said on one occasion to have flogged all the school—before breakfast. Thomas Adnutt had exceeded his holiday by a few days. Mr Lawson inquired: 'Blockhead, why did he not come to the time?' The answer was: 'My father died.' 'Blockhead, he could not help that; don't do so again, blockhead.' At the end of another vacation this pupil lost another near relative, and was again behind time. Lawson's comment was: 'Blockhead, he is always having fathers or something die;' and actually inflicted a punishment upon this monopolizer of grief and sorrow.

"There is a good anecdote of Fourness, a sporting parson of a type (let us hope) happily extinct. A Quaker said to him:

"'Were I a hare, thee sho'dst never find me.'

"'Ah, neighbor Broadbrim, where is it? I know every place from the Winn cover to the sand pit.'

"'I would hide in thy study, friend Tallyho! and lie in form beside thy big Bible.'"—Methodist.

SUNDAY RETIREMENT.—Churchgoers, and especially church-workers, should endeavor to secure to themselves some part of every Sunday for quiet devotion at home. Whatever else your Sundays are, never forget that they should not entirely lose the character of Sabbath days—days of rest. No doubt the Christian Sunday, the day of the Lord's resurrection, is not an exact counterpart of the Jewish Sabbath. Yet, apart from all argument as to the obligation of Sunday rest, I am sure that Christian people require a weekly Sabbath for their own health, spiritually as well as bodily; and that some part of the day should be spent, if possible, not merely in religious duties, as distinguished from what are called secular, but in private religion as distinguished from public religious services, class-teaching, visiting the sick and infirm, tract distribution, looking up those who neglect public worship, and other Sunday activities. It is quite possible to spend the Sunday in a whirl of church services and other occupations, all in themselves excellently befitting the Lord's day, but so closely following one another as to make Sunday anything but a day of rest. For your minister it must be so; but then they, having much command over their own time, can choose another day for their Sabbath. For most of you it is not so; your Sabbath must be on Sunday, or not at all.—Advance.

AS PERSONS often eat and drink too much just to dispose of what is on the plate or in the cup, so writers often make their articles too long just to fill up the sheet or fill out the page.

Religious Intelligence.

ANOTHER "expeditionary force" of Catholic priests is to leave Rome soon for this country as missionaries among the freedmen of the South.

THE American Tract Society is to have a semi-centennial jubilee. In May, 1875, it will be half a century old, which event it is proposed to celebrate.

THE West Jersey Baptist Association includes 50 churches, the oldest having been organized in 1690, and the youngest during the present year. The membership is 5,795.

THE Baptist Theological Seminary at Chicago has opened the year with 39 students, and others are expected. The University, in opening for the year, enrolls some 200 names in its several classes, preparatory and collegiate.

THE Moravian missionary churches in Antigua, West Indies, have received during the past century 6,101 adult members and 3,925 boys and girls. They have now 464 communicants, and 884 candidates and baptized children.

THE Khedive of Egypt is searching the mosques and monasteries of his dominions for manuscripts to form a library at Cairo. He is said to have obtained 30 different manuscripts of the Koran, and among them one computed to be 1,150 years old.

THE latest Civilta Cattolica, Rome, denounces the Free Masons in the strongest terms, declaring that Free Masonry is the mother of all liberal sects, and a secret friend of the republican form of government and the Internationals. The Ultramontane sheet advises the government not only to watch but to entirely suppress La Massoneria.

MINISTERIAL salaries in Switzerland are very small. In the Canton of Berne ten years' service entitles the pastor to 2,400 francs annually; eleven to fifteen years, 2,600; sixteen to twenty, 2,800; twenty-one to twenty-five, 3,000; twenty-six and upward, 3,200. Generally there is a parsonage. Pastors of some mountain parishes receive their fuel.

THE German Old Catholic Bishop, Dr. Reinkens, on his confirmation trip through Bavaria and Baden, has been very well received everywhere. The Archbishop of Munchen Freising had protested against this confirmation, as far as his diocese is concerned, but his protestation has not been considered by the King of Bavaria and the Bavarian government.

THE Cumberland and Northern Presbyterians in California have very nearly agreed on a basis of union, setting a good example in this respect to their respective General Assemblies, which last year dropped the subject. If the Pacific synods unite, as they seem to be in a fair way to do, the ice will be broken for the two branches of the church everywhere else.

THE Society of Friends report good success in their missionary labors among the Indians. They find their most powerful obstacles in the superstition of the savages and the bad treatment which they have received from white men, to say nothing of the very bad whisky which has been given them. And "fire-water" with the Indian means mischief, and plenty of it.

A BAPTIST MISSIONARY in India proposes that men and women who go out as missionaries shall enlist for ten years only. He thinks by this plan the missionary service would be more effective, as many missions are ruined by sick men hanging on, and by the retention of men too old for hard service. Furthermore, more persons would be willing to serve as missionaries than on the life plan.

WE HAVE here a hint from Erzeroum, Turkey, August, 1874: "Would that our good sisters, champions of the temperance cause, would make a crusade down to the dock where the celebrated Boston rum is being shipped to these distant parts. Intemperance is making fearful strides through this land; and sad it is that Christian America should reach out to this people the accursed draught."

IT WILL be remembered that the Bishop of Lincoln recently denied the right of Wesleyan ministers to be recognized by the title of reverend by the Church of England. The Queen, the head of the church, has recently settled the question adversely to the Bishop's views by addressing the president of the Wesleyan Conference, Dr. Punshon, as reverend, in a letter in reply to the address of the Conference.

THE English Methodists purpose to push themselves along very much as their brethren on this side have done so successfully, their latest plan being to raise £20,000 or £30,000 a year for ten years as a fund to plant new churches in the rural districts wherever there is a chance for one to grow. The fund opens well with £5,000 each, subscribed by two laymen, Mr. Newburn and Sir Francis Lycett.

THE breach between the Genevans and Pere Hyacinthe seems to be widening, and the Protestant Consistory of Geneva have refused by a large majority to allow him the use of the Madeline church for week-day lectures on the decalogue. The refusal, as explained by the Journal de Genève, was based on his being a priest and Catholic, and on the position he has assumed toward the State and Old Catholic community.

THE London Missionary Society recently dedicated the South Memorial church of Madagascar. It is erected near a precipice where, twenty-five years ago, 18 native Christians were burned and in other ways put to death. According to the latest statistics of this mission it has now in Madagascar 31 English missionaries, 50 native pastors, 3,170 native teachers, 67,000 church members and 280,000 native adherents. It has also 804 stations and 576 schools.

THERE are in New York city 380 Protestant churches, chapels and missions, having an attendance in the aggregate, at the most, of 250,000 people. To the hundreds of thousands not gathered in these churches the city mission is organized to carry the gospel. The New York City Mission and Tract Society is now closing the forty-seventh year of its beneficent operations. From its records it appears that the city missionaries made 85,263 visits among the poor and needy, and held 1,411 prayer meetings and 3,194 preaching services.

THE thirty-ninth annual report of the Board of Missions of the Protestant Episcopal Church shows that the receipts for foreign missions the past year were $100,000, more than $14,000 less than last year. Good results were reported from Dr. Hill's school in Athens, from Africa and from Japan. Bishop Williams sent a letter asking the division of his diocese, consisting of Japan and China, and an appeal was also received from the metropolitan (Augustine) of India, asking the American church to send out missionaries and teachers.

THE Protestant Episcopal Convention, including both the House of delegates and the house of bishops, have adopted the following canon on the subject of divorce: "No minister of this church shall solemnize marriage in any case where there is a divorced wife or husband of either party still living, and when the divorce was claimed for some cause arising out of marriage; but this canon shall not be held to apply to the innocent party in a divorce for the cause of adultery, or to parties once divorced seeking to be united again."

A CORRESPONDENT of the Interior, writing from Neufchatel, Switzerland, September 18, says: "This land of Calvin and Zwingle seems sadly recreant to the noble position it maintained under the strong teachings of those reformers. The Sabbath outwardly is no better observed here than in Catholic Italy. The Sunday worship in country parishes generally consists of one short service at nine o'clock, lasting fifty or sixty minutes. Sometimes there is a Sabbath school, but not always; and this constitutes the whole of the public religious exercises for the week."

THE government of Brazil in its conflict with the Catholic bishops has received a valuable accession in Father Manoel, a Catholic priest, who represents one of the provinces. The question at bottom is whether the Church or the State shall have supreme authority over the citizen. The issue is made by the opposition of the Catholic Church to the Free Masons, of whom the papacy has always been the chief antagonist. Father Manoel declared that the bishops ruled the priests with a rod of iron. "He appealed to the government to put an end to this terrorism; for the Brazilian priests had no protection against episcopal arrogance except from the government. He called on the government to control the use by the bishops of the power of dispossessing priests as the only way to prevent oppression and secure the independence of the clergy. His speech created a profound impression in Parliament, and the government promised to give the matter immediate attention."

AN editorial writer in the New York Advocate, on "Our Work in Africa," laments the small progress we have made in the course of forty years, and points out some of the causes of the failure. He suggests that "one of our bishops visit Africa, to make a thorough investigation of the affairs of the Liberia Conference, and procure data for determining the best method of extending our work into the interior of that vast continent. The visit of Bishop Scott, more than twenty years ago, was confessedly productive of excellent results. Most certainly the church cannot be longer satisfied with the present unsatisfactory condition of her African work. It is equally certain that she is not prepared to inaugurate an additional mission without reliable information, derived from the personal observation of a disinterested investigator, concerning the best points to be occupied."

THE fourteenth session of the English Church Congress met at Brighton, October 6, with sermons at the two principal churches—that at St. Peter's by the Bishop of Ely, and that at St. Nicholas by the Bishop of Salisbury. At the regular opening meeting the Bishop of Chichester presided and delivered the opening address. He hoped the proceedings would be marked by a tone of seriousness, patience and charity. He called attention to some subjects introduced by the committee of arrangements which had not been brought forward at any former Congress—one, for instance, the Old Catholic movement on the Continent—a movement the phenomena of which were of the deepest interest to the English people, as it was the beginning of a reformation in the Roman Catholic Church, not unlike the principles which guided our own. He trusted this Conference would show that it thoroughly sympathized in the struggles of enlightened Romanists to throw off that yoke of bondage which our fathers found intolerable, and which in these latter days had been made ten-fold heavier. The subject of the Old Catholic movement was brought before Congress by the Bishop of Winchester, who read a paper, in the course of which he gave a brief account of the movement that he regarded as the most hopeful effort yet made toward the reuniting of Christendom. Alluding to the recent Conference at Bonn he testified to the general good feeling and the sober piety which pervaded the whole assembly. God grant, he said, that the gathering, small as it was, might prove the little cloud which should be the harbinger of showers of blessing and peace. If anything could stand between the two great armies of Ultramontanism and Atheistic Materialism, it was, he thought, some such body as the Old Catholic. Prof. Meyer followed with an account of the persecutions which the friends of the Old Catholic movement had had to suffer in Roman Catholic countries. The Bishop of Melbourne protested against some of the articles adopted at the late Conference, particularly that on tradition. Dr. Littledale replied, seeking to vindicate tradition. An evening meeting was devoted to home missions.

The Tree and Its Fruit.

The lesson which the great Teacher illustrates, by reference to the tree and its fruit, commends itself to the common sense of all. The fruit partakes of the nature of the tree. It is good or bad, according to the character of the tree that bears it. The application to governments and all human institutions is obvious. Systems of philosophy, and moral and religious organizations, social and business pursuits, pleasures, amusements, and the regulation of the appetites, are revealed by this simple process. That men are to do evil, that good may come, is a short-sighted view of the ultimate fruits. The immediate results may promise well, but the end is death. It is, however, more especially with reference to individual character and conduct that the Savior declares that the tree is known by its fruit, and that the necessity of a personal regeneration is insisted upon. "Either make the tree good, and his fruit good; or else make the tree corrupt, and his fruit corrupt; for the tree is known by his fruit." The attempt to make the fruit good, while the tree remains corrupt, is a reversal of the regenerating process which both Scripture and reason indicate. The main thing must ever be to strike at the root of evil, for by no other means can it be overcome.

Legislation may repress vice, and crime may be held in check by the prompt enforcement of penal statutes, but to cure the evil the people must be brought under the influences of education and religion. Our church legislation, aimed at intemperance and vicious recreations, if attended by a firm administration of discipline, may effect much in the repression of immoral and seductive practices, but it cannot be altogether successful. The things sought to be overcome grow from unregenerated roots, the trees which bear these fruits are corrupt, and they will continue to bring forth worldliness and vice until the source is reached by the gospel remedy. The exposure of the prevalent and popular vices of the day, through the press and the pulpit, are not without good. The religious conscience is kept alive, those who err through ignorance are instructed, and the testimony of a witnessing church is set forth. But this will prove largely ineffectual in itself. Unless we aim our blows at the rotten tree of human depravity, and seek to restore the heart to purity, not much will be done. The preaching of virtue and morality, and the exposure and denunciation of vice will be comparatively powerless, unless the fountain of all wickedness be uncovered, and the birth of the Spirit be proclaimed as the great essential. A prosperous State and a pure church are to be secured only by the conversion of the people. The tree must be made good. The mere pruning and training of its branches, and the superficial expedients of restraint and repression, are only of limited and temporary utility. If we would have good citizens and faithful rulers, we must make them Christian men. If we would have an exemplary and aggressive church, we must insist upon a converted membership.

A moral reformation not grounded in religious convictions and experience, a reform not connected with evangelical repentance and a change of heart, is likely to be partial and short-lived. Frugality and temperance, without chastity or benevolence, are very imperfect developments of virtue. Economy and justice, without the grace of God, may nurse avarice, and minister to an idolatry that dwarfs the soul, and separates it from God. Where the man is born again, and has become a new creature in Christ, there will be none of these imperfect and one-sided developments. The tree, made good, will have good fruit on every bough, and all will be brought to an equal and uniform perfection. To insure permanence in reform there must be the enduring root of a renewed nature. Victory over appetite, passion and temper needs the help of God, and without the aids of the Holy Spirit and of prayer it is for most, if not all, an impossibility. For those who would escape from the bondage and hell of appetite, and would break off the chains of long habitual indulgence, the prayer of the royal penitent indicates the true and only relief: "Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me."

Would parents have good children? Let them not hope for this boon if they ignore the conversion of their offspring. Their teaching, their example, their discipline should have this in view. They may be raised religiously, enjoy the privileges of the Sunday school, and be well instructed in the doctrines of salvation, but without conversion they cannot be good. To secure it should be their ceaseless study and prayer. Make the tree good, and the fruit will be good.

There are people who would fain be good themselves. They are busied with the problem of their own condition, and how they are to overcome their own perverse and untoward ways. The trouble is in the nature of the tree. They watch, resolve, punish themselves, and lament over their failures. Make the heart good, open it to the transforming power of the Spirit, let it receive the cleansing blood of the crucified Savior, and the struggle will be comparatively an easy one. Christ is mighty to save, and his might to save lies much in the fact that he begins the work in the center, in the strong citadel of the soul, where the carnal mind is entrenched, and where the fountain of bitter waters takes its rise. Paul went through this weary and despairing struggle. "For the good that I would, I do not; but the evil which I would not, that I do." There was another law in his members warring against the law of his mind. Alas, what wretchedness! What passionate and despairing questionings: "Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" The relief is in the new creation as sought and found in the Savior of sinners. The corrupt fruit will continue as long as the tree is corrupt. A new life must spring from a new birth. After all our battlings with inbred sin, and with unbelief and carnal appetites, the sinner must look to Jesus for deliverance. It is but a step from the agony of helpless conflict with the body of death to the joyous assurance and triumph: "I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord."

Magnificent Bequests.

Under this heading the Nashville Christian Advocate gives account of the following bequests. We know nothing of Mr. Calvin beyond what is contained in the announcement of his liberal devisings for some of our most important religious interests. He certainly made a wise election in the objects of his benefactions, and has made such disposal of his wealth as will bring forth fruit for generations to come. He was manifestly a friend to our Southern Methodism, and has left to our church a most substantial and generous token of his good will. Such instances of devotion to the cause of Christ are comparatively rare, and we hope the example of this good man may remind others of the best use to which their riches may be put. The faithful steward will give while he lives, according as God has prospered him, and he will be careful that what he leaves behind him shall contribute to the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom. Concerning Mr. Calvin and his bequests the Nashville says:

Mr. James T. Calvin, late of Hamburg, Iowa, who departed this life in August last, after providing for his wife, his brothers and sisters, and making handsome contributions to the American Bible and Tract Societies, and bequests to other interests, made the following bequests to A. H. Redford, agent of the Southern Methodist Publishing House, for the purposes herein specified:

Ten thousand dollars for the use and benefit of the Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Five thousand dollars for the use and benefit of the Sunday School Union of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of which the Rev. A. G. Haygood, D. D., is secretary.

Fifteen thousand dollars for the use and benefit of the Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, located in Nashville, Tennessee.

Ten thousand dollars for the use of the widows and orphans of traveling preachers who have died, or may die, in the itinerant work.

To this last bequest is to be added the residue of Mr. Calvin's estate (supposed to be about $15,000) after paying the several bequests.

The amount bequeathed to the widows and orphans is to be invested as a permanent fund, the interest only to be used.

Mrs. Phœbe Palmer.

This well-known and devoted Christian lady died in the city of New York on the second of November. We quote as follows from Bishop Janes' memorial address:

Mrs. Palmer was born in this city on December 18, 1807. Her parents were eminently pious. Such was the religious atmosphere of their home that a numerous family of children were all converted in their childhood. So early in life was the love of God shed abroad in her heart that occasionally it was a subject of perplexity to her because she could not so distinctly trace the hour of her conversion as many others could. When about eleven years old, however, she sought the witness of the Spirit at the altar, and when she did not experience the same strong emotions which some others showed, the cruel tempter whispered that it was because she was not converted, and she might as well give up the whole matter. "That I will never do," she answered; "no, never; I will seek as long as I live, and if I find mercy at last I will thank the Lord, and praise him forever." That moment Jesus revealed himself to her as he had never done before, and she went on her way rejoicing. In her twentieth year she was married to Dr. Walter C. Palmer, a most felicitous union of two congenial spirits.

The last entry in her diary was as follows: "On Thursday, the twenty-seventh of August, I was seized with an oppression for breath, which threatened the immediate separation of soul and body. During several days previous, and especially during the night season, respiration had been difficult, but the climax seemed to have come on Thursday morning, when for over an hour I seemed to be flickering between the two worlds. Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ, I felt that the sting of death was gone. Jesus was with me, and will be with me to the end. Hallelujah to God and the Lamb!"

Bishop Janes then recited some interesting details of her last sickness and death, quoting some of her expressions, all of which were indicative of her perfect trust in Jesus, and remarkable for their bright anticipations of the glory which was awaiting her on her entrance upon the other life. Her sufferings were very great. At one time she said: "I am in the valley without a shadow, trusting in Jesus, yet O so weary. I would so love to go; but thy will, not mine, be done." During the first part of her severe illness she said: "I want to say that my teachings have been correct, and I am now testing them in this hour of extreme suffering, and find that I am fully saved; not a shadow of a doubt. The altar is a beautiful type; it is not a far-fetched figure, and I am resting upon it, and the altar, which is Christ, sanctifies the gift. The blood of Jesus cleanses me from all unrighteousness. The word of the Lord is a sure foundation for faith; it is a solid rock. I am resting on the word." When some one said, "She hath done what she could," she replied: "Jesus knows I have done all things in sincerity, though I might have done many things more wisely. The Lord is a jealous God; he will not give his glory to another. Not anything that I have done, but by his blood he saves me. Nothing, nothing attributed to me. Sing praises! sing praises! Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly." Her mind was clear during most of her illness, and she dictated several letters to her friends, among them a beautiful note to Rev. W. H. Poole, of Toronto, containing a touching message to her friends in Canada. In reply to the kind inquiries of a friend who sent word that he was daily praying for her, she said: "Tell him I think much of his prayers, and that I have a perfect trust in a perfect Savior." Mrs. Palmer lingered for ten weeks, but at length the last day of her probationary life had dawned.

During the morning she awoke as from a sleep, and said: "I thought I saw a chariot, and it had come for me, and O it was so glorious, glorious!" Again she said: "Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" and then she slowly repeated the words: "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all. Amen." Her lips never moved again; the summons came unexpectedly at last; a convulsive quiver of the frame and the palpitating heart startled those assembled around her dying-bed; and in the arms of her devoted husband she sweetly breathed her last on Monday, November 2, at half-past two o'clock in the afternoon.

Fraternal Address

OF GENERAL CONFERENCE OF THE METHODIST CHURCH OF CANADA.

To the Bishops, Ministers and Members of the M. E. Church South, of the United States of America:

HONORED FATHERS AND BRETHREN—"Grace be unto you, and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ." Though we have been for many years acquainted with your "work of faith and labor of love," yet up to the present hour no formal correspondence nor intercourse has taken place between Canadian Methodism and that large branch of the great Methodist brotherhood of which you are the recognized overseers.

Several circumstances appear to us to indicate that the present is a propitious time to send you our first fraternal Christian greetings. Important changes have recently taken place in our own organization as a church. We have felt for some years a desire, by the expression of our interest in the work you are doing for the Master, to strengthen those ties of Christian affection that should bind in unity of spirit all the different members of the family of God, who hold the "one Lord, one faith, one baptism."

An agreeable visit from the venerable Dr. T. B. Sargent, of your church, during the present meeting of our General Conference, has materially conduced to give this desire a practical expression. We have heard with sincere satisfaction his statements concerning the growth and extension of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and the successes which have attended your labors throughout the vast field that has been assigned to you by the Head of the church as the sphere of your operations. It is specially gratifying to us to know that so soon after the disastrous civil war, which must have been sadly inimical to every religious interest, Southern Methodism has regained its wonted vigor, and is so successfully prosecuting its work in every department of Christian enterprise.

Dr. Sargent did not come among us as a stranger. Many of us cherished kindly remembrances of a former visit, fourteen years ago, which secured for him, on the present occasion, a cordial welcome to our homes and hearts. His kindly Christian spirit, his words of tender, godly counsel, and his impressive and scriptural pulpit ministrations have left with us pleasant memories that shall not soon be effaced. We rejoice to inform you that probably in no part of the world has our beloved Methodism won more signal victories for Christ than in the Dominion of Canada. Our pioneer preachers in the new settlements of this country, amid toil and danger, scattered precious seeds of truth that have yielded rich harvests of golden grain.

In our missions to the Indians we have witnessed many glorious evidences of the power and sufficiency of the old gospel of life and love to transform the rude and barbarous tribes of the wilderness into the "sons and daughters of the Lord almighty," while in all the chief centers of population we occupy a front rank in the work of supplying the religious wants of the people. Our educational institutions are rendering noble service in preparing the youth of our country for an efficient discharge of life's great duties, and, by the dissemination of a sound religious literature, we are successfully combating the heresy and skepticism that are so fiercely and extensively assailing the faith of the children of God.
